Foreword

by W. T. H. JACKSON

When Bayard Dodge told me that some years ago the Records of Civilization had asked him to translate Al-Fihrist of al-Nadīm I was immediately enthusiastic. Here, surely, was a work which fitted the purpose of the series as few others could do, for it provided a link of a unique kind between several civilizations. In this tenth-century work is a compendium of the knowledge possessed by a learned Arab of Baghdād, knowledge in great part derived from earlier cultures, particularly Hellenic and Roman. Not only is the work extremely valuable for a knowledge of the culture of medieval Islam and of the literary personalities of the period but it gives important information about the classical material available for transmission through Muslim culture to the Western world. Al-Fihrist is thus a true "record of civilization."

To provide a translation of a work such as this requires not only a scholar but an enthusiast. Bayard Dodge is both. He has provided us with an excellent translation, but before doing so he had to set up a text to be translated, since earlier editions had taken no account of manuscripts which are now available. In this work, which has occupied many years of his life, Professor Dodge has earned the gratitude of scholars in many fields of endeavor, for he has made available to them knowledge which has heretofore been confined to the very few who could read Arabic and had access to a rare work.

Preface

In 1871 Gustav Flügel accomplished a masterly piece of work by publishing the Arabic text of Kitāb al-Fihrist, but unfortunately he lacked reliable copies of the principal manuscripts. I am, therefore, very grateful to the authorities of the Chester Beatty Library in Dublin, as well as to friends at Robert College, Istanbul, and to Muḥammad Rashād 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib of the League of Arab States for helping me to examine and to obtain photostat copies of the most important manuscripts of the book.

Because Al-Fihrist deals with almost every phase of medieval culture, it would require a staff of experts to do justice to the translation. However, with the help of generous friends I have done my best to make the work as accurate as possible.

I am grateful to Constantine K. Zurayk, Jibrail M. Jabbur, Anis K. Frayha, and other members of the faculty of the American University of Beirut for their aid. I also wish to thank Philip K. Hitti, Farhat J. Ziadeh, and Samuel D. Atkins of Princeton University for helping me to understand some difficult passages. Elias Shoufani corrected the translation of a number of poems, as well as the transliteration in some of the especially difficult sections of the book.

Johann W. Fück very kindly sent me publications and notes, and Edward S. Kennedy and David Pingree helped me with the passages on mathematics and astronomy. Harald Ingholt of Yale University joined me in studying the Ṣābiāns. Mustafa Ziade of Cairo University and Mojtaba Minovi of Tihiran have also been generous in giving me their help. I am also grateful to Reza Tajaded of Tihiran and Mahdi Nakosteen of the University of Colorado for sending me their books, which provide valuable material for an understanding of the Arabic text of Al-Fihrist. Thanks are due, furthermore, to A. F. P. Hulsewé of Leiden, Louis Hambis of the Institut des Hautes Études Chinoise de l'Université de Paris, Herbert Franke of Munich, and E. H. Schafer of the University of California for suggestions about the passage on China.

This difficult and complicated book has been copyedited by Linnae Coss. She not only prepared every detail for the typesetter but she also discovered numerous errors, simplified the footnotes, corrected the Bibliography, and helped to give consistency to the translation of the book titles. I am most grateful for her perseverance, skill, and encouragement.

Because Al-Fihrist is a reference book, I have made the translation a literal one, seeking accuracy rather than literary style. I have also provided a number of aids for study, which are explained in the Introduction that follows this Preface.

The book is a unique specimen of literature, coming to us from medieval Baghdād. We know very little about the author and the sources from which he derived his vast amount of information. But all honor is due al-Nadīm, who compiled this encyclopedic volume, for as the Prophet Muḥammad said, "The ink of the learned is as precious as the blood of the martyrs."

Introduction

THE SYSTEM OF TRANSLITERATION FROM ARABIC INTO ENGLISH

The system used is the one described in Bulletin 49, November 1958, issued by the Cataloging Service of the Library of Congress.

alif (see note below)

bā' — b	zā' — z	fā' — f
tā' — t	sīn — s	qāf — q
thā' — th	shīn — sh	kāf — k
jīm — j	ṣād — ṣ	lām — l
hā' — h	ḍād — ḍ	mīm — m
khā' — kh	ṭā' — ṭ	nūn — n
dāl — d	ẓā' — ẓ	hā' — h
dhāl — dh	‘ayn — ‘	wāw — w
rā' — r	ghayn — gh	yā' — y

As a rule alif is transliterated according to the vowel which governs it. But alif with a maddah or a maqṣūrah is a form transliterated as ā.

VOWELS AND DIPHTHONGS

	short	long
fathah	a	ā
kasrah	i	ī
ḍammah	u	ū

Shaddah is indicated by a doubling of the consonant, but a double yā' after kasrah is written as in kullīyah. The definite article is not written with a capital, except at the beginning of a sentence. The nisbah is written ī. Final hā' is written with h, rather than t, except when it is in construct state or in a few words like ṣalāt, zakāt, and Ghulāt.

In the Arabic text the titles of an author's books are listed after the account of his life. In the translation each list is as a rule preceded by the phrase "among his books there were." Moreover, before each book title the Arabic version has kitāb (book). This word is usually omitted in the English translation.

Words in brackets are explanatory material, added to clarify the meaning of the original text. Parentheses are used for equivalents of Arabic and English words, as well as for alternative translations and interpretations. There are few paragraph divisions and no quotation marks in the Arabic text.

There are two devices to indicate gaps in the text. When a word or a phrase has been purposely omitted by al-Nadīm, who hoped to be able to fill the space at a later time, a long dash is used. When a word or a phrase is omitted because the original copy is garbled or missing, an ellipsis is inserted to indicate missing material.

THE BIBLIOGRAPHY

The bibliography follows the main text of the book. It is strictly limited in size, with only a selected number of books mentioned. The authors are listed alphabetically, with the titles of their books placed after their names. All references in the footnotes, Glossary, and Biographical Index are to the names of these authors. When the titles of more than one book are given after the name of an author, the reference indicates which one of these books is involved. The size of the Bibliography has been limited by omitting most of the recently published editions of the medieval books mentioned in the text of Al-Fihrist.

THE GLOSSARY

Coming immediately after the Bibliography is the Glossary. It should be studied in connection with the religious sects and for an understanding of numerous technical terms. It also explains the significance of many of the book titles.

THE BIOGRAPHICAL INDEX

The names of men and women mentioned in Al-Fihrist are included in the Biographical Index, which comes directly after the Glossary. It is in the form of a Who's Who. In the main text of the book the part of the man's name by which he is listed in the Biographical Index is printed in italics, unless the name is repeated in the same passage. Names which are garbled in the manuscripts or belong to unimportant characters of fiction are omitted.

It may seem strange to list Greek and Latin scholars with the Arab ones, but they belonged to the Muslim culture of medieval times, just as truly as they do to the scholarship of our modern world.

References will be found in the Biographical Index to throw light on the names of the persons included. The Encyclopaedia of Islam and standard works on history, literature, and biography give further information about the men and women mentioned in Al-Fihrist.

THE GENERAL INDEX

The General Index is placed at the end of the book, after the Biographical Index. It includes numerous topics and technical terms, as well as the names of tribes and geographical localities.

LIFE OF THE AUTHOR

The author of Al-Fihrist was Abū al-Faraj Muḥammad ibn Ishāq ibn Muḥammad ibn Ishāq, but as a rule he is called al-Nadīm because he had the distinction of being a nadīm or court companion. As the surname of his father was Abū Ya'qūb, he evidently had an elder brother named Ya'qūb and probably had other brothers and sisters as well.

The year of his birth is unknown, but it cannot have been much after A.D. 935 and more likely was somewhat earlier. In Chapter VI, section 8, the author tells about meeting a scholar named Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Bardha'i,¹ who explained the doctrine of the Mu'tazilah and gave him a list of his legal books. If al-Nadīm, the author of Al-Fihrist, was mature enough to be interested in the doctrine of an unorthodox sect and books about the law, he must have been at least sixteen years of age, or probably a number of years older. Because this meeting occurred during the year 340 (A.D.

951/952), it is evident that al-Nadīm's birth was about 935. He was, therefore, almost certainly born during the reign of al-Muqtadir, 908–932, or of al-Qāhir, 932–934, or, less likely, of al-Rādi, 934–940.

The author's father was called a warrāq, which in his case evidently meant that he was a book dealer. As he seems to have been prosperous, it is likely that he presided over a large bookstore, which was almost certainly at Baghdād. It is easy to imagine how he commissioned his sons to buy manuscripts from other dealers and had his own scribes make copies of manuscripts for his customers.

A medieval manuscript was about the size of a modern book, but it was written by hand instead of being printed. The leaves were made of a paper of good quality, with writing on both sides. As a rule these pages were bound in a leather cover. The bookshop, like the old shops in al-Najaf, was probably on an upper story, where it formed a meeting place for scholars who came to examine the books, enjoy refreshments, and discuss academic problems.

Most authorities have taken it for granted that the father, as well as the son, was a nadīm, or court companion. Ibn Ḥajar² refers to the author as Muḥammad ibn Ishāq ibn al-Nadīm. Ibn Abī Uṣaybi'ah mentions the author thirteen times.³ On pages 57, 175, 207, 208, 209, 220, 244, and 309 he calls him Ibn al-Nadīm, but on other pages he refers to him as al-Nadīm. Yāqūt calls him Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Nadīm.⁴

The main title of the authoritative Beatty manuscript is Kitāb al-Fihrist li-al-Nadīm. In the heading of Chapter II of this manuscript there is a curious clause, which also appears in the headings of the last three chapters of MS 1934. Following the words "The composition of Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Nadīm" there is this clause, "Ishāq being known as Abū Ya'qūb al-Warrāq."

One wonders if the author of Al-Fihrist added this ungrammatical phrase in order to make it clear that whereas he himself was a nadīm, or court companion, his father was merely a warrāq, or book dealer. What seems to be certain is that both the father and the son were men of considerable importance and social standing.

When he was about six years old the author undoubtedly attended an elementary class attached to a mosque. One can visualize the little boy sitting on the ground in a group of other children, swaying back and forth as he repeated the verses of the Qur'ān, which his teacher recited to be memorized. The child also must have learned how to write the verses on his board, erasing each verse when he learned how to copy it, in order to make the board clean for a new quotation. By the time he was ten years old he had probably memorized the entire Qur'ān, so as to be prepared for study of a more mature nature.

It is reasonable to believe that al-Nadīm joined a study circle in some important mosque to learn the intricacies of Arabic grammar and rhetoric as well as something about Qur'ānic commentary, the Ḥadīth or traditions of the Prophet, and rules for reciting the Qur'ān in an authorized way. Before long he undoubtedly worked as an apprentice in his father's book shop, copying manuscripts, entertaining scholars, and helping to sell what they wanted to buy. Yāqūt endorsed this idea when he wrote: "It is not unreasonable that he was a warrāq who sold books."⁵

Al-Nadīm, however, was so much interested in his studies that he did not spend all of his time in the book store. An inscription on the title page of the Beatty MS records that he quoted, or was a pupil of, Abū Sa'īd al-Sirāfi the jurist, Abū al-Faraj al-Iṣbahānī the famous compiler of poetry and literary anecdotes, and Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Marzubānī, who was interested in history. Ibn Ḥajar⁶ says that al-Nadīm had permission to quote Isma'il al-Ṣaffār, who was an authority for the Ḥadīth, and Ibrāhīm al-Abyārī points out that he also studied with al-Ḥasan ibn Sawwār, a logician who translated scientific books;⁷ Abū Aḥmad, who was perhaps al-Ḥusayn ibn Ishāq ibn Karnīb the theologian and natural scientist; Yūnus al-Qass, who translated classic works on mathematics, and Abū al-Ḥasan Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf al-Nāqī, a scholar interested in Greek science.

Ibn Abī Uṣaybi'ah remarks that al-Nadīm was a kātib,⁸ which may mean that he was simply a writer. On the other hand it may imply that he was a government secretary, perhaps in the library or in the bureau for correspondence. Because al-Nadīm was surnamed Abū al-Faraj he must have been married, with at least one son and a home of his own in Baghdād.

Ibn Hajar says that al-Nadīm was a Shī'ite,⁹ which statement is confirmed by the text of Al-Fihrist. In Chapter VI the author speaks of the Shī'ah as al-khaṣṣī or elite, while he refers to persons who were not Shī'ites as al-'ammī or ignorant. In Al-Fihrist, moreover, the Sunnites are referred to as al-hashwīyah, which is a contemptuous term for persons who blindly accept anthropomorphic ideas.¹⁰

When speaking about the father of al-Zubayrī Mus'ab ibn 'Abd Allāh, al-Nadīm says that he was one of the most wicked of men, because he maligned the descendants of 'Alī.¹¹

In the same passage in which Ibn Hajar calls al-Nadīm a Shī'ite he also states that he was a Mu'tazilī. Even if he was not an official member of this heretical sect, al-Nadīm must have been very much interested in it, because such a large part of the fifth chapter of Al-Fihrist is devoted to it.

Because he met an Ismā'īlī leader and attended an Ismā'īlī meeting,¹² some people have claimed that al-Nadīm was one of the Ismā'īliyah, but this idea does not seem to be a true one.

Al-Nadīm mentions that he wrote one other book in addition to Al-Fihrist. In speaking about the excellencies of books he says, "I have dealt with this subject and similar ones in the chapter on writing and its instruments in a book which I have composed about descriptions and comparisons (al-awsāf wa-al-tashbihāt)."¹³ Evidently al-Nadīm was so much interested in books and government work that he did not attempt to become a teacher. The inscription on the title page of the Beatty MS says that no one quoted him, which implies that he did not have students.

It is probable that while he was still a young man al-Nadīm began to make a catalogue of authors and the names of their compositions for use in his father's bookstore. At the beginning of Chapter IV, section 2, he explains that, as other scholars have given details about the poets, what he himself aims to do is "to present the names of the poets and the amount of verses written by each poet among them . . . so that whoever desires to collect books and poems can have this information."

It is reasonable to believe that al-Nadīm wrote notes about each author on a piece of paper. When dealing with a man who was a scholar rather than a poet he tried to give some biographical material, as well as the titles of the author's books. When speaking about the books of the Zaydiyyah¹⁴ he says, "If some observer sees one of them while we are writing, I will add it in its proper place." In the course of time the notes must have been arranged according to subjects and in chronological sequence. Then, when enough of them had been collected, the author undertook to compile them in the form of chapters for his book.

As he grew older, al-Nadīm evidently became interested in so many subjects about which he read in books, or which he learned about from friends and chance acquaintances, that he included a great deal of additional material with his notes about the poets and scholars. Thus, instead of being merely the catalogue for a bookshop, Al-Fihrist became an encyclopaedia of medieval Islāmic culture.

We do not know to what extent al-Nadīm searched for information in places other than Baghdād. He very likely visited al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah, as scholarship flourished in those cities during the eighth century. He may have gone to Aleppo, where Sayf al-Dawlah, during the middle of the tenth century, created a center of literature and culture. It is not very likely that he visited Damascus or the famous cities of Persia and Khurāsān. What is certain, however, is that he spent some time at al-Mawṣil, probably when Nāṣir al-Dawlah was ruler of the region, between A.D. 929 and 968.

Al-Fihrist mentions that he met a book collector there. He also saw the tutor of the sons of Nāṣir al-Dawlah¹⁵ and a man named Muḥammad ibn Hāshim, who was brought up in the environs of al-Mawṣil.¹⁶ He evidently visited the libraries of al-Mawṣil, as he found a fragment of one of Euclid's books in a private collection.¹⁷ Apparently in addition to searching for books, he learned what he could about religious sects. He associated with an Ismā'īlī leader and attended an Ismā'īlī meeting, which may have inspired him to include his long passage about the Ismā'īlīyah in Al-Fihrist.¹⁸ It is obvious that al-Nadīm was at al-Mawṣil before he completed his chapter about the poets, because he says that he saw a certain amount of poetry there.¹⁹ Sarton states that al-Nadīm went to Istanbūl, taking it for granted that Dār al-Rūm referred to the Byzantine city of Constantinople. But this is an error, as Dār al-Rūm really refers to the Greek Orthodox section of Baghdād.²⁰

Nāṣir al-Dawlah, the ruler of al-Mawṣil, was a Shī'ite who was anxious to make his city a center of culture and learning. As al-Nadīm was also a Shī'ite, it is possible that his service as a court companion was at al-Mawṣil. It is much more likely, however, that he went to al-Mawṣil to obtain books and that his life as a court companion was spent at Baghdād. What seems probable is that al-Nadīm became attached to the court at the time of Mu'izz al-Dawlah, who, with the title of Amīr al-Umarā', overshadowed the puppet caliph and ruled at Baghdād from A.D. 945 to 967. He was a member of the Buwayh family and a sympathizer with the Shī'ites, so that it would have been natural for him to make a Shī'ite like al-Nadīm a member of his court, perhaps connected with the royal library. If al-Nadīm was a court companion in the palace of Mu'izz al-Dawlah, it is likely that he also served 'Izz al-Dawlah, the weak son and successor of Mu'izz al-Dawlah, until this son died in A.D. 977. Unfortunately we can only guess about these events in the life of al-Nadīm, as we do not have accurate information about his biography.

It cannot have been very long after the death of 'Izz al-Dawlah that al-Nadīm undertook the laborious task of arranging his mass of notes and compiling them in the form of a book. Near the end of Chapter I²¹ of Al-Fihrist, the author records: "This is the end of what we have composed of the first chapter of the book Al-Fihrist, until the time of the appearance of the new moon on Saturday of Sha'bān during the year three hundred and seventy-seven." This was probably December, 987.

Yāqūt cites this same year for the writing of Al-Fihrist.²² Near the end of Chapter II²³ al-Nadīm gives this date also for completion of the account of the scholars of grammar and language. Two other statements can be mentioned to confirm the accuracy of this date. In speaking about Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Naṣr, the author of Al-Fihrist says, "who died a few months ago." Ibn Taghrī-Birdī gives the year three hundred and seventy-six (A.D. 986/987) as the time of this man's death.²⁴ Then at the end of Chapter VI there is the statement in Al-Fihrist, "until our time, which is the year three hundred and seventy-seven."²⁵

It is possible that al-Nadīm did not complete the last chapters of his book until a year or two later. In Chapter IX he tells the story of a Christian monk who returned from China. As this monk did not reach Baghdād before the year three hundred and seventy-seven (A.D. 987/988), it is possible that Chapter IX was not written in its final form before A.D. 988 or 989.²⁶ It seems to be certain that Al-Fihrist was completed by the year A.D. 990 at the latest, probably twelve or eighteen months before that time. This was just at the time when higher education was being established at the al-Jāmi' al-Azhar in Cairo and a little less than a century before the First Crusade. Hugh Capet was King of France, and Aethelred the Second was ruling in England.

Ibn Hajar says that a certain Abū Ṭāhir al-Karkhī gave the date for al-Nadīm's death as the year four hundred and thirty-eight (A.D. 1047), but he said of this statement, "he was not reliable about this." Ibn Hajar also quotes other assertions which seem to be equally unreliable.²⁷

²³ Chap. II, section 3, near n. 87.

²⁶ Chap. IX, section 2, n. 39.

²⁷ Hajar, Lisān al-Mizān, Part 5, p. 72. Although the date A.D. 1047 seems to be inaccurate, numerous authorities have given it as the year of al-Nadīm's death. The

It seems inevitable that if al-Nadīm had lived until A.D. 1047 he would have added to Al-Fihrist some of the great names of the eleventh century, such as Ibn Sīnā and al-Bīrūnī, as well as something about the famous Ikhwān al-Ṣafā'. Furthermore, al-Nadīm left blank spaces in his manuscript, to be filled in as he could obtain further information. Evidently he died before he was able to include new data in these blank spaces.

Accordingly, the note on the title page of the Beatty manuscript is probably correct. It says of al-Nadīm that "he died on Wednesday, the tenth [day] from the end of Sha'bān in the year three hundred and eighty (A.D. 990/991)."²⁸ As this note was almost certainly written by the great historian al-Maqrīzī, it has real importance and seems to be reliable.²⁹

It is reasonable to believe that when al-Nadīm died the original copy of his manuscript was placed in the royal library at Baghdad, while other copies made by scribes about the time of his death were assigned to his family bookstore, where some of them were probably sold to customers who came to purchase interesting books. Farmer says: "Yāqūt (d. 626/1229) averred that he used a copy of the Fihrist in the handwriting of al-Nadīm himself. The lexicographer al-Ṣaghānī (650/1252) made a similar claim. Either of these autograph copies may have been in the Caliph's library, which was destroyed utterly at the sacking of Baghdad in 656/1258)."³⁰

Beatty MS has been made available so recently that these authorities have obviously never had a chance to study it. As many of the persons mentioned in this paragraph and those which follow lived after Al-Fihrist was written, their names are not included in the Biographical Index, although some of them are mentioned in the Bibliography.

³⁰ Farmer, Annual of Leeds University Oriental Society, II (1959-1961), 47.

Ibn al-Qiftī and Ibn Abī Uṣaybi'ah depended upon Al-Fihrist for information. Khalīl ibn Aḃbak and other authorities also alluded to al-Nadīm, who in medieval times seems to have been highly regarded.

In order to sum up what has been said, it is reasonable to assume that al-Nadīm was born about A.D. 935, very likely a few years earlier. He profited by an unusually comprehensive education, as he not only mastered the conventional Islāmic studies but also learned something about history, geography, comparative religion, and the Greek sciences. He undoubtedly served as an apprentice in his father's book business, at the same time that he attended the lectures and classes of some of the leading scholars of the tenth century.

When grown, al-Nadīm married and had at least one son. About the time that he married it is likely that he started to help his father by collecting data about books and their authors. Evidently he wished to assemble a catalogue to show customers and to help with the procuring and copying of manuscripts to be sold to scholars and book collectors.

Although he visited al-Mawṣil and perhaps other cities, most of his research was almost certainly done at Baghdad, where he may have been one of the directors of the great government library. His position of court companion was probably, but not certainly, during the reigns of Mu'izz al-Dawlah and his son.

Perhaps because his work at the library and the court came to an end, or else because of some illness which threatened him, al-Nadīm decided that it was time to collect his notes, so as to compile them in book form. Accordingly, during the years 987 and 988 he completed his difficult task so as to form the book Al-Fihrist. He evidently hoped to live for a number of years longer in order to fill in blank spaces in his manuscript, but this hope was not realized. During the autumn of 990 his life came to an end.

THE MANUSCRIPTS: SOURCES

FOR THE TRANSLATION

When Gustav Flügel published his Arabic edition of Al-Fihrist in 1871 he included a vorwort in German, in which he described the manuscripts available for his use.³¹ The principal manuscripts upon which Flügel based his text were: (i) the old Paris manuscript, containing four chapters; (ii) the copy of a manuscript in Istanbul, which de Slane had transcribed, by a scribe named Aḥmad al-Miṣrī for use in Paris; (iii) two copies in Vienna; (iv) several fragments in Leyden. Flügel realized that his manuscripts were incomplete, and it is true that he lacked part of the material about the Mu'tazilah sects, given in Chapter V, section 1, of the translation, as well as source material for other less important passages. As Flügel has described the manuscripts which he used in detail, it does not seem to be worth while to repeat what he wrote in his vorwort.

The principal manuscripts available for use at the present time are the following.

The Beatty Manuscript. This manuscript is No. 3315 in the Chester Beatty Library in Dublin. It comprises the first half of the book, ending with an account of al-Nāshī al-Kabīr in Chapter V, section 1. There are 119 folios, with writing on both front and back of each leaf. As several pages are left blank, there are 234 pages of text, each measuring 22 by 16.5 cm and averaging twenty-five lines to the page. The handwriting is in the form of an old naskh script, clear, well marked, and transcribed with a good quality of black ink. The titles are also written in black, in a similar script but in large letters. The paper is fairly thick, smooth, and of a dark cream color. As the Chester Beatty Library has had the pages bound in leather and carefully repaired by a skilful technician, the manuscript does not appear to be as old as it really is. It contains the material about the Mu'tazilah omitted by Flügel, but even in this excellent manuscript certain pages are lacking.³²

The main heading of the Beatty Manuscript is Kitāb al-Fihrist li-al-Nadīm. It is in an oblong design with white letters and a gold background somewhat decorated. Alongside this oblong space there are two lines of notes, written in a small script. The upper line is not clear enough to be read accurately. The lower line has, "Aḥmad ibn

'Alī al-Maqrīzī 824.'³³ This evidently means that the manuscript became the possession of the famous historian Aḥmad ibn 'Alī al-Maqrīzī.³⁴

Somewhat below the main heading there are two other notes in small script. One of them reads "from the books of Aḥmad ibn 'Alī"; the other, "at Damascus 825." It is known that al-Maqrīzī went to Damascus about 810 (A.D. 1407/1408) to serve in government posts and returned to Cairo some ten years later. He may have written these notes at Cairo or perhaps on some occasion when he returned to Damascus for a visit.

There is also written on the title page, going from the bottom to the top and in the right-hand margin, a longer inscription, which was probably written by al-Maqrīzī. This inscription has been translated as follows:

The author of this book was Abū al-Faraj Muḥammad ibn Abī Ya'qūb Ishāq ibn Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Warrāq known as al-Nadīm. He quoted Abū Sa'īd al-Sirāfī, Abū al-Faraj al-Iṣbahānī, Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Marzubānī and others, but nobody quoted him. He died on Wednesday, the tenth (day) from the end of Sha'bān, in the year three hundred and eighty (A.D. 990). He was suspected of being a Shī'ī, may Allāh forgive him.³⁵

There are certain other notes on the title page, but they are evidently not in the handwriting of al-Maqrīzī and are illegible.

Below the main heading on the title page and in large handwriting, written over a small inscription of al-Maqrīzī, there is the following statement, which designates the manuscript as a mortmain, established by Aḥmad Pāshā al-Jazzār, who died in A.D. 1804.

A Waqf of Allāh Almighty

Al-Ḥājī Aḥmad Pāshā al-Jazzār has made this book a waqf, pious foundation and trust in the Mosque of al-Mubārak at 'Akkā, the praiseworthy, ³³ For al-Maqrīzī, see n. 29.

³⁵ For the significance of this passage, see the preceding statement about the life of al-Nadīm.

the Aḥmadiyah, for the seeking of learning He establishes it as a true and legal waqf, so that it will not be removed, sold or exchanged . . . upon Allāh, for Allāh is the hearing and knowing.

This inscription was deciphered with the help of a scholar from 'Akkā, but even he could not translate accurately the two places which have been left blank.

On the title page of each chapter other than the first there is written under the heading and close to the left hand margin, hikāyat khaṭṭ al-muṣannif, which means "an imitation of the handwriting of the author." Under this inscription there is a copy of the signature of the author, "His (God's) servant, Muḥammad ibn Ishāq."³⁶

Beginning with the back of folio 9 and at the end of every tenth folio which follows, there is written on the lower margin, 'urīḍ (compared). This means that the copy was compared with the original manuscript at the end of each lot of paper. For some reason the same word appears at the end of folio 8 and also at the termination of Chapter IX. At the bottom of folio 69 the inscription is extended to read: "Compared with the original of the author, transcribed from it and confirmed, thanks be to Allāh, Lord of the Knowing." At the end of folio 99, there is a similar inscription with the following variation: "Compared with the original, which is in the handwriting of the author, transcribed from it and confirmed."

Arabic scholars have explained that when a medieval scribe copied a manuscript he reproduced not only the words but also the handwriting of the author and the arrangement of the page. These inscriptions in the Beatty Manuscript were evidently made by a scribe who transcribed the book from the original copy, which was written by al-Nadīm himself in his own handwriting. It is not certain, but not unlikely, that the Beatty Manuscript was transcribed before al-Nadīm died, under his personal supervision. As he was a court companion, probably connected with the royal library, he very naturally may have deposited the original copy of Al-Fihrist in that institution. At the same time, he almost certainly would have had copies made for the family bookstore, so that they could be used as catalogues and sold to customers. Thus it is reasonable to guess that the Beatty Manuscript was transcribed during the final months of the life of al-Nadīm or soon afterwards. The manuscript, for instance, lacks the statement that al-Ṣābī “died before the year three hundred and eighty (A.D. 990),” although this item of information is in the Flügel edition.³⁷

If the original manuscript, written in al-Nadīm’s own handwriting, was placed in the royal library at Baghdād, it undoubtedly was destroyed when the Mongols sacked the city in A.D. 1258. The Beatty Manuscript, on the other hand, was evidently a copy, which was probably sold to some customer and taken to Damascus, where it escaped the destruction of Baghdād and during the year A.D. 825 became the possession of the historian al-Maqrīzī.

We know nothing about the history of the manuscript until it was placed in the library of the great mosque at ‘Akkā, when the notorious Aḥmad Pasha al-Jazzār was ruling there at the time of Napoleon Bonaparte. After the fall of Aḥmad Pasha, the manuscript was evidently stolen from the mosque. It was probably at this time that it became divided, as the Beatty Manuscript includes only the first half of Al-Fihrist. In the course of time the dealer Yahudah sold this first half to Sir Chester Beatty, who placed it in his library at Dublin.³⁸

Manuscript 1934. This manuscript comprises the last half of Al-Fihrist. It begins with an account of al-Wāsiṭī in Chapter V, section 2, and continues to the inscription, which indicates the completion of the book. An Arabic number is on top of each page, and a modern number has also been stamped for each of the one hundred and eighty-eight folios. As there are some empty pages, only three hundred and sixty-two of them contain writing. There is no proper title page. The first page contains only an Ottoman seal, a recent rendering of the name of the book and its author, with some notes which are too indistinct to be deciphered accurately.

TITLE PAGE OF MS 1934

This manuscript is identical with the Beatty Manuscript in almost every detail. The handwriting is the same, the pages are the same size, and similar inscriptions are introduced to show that the copy has been checked with the original. The same ungrammatical form appears in Chapter II of the Beatty Manuscript and Chapters VIII, IX, and X of Manuscript 1934. This is the phrase already mentioned, "Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Nadīm, Ishāq known as Abū Ya'qūb al-Warrāq."

Many scholars think that this manuscript is the other half of the Beatty Manuscript, but Professor Mojtaba Minovi of Tihiran, who saw the Beatty Manuscript before it was repaired, considers that copy to be much older than Manuscript 1934.

Manuscript 1934 forms part of the Shadid 'Alī Pasha collection, which is now cared for in the library adjacent to the Sulaymāniyah Mosque at Istanbul. In the library catalogue it is described as "Suleymaniye G. Kütüphanesi kısmi Shetit Ali Pasha 1934."

The Beatty Manuscript, which comprises the first half of Al-Fihrist, and Manuscript 1934, which contains the last half, are the two most authoritative and important sources for a knowledge of the book.

Manuscript 1135. This manuscript contains Chapter I, section 1, of Al-Fihrist, as well as the last four chapters of the book. Both the table of contents and the numbering of the chapters are incorrect. Chapter I, section 1, and Chapter VII are grouped together as the first part of the book, and the last three chapters are designated II, III, and IV, instead of eight, nine, and ten.

There are a hundred and eighteen folios, written on the front and back, with modern numbers stamped on them. There are no empty spaces to be filled in, as is the case with the other manuscripts. Each page is 25.5 by 18.5 cm in size. The handwriting is well formed, similar to the naskh script of the manuscripts already mentioned. As this copy is incomplete, it was evidently transcribed from parts of some older version. It contains some book titles omitted in the earlier sources.

This manuscript is located in the Köprülü Library at Istanbul, where it is catalogued as No. 1135. A date is ascribed to it, which is given as "Rabī' al-Thānī 600." This is equivalent to the fourth month of A.D. 1203/1204. Stamped on the manuscript are numerous seals of the Ottoman period, the principal one containing the name Kubrili. The title page bears the heading given at the beginning of Chapter I in the translation. It is written in black ink, whereas the subtitles and names of authors are in red.

Manuscript 1134. This manuscript is in the Köprülü Library at Istanbul, catalogued as No. 1134. It is written on good paper, each page measuring 20.3 by 15 cm, and is divided into two separate parts. The first might easily be a copy of Chapter I, section 1, as given in Manuscript 1135. The second part contains what is probably most of Manuscript 1934. This version does not seem to be as old and authentic as the other copies.

The Tonk Manuscript. This transcription of a portion of Al-Fihrist is in the Sa'idiyah Library at Tonk, where it originally belonged to the Nabob of the region. Tonk is a city of Rajastān, a hundred and twenty-five miles southwest of Agra. The manuscript contains forty-four folios, with writing on the front and back of each page. At the beginning there is a page which is empty except for some blurred seals and a title, written in small letters: "Fihrist of Accounts of the Scholars and the Names of Their Compositions," followed by the name of al-Nadīm partially blotted out.

After a pious phrase this copy starts with a poem in Chapter III. It ends with a short passage about an unimportant author named Plutarch in Chapter VII.³⁹ There is a postscript which reads:

The second section of the Book Al-Fihrist has ended, with the help of Allāh Almighty and his kindness. If Allāh Almighty so wills, there will follow it in the third section an account of Yahyā al-Nahwī. It has been transcribed by Ḥunayn ibn 'Abd Allāh, the nephew of Yahyā al-Jawharī, thanks be to the Lord of the Knowing.

The numbering of the sections does not correspond with that of the other manuscripts, but in all of the versions an account of Yahyā al-Nahwī comes directly after the point where the Tonk manuscript ends. The name mentioned at the end of the postscript is evidently that of the copyist. This manuscript is so well described in an article written by Johann Fück⁴⁰ that it is necessary to mention only a few facts in this introduction.

The manuscript lacks a segment of material from Chapter IV and Chapter V.⁴¹ The point in Chapter V, section 1, where the manuscript recommences corresponds to folio 10, at the top of the reverse side. Between that point and the beginning of manuscript 1934⁴² the Tonk Manuscript contains material lacking in the other versions. It is because of this additional material that this transcription is valuable.

The Tonk Manuscript, moreover, gives the list of book titles of Ibn al-Mu'allim.⁴³ This list is lacking in the Flügel edition at the bottom of page 197, as well as in the other manuscripts and in the compilation of al-Ṭūsī.⁴⁴ For other material which is unique in the Tonk Manuscript, see Chapter V, section 5, notes 145, 188, and 189. Note 198 indicates that al-Ṭūsī drew upon sources similar to those used by the scribe of the Tonk Manuscript. Ibn Ḥajar⁴⁵ also quotes items which he evidently found in the part of Al-Fihrist unique to the Tonk Manuscript. Except for this additional material, this manuscript is not as valuable as the others, as the handwriting is not always clear and there are many clerical errors.

Manuscript 4457. This is in La Bibliothèque nationale in Paris, Fonds Arabe, 1953 catalogue, page 342 (cf. 5889, fol. 128, vo. 130), No. 4457. This transcription contains the first part of Al-Fihrist and is dated six hundred and twenty-seven (A.D. 1229/1230). It has 237 folios, each page measuring 20 by 13.5 cm, with sixteen lines to the page. It ends with a statement of intention to continue with the fifth chapter and a prayer for Muḥammad and his family. This is probably the copy referred to by Flügel in his vorwort as the "Old Paris Manuscript," comprising Chapters I to IV. Flügel must have depended to a large extent on this manuscript for the part of his text between his pages one and a hundred and seventy-two. In fact the pious ending is exactly like that given in the Flügel edition on the top of page 172.

Manuscript 4458. This is also in La Bibliothèque nationale, Fonds Arabe, 1953, catalogue page 342 (cf. 5889, fol. 128, vo. 130), No. 4458. This copy starts with Chapter V, section 5. The title is identical with that given by Flügel. There are 246 folios, each measuring 24 by 16 cm. It continues to the end of the book and closes with a note stating that it was confirmed as correct by the copyist Aḥmad al-Miṣrī. The manuscript is marked as being copied in 1846 under the supervision of de Slane, from a manuscript in the Library Kieuprulu in Istanbül. The handwriting is clear, but the headings are not separated as distinctly as they are in the Flügel text and there seem to be numerous clerical errors. In the headings for the last three chapters the name of al-Nadīm is given in the same specialized and ungrammatical way that it is given in Manuscript 1934. De Slane evidently had this copy made by a scribe at Istanbül from Manuscript 1134 or perhaps from the more accurate Manuscript 1934, which originally was in the Köprülü Library before it was moved to the library by the Sulaymāniyah Mosque.

Vienna Manuscript No. 33. This manuscript comprises part of Chapter V, but omits part of the material about the Mu'tazilah. It continues to the end of the book. This manuscript and the two which follow are described in greater detail by Flügel in his vorwort.

Vienna Manuscript No. 34. This copy contains part of Chapter I, part of Chapter VII, and the last three chapters.

The Leyden Manuscript. Flügel gives this as No. 20 and explains that it contains Chapters VII to X. He also found at Leyden some unimportant and unsatisfactory fragments.

The Tanjah Manuscript. This is a recent and unimportant copy, which is described in Majallat Ma'had al-Khuṭūṭ al-'Arabīyah, published by the League of Arab States at Cairo, Vol. I, Part 2, p. 179.

Aḥmad Taymūr Pasha Appendix. This consists of some extra pages purchased by Aḥmad Taymūr Pasha after his attention had been directed to them by a publication issued in Germany in 1889. These pages were published as an appendix to the Egyptian edition of Al-Fihrist at Cairo, by the Raḥmānīyah Press, in 1929.

Because of the wars and revolutions in medieval times and the insects which thrive in warm climates, great numbers of valuable manuscripts have been lost. It is unfortunate that no complete manuscript exists of a book as important as Kitāb al-Fihrist of al-Nadīm.

The Composition of Abū al-Faraj Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Warrāq, known as Ibn Abī Ya‘qūb al-Nadīm¹

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate; I rely upon Allāh, the Unique, the Victorious; may Allāh lengthen the life of the excellent master. Lord by Thy mercy make it easy for² persons accepting conclusions without premises and resting upon the intended purpose without a lengthening of explanations, for we are abridging our statements at the beginning of this book of ours, so as to form a guide to show how we plan to compose it, if Allāh so wills. It is said, "Upon Allāh we rely," and from Him also do we invoke a benediction for all of His prophets and worshippers who are sincere in obeying Him, for there is no strength and no power except with Allāh, the Exalted, the Almighty.³

This is a catalogue of the books of all peoples, Arab and foreign, existing in the language of the Arabs, as well as of their scripts, dealing with various sciences, with accounts of those who composed them and the categories of their authors, together with their relationships and records of their times of birth, length of life, and times of death, and also of the localities of their cities, their virtues and faults, from the beginning of the formation of each science to this our own time, which is the year three hundred and seventy-seven after the Hijrah [A.D. 987/88].

² In the Beatty MS these words, "Lord . . . for," are omitted and the word for "persons" is garbled. In the Flügel edition also, some words are omitted. The translation, therefore, follows MS 1135.

Summary of What the Book Contains in Ten Chapters⁴

The First Chapter, in three sections.

The First Section, describing the languages of the peoples, Arab and foreign, the characteristics of their methods of writing,⁵ their types of script and forms of calligraphy.

The Second Section, about titles of the books of the laws revealed to the sects of the Muslims and the sects of [other] peoples.⁶

The Third Section, describing the Book which has nothing false in front of it or behind it, a revelation from the All Wise and All Praised, with the names of the books composed about its sciences and accounts of the readers [of the Qur'an], with the names of those who quoted them and the digressions from their forms of reading.

The Second Chapter, with three sections, about the grammarians and language scholars.

The First Section, about the beginning of grammar,⁷ with accounts of the grammarians of al-Baṣrah and the Arabians who were masters of literary style, with the titles of their books.

The Second Section, with accounts of the grammarians and language scholars of al-Kūfah and the titles of their books.

The Third Section, mentioning a group of grammarians connected with both schools⁸ and the titles of their books.

⁶ The Beatty MS varies slightly from the Flügel, but neither of them make the meaning entirely clear.

⁸ The two schools of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah.

The Third Chapter, in three sections, about historical traditions, literary pursuits, biographies, and genealogies.

The First Section, with accounts of the historians, narrators of traditions, genealogists, and authors of biographies and anecdotes, with the titles of their books.

The Second Section, with accounts of the kings, secretaries, writers of correspondence, administrators of the revenue, and keepers of registers,⁹ with the titles of their books.

The Third Section, with accounts of the court companions, associates, singers, literary men, buffoons, persons who take slaps good-naturedly, and jesters, with the names of their books.¹⁰

The Fourth Chapter, in two sections, about poetry and the poets.

The First Section, about the groups of poets who were Pre-Islāmic, or else Islāmic surviving the Pre-Islāmic period, with the composers of their anthologies and the names of those quoting them.

The Second Section, about groups of the Islāmic poets and the recent poets coming down to this our own time.

The Fifth Chapter, with five sections, about theology and the theologians.

The First Section, about the beginning of the theological movement and the theologians of the Mu'tazilah and the Murji'ah, with the titles of their books.

The Second Section, with accounts of the theologians of the Shi'ah, the Imāmiyah, and the Zaydiyyah, as well as of others among the Ghulāt (Ghulāh) and the Ismā'īliyah, with the titles of their books.

The Third Section, with accounts of the theologians of the Mujbirah and the Hashawīyah, and the titles of their books.

The Fourth Section, with accounts of the theologians of the Khawārij, their types, and the titles of their books.

The Fifth Section, with accounts of the pilgrims, the ascetics, the devotees, those adopting the Ṣūfī practices, and students of a theology based on hallucinations and aberrations, with the titles of their books.

The Sixth Chapter, with eight sections, about the law and the legal authorities, including the recent ones.

The First Section, with accounts of Mālik [ibn Anas] and his adherents (aṣḥāb), with the titles of their books.

The Second Section, with accounts of Abū Ḥanīfah and his adherents, with the titles of their books.

The Third Section, with accounts of al-Shāfi'ī and his adherents, with the titles of their books.

The Fourth Section, with accounts of Dā'ūd [ibn 'Alī] and his adherents, with the titles of their books.

The Fifth Section, with accounts of the legal authorities of the Shī'ah, with the titles of their books.

The Sixth Section, with accounts of the legal authorities who are scholars of the Ḥadīth, including the recent ones, with the titles of their books.

The Seventh Section, with accounts of Abū Ja'far al-Ṭabarī and his adherents, with the titles of their books.

The Eighth Section, with accounts of the legal authorities of the Shurāt (Shurāh) and the titles of their books.

The Seventh Chapter, three sections, about philosophy and the ancient sciences.

The First Section, with accounts of philosophers of natural science and logic,¹¹ with the titles of their books, the translations, and the commentaries on them; which ones are extant, which are recorded but no longer extant, and which ones used to exist but later disappeared.

The Second Section, with accounts of the possessors of learning; the geometers, arithmeticians, musicians, calculators, astronomers, makers of instruments, and those acquainted with mechanics and dynamics.¹²

The Third Section, about the beginning of medicine, with accounts of ancient and recent physicians, with the titles of their books and the translations and commentaries.

¹¹ This could also be translated as "the natural and logical sciences."

¹² Flügel gives a somewhat different interpretation, as he inserts the word "and" before "the geometers."

The Eighth Chapter, with three sections, about evening recountals, fables, exorcisms, magic, and juggling.

The First Section, with accounts of those who tell stories at night, tellers of fables, and contrivers of illustrations, with the titles of the books of stories and fables which have been composed.

The Second Section, with accounts of the exorcists, jugglers, and magicians, with the titles of their books.

The Third Section, about books composed on various subjects, the compilers and authors being unknown.

The Ninth Chapter, with two sections, about schools of thought [sects] and doctrines.

The First Section, describing the schools of thought of the Chaldaeans of Ḥarrān, known in our time as the Ṣābians, and of the dualist sects of the Manichaeans, the Dayṣānīyah, the Khurramīyah, Marcionites, Mazdakites, and others, with the titles of their books.

The Second Section, with a description of the foreign and rare schools of thought, such as the sects of India, China, and other countries.

The Tenth Chapter, including accounts of the alchemists and the workers of the Art [alchemy], among the ancient and recent philosophers.

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate, who is sufficient for us, upon whom we depend and whose aid we invoke

*with a description of the languages of the Arabs and foreign peoples, the characteristics of their ways of writing, their types of script and forms of calligraphy.*¹

Remarks on Arabic Writing

Men have differed concerning who first originated the Arabic script. Hishām al-Kalbī said that the first to form it was a group of Bedouin Arabs encamped with 'Adnān ibn Udd. Their names were Abū Jād, Hawwāz, Ḥuṭṭī, Kalamūn, Ṣa'faḍ, and Qurusa'āt.²

There is this from [what is written in] the handwriting of Ibn al-Kufī in the following way:

The Arabs originated writing for their names and then discovered other letters not in their names: tā', khā', dhāl, zā', shīn, ghayn, which they called al-rawādif.³ It is said that these men were kings of Midian, whose destruction was on the Day of the Cloud, at the time of Shu'ayb the Prophet, for whom may there be peace.⁴

² Ṭabarī, Annales, I, 203, spells these names differently but gives them as legendary giant kings.

Kalamūn's elegy was composed by his sister:

Kalamūn my support has been stricken down,
The central post of the encampment has been destroyed.
To him chief of the people
Has death come in the midst of a cloud.
Over them has a fire been kindled,
As nought has become their place of dwelling.

I have read what was written in the handwriting of Ibn Abī Sa'd in the following form and construction: Abjād, Hāwar, Ḥāṭā, Kalammān, Ṣā', Faḍ, Qarasat. They say that they were foreign peoples who, while camping with 'Adnān ibn Iyād and the like, became Arabized and formed the Arabic writing, but it is Allāh who knows.⁵

Ka'b said, and before Allāh I am not responsible for his statement, that the first to originate the Arabic and Persian scripts and other forms of writing was Adam, for whom be peace. Three hundred years before his death he wrote on clay which he baked so that it kept safe even when the Flood overflowed the earth. Then each people found its script and wrote with it.

Ibn 'Abbās said:

The first persons to write Arabic were three men of Bawlān, a tribe inhabiting al-Anbār,⁶ who came together and originated letters, both separated and joined. They were Murāmīr ibn Murwah, Aslam ibn Sidrah, and 'Amīr ibn Ḥidrah; [the first and the third were] also called Murrah and Ḥidlah. Murāmīr originated the forms, Aslam the separations and connections, and 'Amīr the diacritical points.

When the people of al-Ḥīrah⁷ were asked, "From whom did you derive Arabic?" they replied, "From the inhabitants of al-Anbār." It is also said that Allāh, Blessed and Almighty, caused Ismā'īl (Ishmael) to speak clear Arabic when he was twenty-four years old.

⁷ Al-Ḥīrah was near Babylon, the center of Christian tribes attached to the Sāsānid dynasty.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: What is near to the truth, acceptable to the mind, and recorded by a reliable authority is that the Arabic speech was the language of Ḥimyar, Ṭasm, Jadīs, Aram, and Ḥawayl, of Arab Bedouin stock.⁸ Then when Ismā'il arrived at the Ḥaram [shrine of Makkah], grew up, and matured, he married into the Jurham clan⁹ of Mu'āwiyah ibn Muḍāḍ al-Jurhumī, and his children learned their speech from these uncles. As time passed on, the descendants of Ismā'il derived one word after another, forming names for many objects as phenomena turned up and appeared.

After speech had been developed, good literary poetry appeared among the people of 'Adnān, increasing in quantity after the time of Ma'add ibn 'Adnān. Thus, though each one of the Arab tribes had a dialect by which it was distinguished and which it made use of, at the beginning they shared in common. It is said that the Arabs were prevented from [further] amplifying their language because of the mission of the Prophet, for whom may there be peace, in revealing the Qur'ān.

One thing which confirms all of this is the quotation of Makḥūl from his men that the earliest innovators of Arabic writing were the Nafīs, the Naḍr, the Taymā', and the Dūmah,¹⁰ descendants of Ismā'il, who developed it in detail, and then it was made distinctive by Qādūr and Nabt ibn Hamaysa' ibn Qādūr.¹¹

It has been said that in ancient times a group of the people of al-Anbār formed the letters alif, bā', tā', thā',¹² which the Arabs borrowed. Moreover, I have read in a book of Makkah, written by 'Umar ibn Shabbah in his own handwriting, that "A group of the scholars of Muḍar informed me that the person who wrote this

⁹ Jurham was a well-known tribe which settled at Makkah; see "Djurhum," Enc. Islam, I, 1066.

Arabic was al-Jazm, a man of the tribe of Mukhallad ibn al-Naḍr ibn Kinānah, after which the Arabs themselves wrote."

From another source: "The person who brought writing to the Quraysh at Makkah was Abū Qays ibn 'Abd Manāf ibn Zuhrah." It is also said that it was Ḥarb ibn Umayyah. It is related that when the Quraysh demolished the Ka'bah, they found in one of its supports a stone on which was inscribed, "Al-Siluf ibn 'Abuqar conveys to his lord a salutation." It was three thousand years old.

There was in the library of al-Ma'mūn something written on hide in the handwriting of 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib ibn Hāshim mentioning the claim of 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib ibn Hāshim of Makkah against so-and-so, the son of so-and-so, the Ḥimyarite of the Warl Tribe¹³ of Ṣan'a' for a thousand silver coins (s., dirham) measured by iron. When he called upon him for this, he proffered the witness of Allāh and the two angels. It is said that the handwriting was like that of women.

One of the Arab writers was Usayd ibn Abī al-'Īṣ. When a flood stream drained off from the ground at the Maṣjid al-Sūr (Mosque of the Wall) by the tomb of al-Murratūn, there was found a stone upon which there was inscribed, "I, Usayd ibn Abī al-'Īṣ, may Allāh show mercy to the sons of 'Abd Manaf." [But] was an Arab called by this name?

From what was written in the handwriting of Ibn Abī Sa'd:

They record that when Ibrāhīm (Abraham), for whom may there be peace, saw the children of Ismā'il (Ishmael) with their maternal Jurhum uncles he said, "Oh, Ismā'il, who are these?" He replied, "My children with their Jurhum uncles." Then Ibrāhīm said to him in the tongue with which he used to speak, which was the ancient Syriac, "Urub." Thus he said to him, "Mingle them together."

But it is Allāh who knows [the truth].

Remarks about the Ḥimyarite Script

A reliable authority asserts that he heard some Yamanite chiefs say that Ḥimyar used to write with the Musnad script, with varied forms of alif, bā', tā'. I myself have seen a passage in the library of al-Ma'mūn which I have translated, "What the Commander of the Faithful 'Abd Allāh al-Ma'mūn, may Allāh honor him, ordered the translators to transcribe."¹⁴ It contained Himyarite script and I give you an exact reproduction of what was in the transcription [Example 1]

Example 1

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: The first of the Arab scripts was the script of Makkah, the next of al-Madīnah, then of al-Baṣrah, and then of al-Kūfah. For the alifs of the scripts of Makkah and al-Madīnah there is a turning of the hand to the right and lengthening of the strokes, one form having a slight slant.¹⁵ This is an example of it [Example 2]

Example 2

¹⁴ Evidently al-Nadīm translated only the title of the passage, not the whole of it.

¹⁵ The Arabic phrase translated as "lengthening of the strokes" is literally "raising of the fingers." See Abbott in Ars Islamica, VIII, Nos. 1 and 2 (1941), 71. The article deals with other scripts, too. See also Abbott, Rise of the North Arabic Script; Pope, Survey of Persian Art, II, 1707 ff.; Jeffery in Muslim World, XXX, No. 2 (April 1940), 191-98.

Professor Arberry in Islamic Research Association Miscellany, I (1948), 24, thinks that a contribution of Professor Minovi in Pope, Survey of Persian Art, II, 1710, is correct. It explains that the Beatty MS is more nearly correct than the Flügel edition and that the words of the script illustrated in the text, "in the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate," are an example of the Makkah-Madīnah scripts.

al-Baṣrah, and the Mashq, the Tajāwīd, the Siṭawaṭī, the Masnū', the Munābadh, the Murāṣaf,¹⁷ the Iṣbahānī, the Sijillī, and the Firāmūz,¹⁸ which is derived and read by the Persians. It is a recent development in two forms, the Nāṣarī and the Mudawwar.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: The man who at the beginning [of Islām] first wrote copies of the Qur'ān, being honored for the beauty of his penmanship, was Khālīd ibn Abī al-Hayyāj; I have seen a copy transcribed in his handwriting. Sa'd¹⁹ singled him out to write copies of the Qur'ān, poems, and reports for al-Walīd [I] ibn 'Abd al-Mālīk, and it was he who wrote in gold the inscription in the prayer niche (al-qiblah) of the Mosque of the Prophet, may Allāh bless him and give him peace, from "And the sun and its brightness" to the end of the Qur'ān.²⁰

It is reported that 'Umar [II] ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz said, "I want you to transcribe a Qur'ān for me like this model." So he [Khālīd ibn Abī al-Hayyāj] made a copy of the Qur'ān for him, exercising great care. 'Umar started to look it over and admire it, but when he found the price to be excessive, he returned it to him.

Mālīk ibn Dīnār, a protégé of Sāmāh ibn Luwa'i ibn Ghālīb, who was called Abū Yaḥyā, used to transcribe copies of the Qur'ān for pay. He died in the year one hundred and thirty [A.D. 747/48]. It is said that he was Mālīk ibn Dīnār ibn Dād Bahār ibn Ḥaṣhīsh ibn Rāzī.²¹

Some of the Transcribers of the Copies of the Qur'ān

Khashnām of al-Baṣrah and al-Mahdī of al-Kūfah lived during the days of al-Rashīd. We have not seen their equals even as late as our own time. Khashnām used to write long alifs, striking with the pen.

¹⁷ Some of these names are taken from the Beatty MS, which does not make the spelling clear.

¹⁸ See Pope, Survey of Persian Art, II, 1717.

¹⁹ It has not been possible to identify this man, although he must have been some-one of importance at Damascus during the early eighth century.

²¹ This sentence appears in the Beatty MS. The names are not written clearly enough for one to be sure of their spelling.

Among them [the transcribers] there was Abū Juday, who used to write the elegant copies of the Qur'ān at the time of al-Mu'taṣim and was one of the great, skillful Cūfic writers. Following these there were in the group of writers of the Cūfic [script]: Ibn Umm Shaybān, al-Mashūr, Abū Khamirah, Ibn Humayrah, and in our own time Abū al-Faraj.

Then among the transcribers who wrote copies of the Qur'ān with the Muḥaqqaq, Mashq, and similar scripts, there were Ibn Abī Ḥassān, Ibn al-Ḥaḍramī, Ibn Zayd, al-Quryānī, Ibn Abī Fāṭimah, Ibn Mujālid, Sharāshir the Egyptian, Ibn Sayr, Ibn al-Ḥasan al-Maliḥ, al-Ḥasan ibn al-Ni'ālī,²² Ibn Ḥadīdah, Abū 'Aqīl, Abū Muḥammad al-Iṣbahānī, Abū Bakr Aḥmad ibn Naṣr, and his son Abū al-Ḥusayn, both of whom I have seen.

A Copy Transcribed from What Was Written in the Handwriting of Abū al-'Abbās ibn Thawābah

Qutbah was the first transcriber during the period of the Banū Umayyah. He developed the four forms of writing, deriving one from the other, for Qutbah was the best Arabic penman on earth.

Al-Ḍaḥḥāk ibn 'Ajlān, the scribe, followed him at the beginning of the caliphate of the Banū al-'Abbās. He added to what Qutbah did, and next to him was the best calligrapher in the world. After him, during the caliphates of al-Manṣūr and al-Mahdī, there was Ishāq ibn Ḥammād, the scribe, who augmented what was accomplished by al-Ḍaḥḥāk.

Then there were a number of pupils of Ishāq ibn Ḥammād, among whom was Yūsuf, the scribe, nicknamed Laqwalī the Poet, who was the best penman among the people. Among them there were also Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mujashshir, who improved on Yūsuf, as well as Shuqayr the Servant, a slave of Ibn Qayyūmā, who was the tutor of al-Qāsim ibn al-Manṣūr. One of them was Ṭhanā', the woman scribe, who was a slave girl of Ibn Qayyūmā, and among them was 'Abd al-Jabbār al-Rūmī. Among them there were also al-Sha'rānī; al-Abrash; Sulaym the servant-scribe, a servant of Ja'far ibn Yaḥyā; 'Anr ibn Mas'adal; Aḥmad ibn Abī Khālīd; Aḥmad al-Kalbī, a scribe of al-Ma'mūn; 'Abd Allāh ibn Shaddād; 'Uthmān ibn Ziyād al-'Ābid; Muḥammad ibn 'Ubayd Allāh, nicknamed al-Madanī; and Abū al-Faḍl Ṣāliḥ ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Tamīmī of al-Khurāsān. It was these who wrote the original measured scripts, never since equaled.

Naming of the Measured Scripts and a Description of What Is Written with Each of These Scripts Which None Can Equal²³

Among them is the Jalīl script, which is the father of all scripts and which no one can emulate except with rigorous training. Yūsuf ²³ The pages were measured with animal hairs (sha'r al-birdhawn), probably the hairs of donkeys. The full-size page produced in a paper factory was the ṣūmār, 24 hairs in width. The next size was the thuluthayn, 16 hairs, then the niṣf, 12 hairs, and finally the thuluth, 8 hairs. The scripts were measured to fit these different-size pages and named accordingly. For a different theory, see Abbott, Rise of the North Arabic Script, p. 32. Qalqashandī, Subḥ al-A'shā, III, 52, presents several theories about how the scripts were named. He does not make it clear whether by qalam he means "pen" or "style of writing," so that his descriptions are not conclusive. For a description of the measured scripts and their names, see ibid., pp. 27 ff.; Abbott in Ars Islamica, VIII, Nos. 1 and 2 (1941), 90, and Abbott, Rise of the North Arabic Script, pp. 17-30; Durustūyah, Kitāb al-Kutūb, pp. 65-74; and Ṭibī, Jāmi' Maḥāsini Kutūbat al-Kutūb.

Ibn Thawābah gives two lists of twelve scripts each. It seems reasonable to suppose that the lists should be arranged as follows:

First List	Second List
Al-Jalīl	Al-Sumay'ī
Al-Sijillāt	Al-Ashriyah
Al-Dibāj	Al-Khifāj al-Thaqīl (Khafīf al-Ṭūmār al-Kābīr)
Al-Ṭūmār al-Kabīr	Al-Khifāj al-Khafīf
Al-Thuluthayn al-Ṣaghīr (al-Khifāj)	Al-Mufattaḥ
Al-Zanbūr	Al-Mumsak
Al-Ḥaram	Al-Mudawwar al-Kabīr (al-Ri'āṣī)
Al-Mu'amarāt	Al-Mudawwar al-Ṣaghīr
Al-Uhūd	Khafīf al-Thuluth al-Kabīr
Amthāl al-Niṣf (light and open)	Al-Riqa'
Al-Qiṣaṣ	Mufattaḥ al-Niṣf
Al-Awjabah	Al-Narjis

Two other scripts are mentioned in the summary and evidently taken for granted as being offshoots from the Jalīl. They are the Thuluth al-Kabīr al-Thaqīl (big, heavy, third-size) and Niṣf al-Thaqīl (heavy, half-size). A number of the scripts in the list are developments from these two.

Laqwah says that "the Jalīl script vexes the loins of the scribe." There are written with it the genuine documents sent by the caliphs to the kings of the earth, and derived from it there are two scripts, the Sijillāt and the Dībāj. From the medium Sijillāt script [al-Awsat] are derived two scripts, the Sumay'ī and the Ashrīyah scripts.

With the Dībāj script are written the official documents and from it is derived the Ṭūmār al-Kabīr script, also used for documents, and an outgrowth of the Dībāj. From it is derived the Khirfāj or the Thuluthayn al-Ṣaghīr al-Thaqīl script, which is derived from the Ṭūmār and with which are written communications from the caliphs to the agents and emirs in the outlying regions. From it are derived three scripts: the Zanbūr script, which grows out of the Thuluthayn and is used for writing on the half-size sheets of paper (inṣāf) and from which nothing is derived—the Mufattaḥ script is derived from it;²⁴ the Ḥaram script, which is written on the half-sheets sent to the kings, derived from the Thaqīl; the Mu'amarāt script, derived from the Thuluthayn—with it are written the half-sheets [exchanged] between the kings.

Four other scripts spring from these two scripts, that is, from the Ḥaram script and the Mu'amarāt script: the 'Uhūd script, an outgrowth from the Ḥaram, used for writing on the two-thirds-size sheets, from which nothing is derived; the Amthāl al-Niṣf script, from which are developed two scripts, light (khafīf) and open (mufattaḥ); the Qiṣaṣ script growing out of the Ḥaram and the Mu'amarāt script, written on the half-size sheet and from which nothing was derived; and the Ajwibah script, derived from the Ḥaram and the Mu'amarāt script, used for writing on the third-size sheets of paper (al-ithlāth), nothing being derived from it. These are twelve scripts from which twelve other scripts are derived.

Among them is the Khirfāj al-Thaqīl script, which is the light form of the Ṭūmār al-Kabīr and developed from it. With it are written official documents and from it is derived the Khirfāj al-Khafīf script. There is also the Sumay'ī script, which resembles the Sijillāt handwriting and springs from the Sijillāt al-Awsat. With it are written official documents and other communications.

²⁴ Probably the Mufattaḥ was derived from the Zanbūr.

Among them there is also a script called the Ashrīyah script, derived from the Sijillāt al-Awsat handwriting. With it are written emancipations of slaves and sales of land and houses and other things. Among them is a script called the Mufattaḥ, sprung from the Thaqīl al-Niṣf. The Mumsak script, with which they write on the half-size sheets, is derived from it. Three scripts grow out of it: a script called the Mudawwar al-Kabīr, which the scribes of this period call the Rī'āsī and which is written on the half-size sheets; also derived from it is a script called the Mudawwar al-Ṣaghīr, a general-utility script with which are written records, traditions, and poems; and a script called Khafīf al-Thuluth al-Kabīr. It is written on the half-size sheets, being derived from Khafīf al-Niṣf al-Thaqīl. From it there springs a script called the Riqā', which is derived from Khafīf al-Thuluth al-Kabīr and with which are written signed edicts and similar things.

Among them is a script called the Mufattaḥ al-Niṣf, derived from al-Niṣf al-Thaqīl, and among them also is the Narjis script, written on the third-size sheets and derived from Khafīf al-Niṣf.

These are twenty-four scripts, all of which are derived from four scripts: the Jalīl script, the Ṭūmār al-Kabīr script, the Niṣf al-Thaqīl script, and the Thuluth al-Kabīr al-Thaqīl script. The derivation of these four scripts is from the Jalīl, which is the father of the scripts.

From [Sources] Other than the Handwriting of Ibn 'Thawābah

People continued to write according to the forms of the ancient script which we have mentioned until the beginning of the 'Abbāsīd rule, and at the time when the Hāshimītes²⁵ appeared, the copies of the Qur'ān were written specifically with these forms [scripts].

Then there developed a handwriting called the 'Irāqī, which was the Muḥaqqaq known as Warrāqī. Elaboration and improvement continued until it culminated for al-Ma'mūn, whose companions and scribes undertook to beautify their calligraphy, concerning which the people vied with one another.

²⁵ The Banū al-'Abbās, or caliphs of the 'Abbāsīd dynasty.

Then there appeared a man known as al-Aḥwal al-Muḥarrir, a craftsman of the Barmakids,²⁶ who was acquainted with the significations and forms of writing. He spoke about its forms and rules, dividing it into categories. This man used to write the communications dispatched by the sultan to the kings of the distant regions in the official documents. He was in the depths of misfortune and filth, as well as coarse, not fit for anything.²⁷ When he classified the scripts, he gave precedence to the heavy scripts. The finest among these is the Ṭūmār script, which is written on the full-size page (al-fūmār), either with a piece of palm or perhaps it is written with a pen. With it they transmit letters to the kings.

Among the scripts there are the Ṭhuluthayn script, the Sijillāt script, the 'Uḥūd script, the Mu'amarāt script, the Amānāt script, the Dibāj script, the Mudabbaj script, the Muraṣṣa' script, and the Tashājī script.

When Dhū al-Ri'āsatayn al-Faḍl ibn Sahl arose, he invented a script which was the best of the scripts and known as the Ri'āsī. It branched into a number of scripts, among which there are: the Ri'āsī al-Kabīr script, the Niṣf script from the Ri'āsī, the Ṭhuluth script, the Ṣaghīr al-Niṣf script, the Khafīf al-Ṭhuluth script, the Muḥaqqaq script, the Manthūr script, the Washī script, the Riqā' script, the Mukātabāt script, the Ghubār al-Ḥilyah script, the Narjis script, and the Biyāḍ script.

Account of al-Barbarī al-Muḥarrar and His Son

This point of the book requires that we mention him. He was Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Ṣubbāh ibn Bishr ibn Suwayd al-Aswad al-Tamīmī and subsequently al-Sa'dī.²⁸ Ibrāhīm was squint-eyed, but Ishāq taught al-Muqtadir and his children. He was nicknamed Abū al-Ḥusayn, and this Abū al-Ḥusayn wrote an ²⁶ See Glossary, Barmak family.

²⁷ Although the Beatty MS is quite clear, this sentence does not seem to suit the rest of the passage. It is possible that al-Aḥwal was a Ṣūfī and therefore poor and dirty; or the passage may be garbled, and al-Aḥwal may have been Abū Khālīd al-Aḥwal, vizier of al-Ma'mūn.

²⁸ This means "fortunate" and may have been given as a nickname after Ishāq had become tutor to the caliph.

epistle about penmanship and writing entitled The Precious Object of the Lover.

No one else appeared during his time who was a more skillful penman or better acquainted with writing. His brother, Abū al-Ḥasan, was like him, walking in his footsteps. His son was Abū al-Qāsim Ismā'il ibn Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm, whose son, Abū Muḥammad, was al-Qāsim ibn Ismā'il ibn Ishāq. Among his children there was also Abū al-'Abbās 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Ishāq. These men were preeminent for their beauty of penmanship and knowledge of writing.

Before the time of Ishāq there was a man known as Ibn Ma'dān, whom Ishāq drew upon for information. Among the young men of Ibn Ma'dān there was Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm al-Nims. Among the writers there were also the sons of Wajh al-Na'jah, in addition to Ibn Munīr, al-Zanfalaṭī, and al-Zawā'idī.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: Among the viziers and secretaries who wrote with ink²⁹ there were Abū Aḥmad al-'Abbās ibn al-Ḥasan and Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā [ibn Dā'ūd] and Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn Muqlah, whose birth was after the afternoon prayer on Thursday, nine nights before the end of Shawwāl, in the year two hundred and seventy-two [A.D. 885/86], and who died on Sunday when ten nights of Shawwāl had gone by during the year three hundred and twenty-eight [A.D. 939/40].³⁰ His brother, Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī [ibn Muqlah], also wrote with ink. He was born at daybreak on Wednesday at the end of the month of Ramaḍān during the year two hundred and seventy-eight [A.D. 891/92] and died in the month of Rabī' al-Ākhir during the year three hundred and thirty-eight [A.D. 949/50]. The like of these two men has not been known in the past, or even as late as our own time. They wrote according to the calligraphy of their [grand] father Muqlah. The real name of Muqlah was 'Alī ibn al-Ḥasan ibn 'Abd Allāh, Muqlah being a nickname.

Some of their kinsmen and children wrote during their lifetime and afterward, but they did not maintain their standards. One of these [kinsmen] might excel in connection with one letter following another or one word after another, but it was Abū 'Alī and Abū 'Abd Allāh who achieved perfection as a whole.

Those of their children who were penmen were Abū Muḥammad 'Abd Allāh, Abū al-Ḥasan ibn Abī 'Alī, Abū Aḥmad Sulaymān ibn Abī al-Ḥasan, and Abū al-Ḥusayn ibn Abī 'Alī. I have read a copy of the Qur'ān written in the handwriting of their grandfather Muḡlah.

The Names of Persons Who Wrote Copies of the Qur'ān in Gold and Who Are Remembered

Al-Yaḡṣīnī, Ibrāhīm al-Ṣaghīr, Abū Mūsā ibn 'Ammār, Ibn al-Saqāṭī, Muḥammad [al-Khuzaymī], and Ibn Muḥammad Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Khuzaymī and his son of our own time.³¹

Names of the Bookbinders Who Are Remembered

Ibn Abī al-Ḥarīsh, who used to bind books in the Treasury of Knowledge of al-Ma'mūn,³² Shafāḥ al-Miqrād, al-'Ujayfi, Abū 'Isā ibn Shayrān, Dimyānah al-Ā'sar ibn al-Ḥajjām, Ibrāhīm and his son Muḥammad, and al-Ḥusayn ibn al-Ṣaffār.

Remarks about the Excellence of the Pen

Al-'Attābī said, "Pens are the beasts of burden of understanding." Ibn Abī Duwād said, "The pen is the ambassador of the mind, its apostle, its furthest reaching tongue, and its best interpreter." Ṭurayḥ ibn Ismā'īl al-Thaqafī said, "Men's minds are under the nibs of their pens." Aristotle (Aristāṭālīs) said, "The pen is the active cause, the ink the material one, script is the principle of form, and style is the cause of perfection."

Al-'Attābī said, "Books smile as pens shed tears." Al-Kindī said, "The pen (al-qūlm) has the same value as 'usefulness' (nfā), for ³¹ As only a few vowel signs are given in the Arabic text, the names in this and the following list may not be entirely correct.

³² Khizānat al-Ḥikmah; the library attached to the Bayt al-Ḥikmah or research center established by al-Ma'mūn, A.D. 830, at Baghdad.

$f = 80$, $n = 50$, $\bar{a} = 1$, and $' = 70$, which totals 201. $A = 1$, $l = 30$, $q = 100$, $l = 30$, $m = 40$, which totals 201. 'Abd al-Ḥamīd said, "The pen is a tree, the fruits of which are words, and contemplation is a sea, whose pearl is wisdom, wherein is quenching of mental thirst."

Remarks on the Excellencies of Penmanship and Praise of Arabic Speech

Sahl ibn Hārūn, who was the director of the Bayt al-Ḥikmah³³ and known as Ibn Raḥyūn al-Kātib (the Secretary), said, "The number of Arabic letters is twenty-eight, like the number of the stations of the moon. The greatest number of them which a word with its extra letters can contain is seven, corresponding to the seven heavenly bodies."

He also said, "The letters which are added are twelve, like the twelve signs of the zodiac." Then he said, "The letters which are elided with the lām (l) of the article are fourteen, like the hidden stations of the moon under the earth, while the fourteen manifest letters which do not elide are like the visible stations remaining. Three movements form the declensions; al-raḥ' [nominative], al-naṣb [accusative], and al-khaṣad [dative], for the movements of nature are three: motion from the center like that of fire, motion to the center like that of the earth, and motion on a center like that of the heavens." Beautiful is this coincidence and beautiful the interpretation!³⁴

Al-Kindī said, "I do not know of any other form of writing in which the letters undergo so much beautifying and refining as they do in Arabic writing. It also makes possible greater speed than can be attained in other forms of writing."

Plato (Aflātūn) said, "Handwriting is the shackle of the mind." Euclid (Aqlīdus) said, "Handwriting is a spiritual designing, even though it appears by means of a material instrument." Abū Dulaf said, "Handwriting is the garden of the sciences." Al-Naẓẓām said, "Handwriting is rooted in the spirit, even though it appears by means of bodily senses."

³³ MS 1135 says he was director of the books at Bayt al-Ḥikmah.

³⁴ For an explanation of the stations of the moon, see "Astrology," Enc. Islam, I, 496. In the last sentence in this paragraph, one or both adjectives may be 'novel' instead of 'beautiful'; the Beatty MS is not clear. It is not clear whether this sentence is part of the quotation or was inserted by the author.

Remarks about Ugliness of Handwriting

It is said that bad penmanship is one of the two chronic diseases. It is also said that bad handwriting is, in connection with culture, a disease. It is further said that ugly penmanship is sterility of culture.

Remarks about the Excellencies of Books

Someone said to Socrates (Suqrāt), "Are you not afraid that you will injure your eyes by continually looking into books?" He replied, "If I save my insight, I don't attend to weakness of eyesight." *Mahbūd*³⁵ said, "If books had not bound together the experiences of former generations, the shackles of later generations in their forgetfulness would not have been loosed."

Buzurjmihr said, "Books are the shells of wisdom, which are split open for the pearls of character." Another has said, "These sciences are camel stallions—use books to line them up; these couplets are runaways—use books for them as halters."

By Kulthūm ibn 'Amr al-'Attābi

We have comrades of whose conversation we never weary;
Confiding and trustworthy whether absent or present,
They give us the benefit of their knowledge, a knowledge of what has passed,
With wise opinion, discipline, and instruction well-guided,
Without cause to be dreaded or fear of suspicion.
Neither their fingers nor their hands shall we fear;
If you say they are living it is no lie,
Or if you say they are dead you will not be held in error.

Naṭṭāḥah has said, and his name is Aḥmad ibn Ismā'īl, surnamed Abū 'Alī, a more complete account of whom will follow when telling about the secretaries, "The book, he is a companion who does not bother you at the time of your work, nor call you away when you are preoccupied, nor demand that you treat him with courtesy. The book, he is the comrade who does not flatter you too much, the friend who does not tempt you, the companion who does not weary you, the counselor who does not mislead you."

³⁵ The third consonant in this word is uncertain and the name cannot be clearly identified.

Al-Sarī ibn Aḥmad al-Kindī recited one of his own compositions to me, saying, "I wrote on the back of a piece of a composition, which I gave to a friend of mine and which I bound with black leather:

A black object unveils its opposite,
As night the uncovering of the dawn.
I have sent you this, and though dumb
It holds conversation with the eyes about that with which it is entrusted.
Silent it is if its veil be clasped;
Sparkling when it is opened for enjoyment.
A cover encompassing its light
Goes back and forth (opens and shuts) containing it.
By means of it souls find enjoyment
While worries are cast down abased.
Rank nothing with it for enjoyment,
For all that you desire it contains."

Abū Bakr al-Zuhayrī recited to me [some verses] of Ibn Ṭabāṭabā about the volumes (ḍafāṭir):

By the favor of Allāh have these brethren attained their glory,
And by their association and fidelity I am exalted (made greater).
They speak without visible tongues,
Searching are they for hidden secrets.
If I seek knowledge of some past happening from Arab or Persian,
About it the books give me information,
As though I were an eyewitness living in their time,
Even though generations have come and gone.
If oratory I seek, orators arise,
My hand sufficing as a pulpit for the volumes.
How often have I tested men with them!
For the mind of a youth is tested by a book of knowledge.
How often have I defeated a companion by means of them,
When even an army could not have put him to flight!

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I have dealt with this subject and similar ones in the chapter on writing and its instruments in a book which I have composed about descriptions and comparisons (al-awṣāf wa-al-tashbihāt).

Remarks about the Syriac Script

Theodore (Tiyādūrus) the Commentator recorded in his commentary on the first book of the Torah that "God, Blessed and Exalted, addressed Adam in the Nabataean dialect, which was purer than the Syriac one. The people of Bābil also used to speak it. Then when God made a babel of tongues, the nations being scattered to their districts and localities, the language of the people of Bābil was unchanged, but the Nabataean spoken by the villagers became a broken Syriac incorrectly pronounced."

Another person said, "The language used for books and reading, that is the literary form (al-faṣīḥ), is the dialect of the people of Syria and Ḥarrān. From it the scholars derived the Syriac script, coming to an agreement about it. So it was with the other written forms."

Another said, "In one of the Gospels or some other Christian book, an angel called Saymūrus³⁶ taught Adam the Syriac writing as it exists in the hands of the Christians of our own day."

The Syrians (al-Suriyāniyūn) have three scripts: al-Maftūḥ, which is called the Estrangelo (al-Aṣṭrangālā) and is the finest and best—it is spoken of as the Thaḡīl script, resembling the Masāḥif [Qur'ānic] script and the Taḥrīr; al-Muḥaqqāq, called Scholastic (Askulthiyā) and spoken of as the Mudawwar (round) form, similar to the script of al-warraqūn; al-Serto (al-Sarṭā), with which they write missives and which resembles the Arabic Riqā' script.

Here are designs of the Syriac script.³⁷

Remarks about the Persian Script

It is said that the first person to speak Persian was Gayumarth (Gayo Mareta), whom the Persians call al-Gil Shāh, which means King of Clay. He was their Adam, father of mankind. It is said, the first person to write Persian was Bīwarasp (Bīwārasb), the son of Wandā-sab known as al-Ḍaḥḥāk, the master of al-Ajdahāq.³⁸

³⁷ The designs do not appear in either Flügel or the Beatty MS. For the Syrian scripts, see Abbott, Rise of the North Arabic Script, pp. 17–21.

³⁸ For the Persian scripts, see Browne, Literary History of Persia, I, 76; and Pope, Survey of Persian Art, II, 1707. Al-Ajdahāq was Azhi Dahāka, a legendary dragon.

It is said that Ferīdūn, son (descendant) of al-Kayān, when he divided the earth among his sons Salm, Tūr, and Irāj, gave as a share to each one of them a third of the inhabited land and wrote a deed for them. Amād the Priest told me that the deed is with the King of China, carried away with the Persian treasures at the time of Yazdigird; it is Allāh who knows.

It is said that the first person to write was Jamshīd, the son of Hūshang,³⁹ who lived in the royal courts of the regions of Tustar. The Persians supposed that when he ruled the world and the jinn and men submitted to him, there yielded to him also the Devil (Iblīs), whom he commanded to make manifest what was in his consciousness, whereupon he [the Devil] taught him [Jamshīd] writing.

I have read what was written in the handwriting of Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn 'Abdūs al-Jahshiyārī in the Book of Viziers, which he wrote, that "There were few books and epistles before the regime of Gushtāsp the son of Luhrāsp,⁴⁰ the people lacking the ability to speak plainly and to bring forth their inner intentions by clearness of expression."

One of the things preserved and recorded from the sayings of Jamshīd: "From Jamshīd son of Hushāng to Adarbādhānī,⁴¹ I have commanded thee to administer the seven regions; accomplish this and establish the regime which I have ordered for you."

From those [the sayings] of Ferīdūn, son of Nazakā and Anqayān: "From Ferīdūn, son of Anqayān, to ———: I have presented you with a land in which is Damāwand.⁴² Receive this and accept a throne of silver gilded with gold."

Among [the records] there was from Kai Kāūs: "From Kai Kāūs son of Kai Kubād to Rustam: Verily I have set thee free from ³⁹ Flügel gives Hūshang, the Beatty MS gives Awjīhān, but the word in Arabic is usually written as Ushhanj.

⁴⁰ In Arabic, Kustāsb ibn Luhrāsb.

the bondage of slavery and made thee to rule over Sijistān. Yoke no one to servitude and rule Sijistān as I have commanded thee."

When Gushtāsp became king, writing was used more extensively. Then there appeared Zoroaster, son of Spitama, lord of the law of the Magi. With the divulging of his wonderful book in all languages, the people themselves began to learn penmanship and writing with more general use and greater skill.

'Abd Allāh ibn al-Muqaffā' said, "The languages of the Persians are the Pahlāwī, the Dērī, the Parsī, the Khuzistānī, and the Syriac.⁴³ The Pahlāwī (al-Fahlawīyah) is related to Pahlav (Fahlah), a region which includes five cities: Iṣbahān, Rayy, Hamadhān, Mah Nahāwand,⁴⁴ and Ādharbayjān. The Dērī (al-Durīyah) was the language of the cities of al-Madā'in, spoken at the king's court. It was derived from presence at the court (al-bāb), coming chiefly from the language of the people of Khurāsān and the East, the speech of the people of Balkh. Priests, scholars, and their like speak Parsī (al-Farsīyah), the speech of the people of Fars. The kings and nobles used to speak the Khuzistānī (al-Khūzīyah) in privacy, in places of play and amusement, and with their retinues. The people of al-Sawād⁴⁵ used to speak Syriac (al-Suriyānīyah), writing in one form of Persian Syriac.

Ibn al-Muqaffā' said, "There are seven types of handwriting in Persia." One of them is the form of writing for religion called Dīn Dafirīyah⁴⁶ with which the religious devotees⁴⁷ write, and of which the following is an example.

Another form of writing is called Watsh Dabīrīyah,⁴⁸ which has three hundred and sixty-five letters. They use it to write about physiognomy, divination, gurgling of water, ringing of the ears, ⁴³ The Arabic names are given in parentheses in the sentences which follow.

⁴⁴ See Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 846.

⁴⁶ The correct form is Dabīrīyah.

⁴⁸ Watsh means "small." In the Beatty MS the word is not clear, but Dabīrīyah is written with a b in a clear way.

beckonings of the eyes, nodding, winking, and the like. This script has not been handed down to anyone, so that none of the sons of Persia write with it today. When I asked Amād the Priest about it, he said, "It is going the way of translation, being translated into Arabic writing."

Another form of writing is called the Kushtah,⁴⁹ which has twenty-eight letters. With it they write contracts, inheritance assignments,⁵⁰ and land transactions. The rings in Persia are inscribed with this script, and also decorations for garments and rugs, as well as dies for silver coins (s., dirham); this is an example of it [Example 3].⁵¹

Another form of writing is called Nīm Kushtah,⁵² which has twenty-eight letters and is used for medicine and philosophy. This is an example of it [Example 4].

Example 4

Another form of writing is called the Shāh Dabīrīyah, with which the Persian kings used to carry on their own correspondence, apart from the populace. The other people of the kingdom were prevented from using it, as a precaution, lest somebody related to the king might discover the king's secrets. It has not been preserved for us.

⁴⁹ The letters for Kushtah are clear in the Beatty MS, but as the consonant marks are often omitted, it might also be interpreted as "Kushtaj."

⁵² Nīm means "half."

The Rasā'il form of writing is just as the tongue speaks, without dots. Some of it is written in the first Syriac dialect spoken by the people of Bābil, being read as Persian. The number of letters is thirty-three, and it is called both Nāmāh Dabīriyah and Hām Dabīriyah.⁵³ It is used by all classes of the kingdom, with the one exception of the kings. This is an example of it [Example 5].

Example 5

Another form of writing is called Zār Saharayah,⁵⁴ with which the kings correspond about confidential matters with whatsoever nations they wish. It has forty letters and vocal sounds, with a definite character for each letter and sound. It does not contain anything of the Nabataean tongue; here are examples of it.⁵⁵

They have another form of writing, called Rās Saharayah, used for logic and philosophy, with twenty-four letters and also dots. It has not been preserved for us.

They have a form of spelling called Rawārašn, with which they write both the connected and unconnected letters. There are about a thousand words with which to determine things that are similar. An example of this is that anyone who wishes to write kusht, which is "meat" in Arabic, writes it basarā, but reads it kusht,⁵⁶ according to this example [Example 6].

Example 6

Or if he wishes to write nān, which is "bread" in Arabic, it is read as nān but written lahumā, according to this example [Example 7].⁵⁷

⁵³ Rasā'il means "missives"; dots refer to the diacritics to mark consonants. Nāmāh means "book" and hām, "chiefs."

⁵⁴ This could be Dār Shahrāyah; the texts are not clear.

⁵⁵ The example is missing.

⁵⁶ The Beatty MS gives the consonants r w a r s h n, but instead of r, the letter might be z or d. The word kusht is equivalent to the Persian gosht. Basarā is like the Hebrew bāsār ("flesh"). See Browne, Literary History of Persia, I, 76.

⁵⁷ Nān is a Persian word for "bread." Lahumā is similar to the Hebrew lechem, which also means bread.

Example 7

So it is for whatever they wish to write, except for such things as need no substitution, being written as pronounced.

Remarks about the Hebrew Script

I have read in some of the ancient books that the first person to write Hebrew was 'Ābar ibn Shālikh (Eber son of Shelah), who instituted it among his people, so that they wrote with it. Theodorus (Theodore) mentions that Hebrew was derived from Syriac, but so called because Ibrāhīm (Abraham) crossed the Euphrates seeking Damascus, when fleeing from Nimrūd (Nimrod), the son of Kūs (Cush), the son of Kan'ān (Canaan).⁵⁸

In connection with writing, the Jews and Christians suppose,⁵⁹ without any dispute between them, that the Hebrew writing was on two tables of stone and that Allāh, may His name be glorified, handed them over to him [Moses], who when he descended from the mountain and found that they [the Israelites] had been worshipping the idol, became angry with them, in fact so much wrought up that he broke the two tables. He [Theodorus] said, "After that, he [Moses] repented, and Allāh, may His name be glorified, ordered him to write on two other tables, so as to inscribe them with the original writing."

One of the more excellent of the Jews recorded that Hebrew writing was not like the present form, which has been corrupted and altered. Some reliable Jews have said that Yūsuf [Joseph], upon whom be peace, when he was the vizier of the ruler of Egypt, used figures and signs for the affairs of the kingdom which he recorded.⁶⁰ Here is a design of the Hebrew letters [Example 8].

⁵⁸ In other words, the ancient text claims that the word "Hebrew" (Ibrānī in Arabic) comes from the verb "to cross" (abar), referring to Abraham crossing the Euphrates.

⁵⁹ The Beatty MS lacks the material in the text from here until Chap. I, sect. 3, near n. 59. MS 1135 is intact with regards to this passage, but it is not as authentic as the Beatty MS.

⁶⁰ MS 1135 is followed in this paragraph instead of Flügel.

one. When we asked him to repeat [the words], he did repeat them as we had rendered them.

Ja'far ibn al-Muktafi said:

The reason the Greeks write from left to right is that they believe that it is fitting for a person seated to meet the sunrise in all of its phases. So if he faces the sunrise, the north will be on his left, in which case the left gives way to the right. Thus, the method for a scribe is to go from the north toward the south.

He also said:

The Greeks have rules for handwriting, with forms among which are the designated⁶⁵ letters among the twenty-four letters. These are gamma, delta, kappa, sigma, tau, and chi. They also have letters called "sonants," which are alpha, ayi (epsilon), eta, iota, ūa (upsilon), smaller wāw (omicron), and the larger wāw (omega).⁶⁶ The feminine letters are four, alpha, the smaller wāw (omicron), and the great wāw (omega). The masculine letters are ayi (epsilon), eta, iota, and hū (upsilon).

Declension does not affect any of the Greek letters, except the seven sonant letters, which are known as lagayn and tlagayn.⁶⁷ The Greek tongue dispenses with six of the letters of the Arabic language: hā, dhāl, ḍād, ʾayn, hā, and lām-alif.

Script of the Langobardi and Saxons

These are a people between the Greeks and the Franks, close to the ruler of al-Andalus.⁶⁸ Their writing has twenty-two letters and their script is called the Apostolic.⁶⁹ They start writing from the left toward the right, but their reason for doing so is different from that of the Greeks. They say it is so that the dipping of the ink will be away from the beating of the heart and not toward it, for writing ⁶⁵ For the word which has been translated here as "designated," MS 1135 suggests muta ʿāfiyah, ("restored from illness"). Flügel gives muta ʿāqibah ("successive," "coupled").

⁶⁷ These two words might be λεγειν ("to say") and τι λεγειν, probably meaning "how to say."

⁶⁹ Flügel gives "Afīṣṭolīqī" and MS 1135 a garbled form.

from the right is from the liver towards the heart. This is an example of it.⁷⁰

The Script of China

As Chinese writing resembles inscription, even a clever and skillful scribe becomes weary over it. It is said that even a person with a light touch cannot write more than two or three leaves a day. They write their religious and scientific books with it on fans, a number of which I have seen. Most of them [the Chinese] are dualists and sun worshippers,⁷¹ about whom I will speak in detail later on.

In China there is a form of writing called Collective Writing. That is, for every word written with three or more letters, there is a single character, and each word with an augmented design of characters signifies a great deal. If they wish, they can write the contents of one hundred leaves with this script on only one page.

Muḥammad ibn Zakarīyā' al-Rāzī said:

A man from China came to seek me and dwelt with me for about a year. In five months of this time he learned Arabic, both spoken and written, becoming proficient in style, as well as expert and rapid in writing. When he desired to return to his country, he said to me a month in advance, "I am about to set forth and wish that you would dictate to me the sixteen books of Galen, so that I can write them down." I said, "Your time is short and the length of your stay will be sufficient for you to copy only a small part of it." Then the young man said, "I ask you to devote yourself to me for the length of my stay and to dictate to me as fast as you can. I will keep up with you in writing." I proposed to some of my students that they join in this project with us, but we did not have faith in the man, until there was a chance for comparison and he showed us everything he had written.

I questioned him about the matter and he said, "We have a form of writing known as Collective, which is what you see. If we wish to write a great deal in a short time, we write it with this script. Then later on, if we wish, we transcribe it with a script which is familiar and not abbreviated." He thought that a man who was quick in learning and understanding could not learn it in less than twenty years.

⁷⁰ The example is missing.

⁷¹ MS 1135 has Shamsiyah, whereas Flügel is uncertain about the name. This sect is dealt with at the end of Chap. IX of Al-Fihrist.

The Chinese have an ink which they compound from a mixture and which resembles Chinese paint. I have seen some of it in the form of tablets, on which was stamped the image of the king. A piece of it suffices for a long period of constant writing. This is an example of their script [Example 9].

Example 9

Remarks about the Manichaean Script

The Manichaean script is derived from Persian and Syriac. Mānī derived it. The cult is a combination of the Magi system and Christianity. Its letters are more numerous than the Arabic ones. With this script they write their gospels and books of their laws. The inhabitants of Mā Warā' al-Nahr (the Region beyond the River, Transoxiana) and Samarqand write religious books with this script, so that it is called the Script of Religion.

The Marcionites also have a script by which they are distinguished. A reliable person has told me that he has seen it. He said, "It resembles the Manichaean, but is different."⁷²

These are the Manichaean letters [Example 10].

⁷² For the Manichaeans and Marcionites, see Chap. IX, sect. 1.

They also have a form with different letters, for they write [Example 11]:

Example 11

Remarks about the Script of al-Ṣughd

A reliable person has said, "I entered the land of al-Ṣughd, which is the territory beyond the river."⁷³ Ṣughd is called Upper Irān and is an abode of the Turks. Its principal city is Tūnkath.⁷⁴ He also said, "Its people are dualists and Christians. In their language they call the dualists Ahārkaḥ."⁷⁵ This is an example of their writing [Example 12].

⁷³ Sogdiana in Transoxiana; see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 394.

⁷⁴ Probably the capital of the Īlāq region southeast of Tāshkand; ibid, I, 900.

⁷⁵ This name does not appear in books written by Ṭabarī, Yāqūt, Marco Polo, or the Arab travelers.

Remarks about al-Sind⁷⁶

The people there have different languages and religions as well as numerous scripts. Some of the people who travel in their country said to me, "They have about two hundred scripts." I once saw at the court of the sultan a yellow idol, said to be an image of the Buddha (al-Budd).⁷⁷ It is a figure on a seat, grasping three fingers with his hand. On the seat there is an inscription of which this is a likeness [Example 13].

Example 13

This man mentioned above stated that they usually write with nine letters in this form [Example 14].

Example 14

The start is with alif, bā', jīm, dāl, hā', wāw, zāy, ḥā', and ṣā'. Then after reaching ṣā' they repeat each of the original letters with dots as in this example [Example 15].

⁷⁶ The lower valley and delta of the Indus in what is today part of West Pakistan. It was conquered by the Muslims, A.D. 712.

⁷⁷ This was probably a typical image, with a Buddha seated on a lotus leaf, holding with one hand three fingers of the other hand. The Arabic text has "thirty," but this must be an error. See Grünwedel, Buddhist Art in India, pp. 130, 134, 173, 202.

Thus they become yā', kāf, lām, mīm, nūn, sīn, 'ayn, fā', and ṣād, making eighteen.⁷⁸ If they reach ṣād they write as in the following example, placing two dots under each letter in this way [Example 16].

Example 16

Thus they become qāf, rā', shīn, tā', thā', khā', dhāl, and zā'. When they reach zā' they write the original letter alif with three dots under it [Example 17].⁷⁹ Thus they account for all of the letters of the alphabet and write whatever they please.

Remarks about the Negroes

The races of Negroes are the Nubians, the Bijah (Beja), the Zaghāwah, the Murāwah (Meroe), the Istān,⁸⁰ the Barbar (Berbers), and the types of blacks like the Indians.⁸¹ They write like the Indians because of their proximity, but have no known script or writing of their own.

Al-Jāhīz mentioned in his book Al-Bayān that the Negroes have an oratory and eloquence belonging to their own cult and language. A person who saw and witnessed this [custom] said to me, "If ⁷⁸ The texts have 'asharah 'asharah ("twenty") but thamānī 'asharah ("eighteen") must be the words meant, as there are two groups of nine letters each.

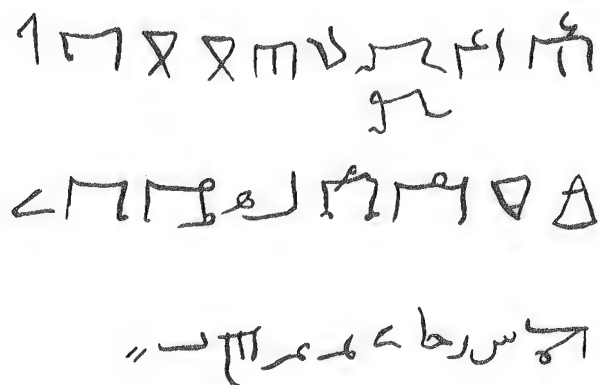

⁷⁹ MS 1135 differs; it has "they write the original letter like this" and then shows the design of an alif with the maddah or "long" sign over it and three dots under it.

⁸¹ "Al-Sind" is translated as "the Indians," as it seems to refer to the people instead of the area. "Blacks like the Indians" probably signifies other people in southeast Asia.

affairs perplex them and difficulties hard press them, their speaker sits raised above the ground and, looking down, speaks in a way that resembles growling and muttering, but which the rest of them understand." He also said, "When there appears in the speech the counsel they are seeking, they act upon it." It is Allāh who knows.

Some travelers have told me that the Bijah have a script and form of writing, but it has not reached us. Those who go about mention that for religious purposes the Nubians write in Syriac, Greek, and Coptic. The Abyssinians have a script like the Ḥimyarite letters, going from left to right. They separate each of the words by means of three dots, dotted like a triangle between the letters of the two words. This is an example of the letters, which I copied from the library of al-Ma'mūn, but not with the same handwriting [Example 18].

Example 18

The letters tā' and thā' are one; the letters hā' and khā' are one; the letters ayn and ghayn are one; and the letters ṭā' and ẓā' are one.

Remarks about the Turks and Those Related to Them

The Turks, the Bulgar, the Blaghā', the Burghaz, the Khazar, the Llān, and the types with small eyes and extreme blondness have no script, except that the Bulgarians and the Tibetans write with Chinese and Manichaean, whereas the Khazar write Hebrew.⁸²

My information about the Turks is what Abū al-Ḥasan Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Ashnās related to me. He said:

Ḥamūd Ḥarār, the Turk, al-Maklī from al-Tūrūniyah,⁸³ who was one of those who left his country because of haughtiness and rage, told me that the great Turkish king, if he desired to write to a lesser king, summoned his vizier and ordered the splitting of an arrow. Then the vizier traced on it characters understood by the Turkish nobility and indicating the meaning intended by the king and comprehended by the person to whom it was sent.

He supposed that this scant design represented many ideas and that it was used for truces and peace treaties, as well as at the times of their wars. He mentioned that they carefully guard an arrow inscribed in this way and fulfill their engagements for its sake. It is Allāh who knows.

Russia

A man whose word I trust told me that one of the kings of Mount al-Qabq (the Caucasus) sent him to the king of Russia. He believes that they have writing inscribed on wood, and he showed me a piece of white wood with an inscription on it. The following is an example, but I do not know whether these are words or single letters [Example 19].

Example 19

⁸² The Bulgar are Bulgarians. The Blaghā' were the Vlachs or Blakia, the Walachia of Rumania. Burghaz is a part of Bulgaria, and probably an old tribal name. The Khazar were on both sides of the Itil, or Volga. The Llān or 'Allān were situated next to Armenia, near the Khazar. See "Vlachs," Enc. Brit., XXVIII, 166-68; "Bulgaria" (Burghaz), IV, 768; "Khazars," XV, 774. See also Yāqūt, Geog., II, 436, for Khazar; IV, 343, for Llān; I, 817, for Tibet. See also Mas'ūdī, Vol. II, Chap. 17, beginning p. 1.

⁸³ This may mean from Turunt, the lower Dvina region of Russia, or from Tawwaz. See Yāqūt, Geog., I, 894.

The Franks

Their writing resembles the Greek script, but is more even; we may have seen it on the Frankish swords. The queen of the Franks wrote to al-Muktafi a letter on white silk, dispatched by a servant who happened into her country from the direction of North Africa. It courted the friendship of al-Muktafi and asked him to marry her. The servant's name was 'Albā. He was one of the employees of Ibn al-Aghlab. This is an example of their writing.⁸⁴

The Armenians and Others

The Armenians as a rule write in Greek and Arabic, because of proximity to those cultures. Thus their gospels were written in Greek and their script resembles Greek writing, though it is not Greek.⁸⁵

The kings of the Caucasus and its slopes, which are Llakz, Shirwān, and Zawzan, have no script.⁸⁶ Although there is a common language in the region, each group has its own dialect and expressions differ. We shall speak in detail about them in the proper place in the book.

Remarks about Sharpening Pens

Nations use different ways of sharpening their pens. The Hebrew way of sharpening is with an extreme angle. The Syriac trim is with an angle to the left, or maybe to the right, or perhaps they turn the pen on its back, or split the reed in two, sharpening one half which they call ṣulb and use for writing.

The Greek trim is a very oblique deviation to the right, because they write from the left to the right. The Persian trim is with the nib of the pen fringed. The scribe separates it either against the floor or with his teeth, so as to embellish the penmanship. Sometimes they write with the lower end of an unsharpened reed, calling this reed khām. With it they write ilhamāh dīnāt, which are books of religious inspirations, dowries, and other things.⁸⁷

⁸⁵ This last phrase occurs in MS 1135, but not in Flügel.

The Chinese write with hairs which they fit into the heads of reeds as painters do. The Arabs write with various kinds of pens and [have various] ways of trimming them. The custom is to have a slant to the right, but the scribes trim pens without an angle.

Remarks about Types of Paper

It is said that first of all Adam wrote on clay. Then for a period after that the peoples wrote on copper and stone for the sake of durability. This was before the Flood. To meet the needs of the moment they also wrote on wood and the leaves of trees, as well as on the tūz,⁸⁸ bark with which their bows were mounted to make them last long. We have discussed this matter in detail in the chapter on philosophy.

Later on they tanned hides upon which people wrote. The Egyptians wrote on Egyptian paper made from the papyrus reed. It is said that the first person to do this was the prophet Yūsuf (Joseph), for whom be peace.

The Greeks write on white silk, parchment, and other things, as well as on Egyptian scrolls and al-fulhān,⁸⁹ which is the skin of wild asses. The Persians used to write on the skins of water buffaloes, cows, and sheep. The Arabs write on the shoulder blades of the camel and [on] likhāf, which are thin white stones, and on 'usb or palm stems; the Chinese on Chinese paper made of hashish,⁹⁰ which is the most important product of the land; the Indians on brass and stone, also on white silk.

Then there is the Khurāsānī paper made of flax, which some say appeared in the days of the Banū Umayyah, while others say it was during the 'Abbāsīd regime. Some say that it was an ancient product and others say that it is recent. It is stated that craftsmen from China

⁸⁷ The khām was a white reed pen used by the Persians. Ilhām means "inspirations" and dīnāt is from the word for "religion." "Dowries" is siyāq.

⁸⁸ Tūz, or toz, was the inner bark of a tree used by the Persians to wrap their bows and also as a writing material. See Fück in Ambix, IV, Nos. 3 and 4 (February 1951), 113 n. 16.

⁸⁹ This word seems to be a form derived from pulhānā. Ibid., p. 90.

⁹⁰ This may mean "herbs," but more likely refers to "hemp."

made it in Khurāsān like the form of Chinese paper. Its types are the Sulaymānī, the Ṭalḥī, the Nūḥī, the Fir'awnī, the Ja'farī, and the Ṭahīrī.

For a number of years the people of Baghdād wrote on erased sheets. The registers spoiled at the time of Muḥammad ibn Zubaydah⁹¹ were parchments, which after being erased were once more written upon.

It is said that books used to be made of parchment tanned with *nawrah*⁹² and exceedingly dry. Later the Cūfic tanning was with dates, giving flexibility.

The end of the First Section of the First Chapter of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the learned men. To Allāh alone is the praise.

⁹¹ He is better known as al-Amīn, the elder son of Hārūn al-Rashīd, who engaged in a civil war with his brother during the early years of the ninth century.

⁹² Lime mixed with arsenic, used to remove hair from the body before prayer and also by women in the baths. For further information about paper see Mez, Renaissance of Islam, pp. 467-69; Khaldūn, Muqaddimah (Rosenthal), II, 391, 392.

The Second Section of the First Chapter with the titles of the books of the laws revealed to the community of Muslims and the sects of the peoples [through revealed books].

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I once read a book which fell into my hands, and which was an ancient transcription, apparently from the library of al-Ma'mūn. In it the copyist mentions the names and numbers of the scriptures and revealed books, with their scope and with the things which most of the common people and the populace feel sure of and believe. I have recorded from it what is related to this book of mine. This statement in the wording of the [ancient] book is [the passage] from it which is needed by me. Aḥmad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Salām, a protégé of the Commander of the Faithful Hārūn, whom I esteem as al-Rashīd, said:

I have translated this book from a book of the *ḥunafā'*¹ of al-Ṣābiyūn al-Ibrāhīmīyah, who believed in Ibrāhīm [Abraham], for whom may there be peace, and who received from him the scripture revealed to him by Allāh.²

It is a long book, but I have deleted such material as is unnecessary for an understanding of the reasons which are mentioned for their disagreements and differences. I have introduced into it what is needed for proof of these things from the Qur'ān and the Ḥadīth coming from the Apostle, may Allāh bless him and give him peace, and from his Companions, as well as from the People of the Book who became Muslims, among whom were 'Abd Allāh ibn Salām, Yāmīn ibn Yāmīn, Wahb ibn Munabbih, Ka'b al-Aḥbār, Ibn al-Tihān, and Bahār al-Rāhib (the Monk).

¹ Ḥunafā' is the plural of ḥanīf, a word which was used for a reformed worshipper of Pre-Islāmic times. Abraham was regarded as a ḥanīf; see Qur'ān 3:67, and cf. Qur'ān 6:74 ff.

² For al-Ṣābiyūn al-Ibrāhīmīyah, see Mas'ūdī, IV, 63, and the account in Chap. IX, sect. 1, of this work, about the Ṣābians of Harrān. This term may refer to the spiritual sect of the Ṣābians, opposed to idolatry; see Shahrastānī (Haarbrücker), Part II, p. 4. It is also possible that it refers to the Ṣābians of the marshlands of southern 'Irāq, or simply to pagans who honored Abraham.

Aḥmad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Salām [also] said:

I have translated the beginning of this book, and the Torah, the Gospels, and the books of the prophets and disciples from Hebrew, Greek, and Ṣābian, which are the languages of the people of each book, into Arabic, letter for letter. In so doing I did not wish to beautify or embellish the style for fear of inaccuracy. I added nothing to what I found in the book which I was translating and I subtracted nothing, unless there were words presented by the language of the people of that book with meanings which could not be clearly translated into Arabic except by transposing. Thus something coming last may not be clear unless it is placed first, so as to be understood in Arabic. For example, the words of one who says āt māym tām I have translated into Arabic as mā' hāt, only I have placed mā' (water) last and hāt (bring) first. So in translating these languages correctly into Arabic I seek the protection of Allāh lest I add or subtract, except in the manner which I have recorded and explained in this book.

In another place in the book he said:

The total number of prophets was one hundred and twenty-four thousand, three hundred and fifteen, among whom were those sent forth with revelation on their lips.³ The total number of books which Allāh Almighty revealed was one hundred and four. Among these Allāh Almighty revealed one hundred of the sacred scriptures⁴ between the times of Adam and Mūsā (Moses).

The first of these books revealed by Him [Allāh], honor to His name, were the sacred writings of Adam, for whom be peace, twenty-one in number. Allāh revealed to Shīth (Seth) for whom be peace, the second book, twenty-nine sacred writings. Allāh, may He be exalted, revealed the third book, thirty sacred writings, to Ikhmūkh (Enoch) who is Idrīs, may peace rest with him. The fourth book of ten sacred writings He, honor to His name, revealed to Ibrāhīm (Abraham), for whom be peace, and the fifth book of ten sacred writings to Mūsā (Moses). These are five books of one hundred sacred writings. Some time subsequent to these scriptures He, may He be blessed and exalted, revealed the Torah on ten tables to Mūsā (Moses), for whom be peace.

⁴ The word translated here as "scriptures" is ṣaḥīfah, which may refer to a whole scripture, or to the leaf of a manuscript.

Aḥmad ibn 'Abd Allāh recorded that the tables were green with the writing on them red like the rays of the sun, but Aḥmad ibn Ishāq said that the Jews do not know about this characteristic. Aḥmad [ibn 'Abd Allāh] also said:

When Mūsā (Moses) descended from the mountain and learned that his companions had been worshipping a calf, he threw down [the tables of stone] so that they were broken. Then he repented and asked Allāh, may He be glorified and honored, to give them to him again. So Allāh, honor to His name, revealed, "I will do it again with two tables." This Allāh did for him, one of the tablets being the "Table of the Covenant" and the other the "Table of Witnessing."⁵

Then Allāh, may He be glorified and honored, revealed to Dā'ūd (David) the Psalms, that is al-zabūr, which are one hundred and fifty in number and in the hands of the Jews and Christians.⁶

A Statement about the Torah, Which Is in the Hands of the Jews, with the Names of Their Books and Information about Their Scholars and Authors

When I asked one of their notable men about these matters, he said, "God, honor to His name, revealed to Moses the Torah in five fifths, each fifth divided into two parts and each part into a number of farāsāt, which means sūrahs, with every farāsah divided into a number of absūqāt, meaning verses."⁷

He said that there is a book of Moses called the Mishna, from which the Jews derive the science of the law, with the religious ordinances and judgments. It is a large book, its languages being Kasdānī and ⁵ See Exod. 24:12, 31:18, and 32:15. See also Qur'ān 7:148-54.

Hebrew.⁸ In addition to that there were among the books of the prophets.⁹

Joshua; Judges;¹⁰ Samuel; the scripture of Isaiah; the scripture of Jeremiah; the scripture of Ezekiel; Kings,¹¹ which is the scripture of David and his associates, known as "Malkhā al-Mulūk"; the Prophets, comprising twelve minor scriptures. There are also books called *Haftārōth*¹² derived from the books of the twelve prophets.

Among their books there are also:

Ezra; Daniel; Job; Song of Songs; Lamentations;¹³ Ruth; Ecclesiastes;¹⁴ Psalms of David; Proverbs of Solomon; Record of the Days [Chronicles], containing the history of the kings and accounts about them; Ahasuerus, called the Megillah [Esther].¹⁵

Al-Fayyūmī was one of the most eminent of the Jews and of their scholars who were versed in the Hebrew language. In fact the Jews consider that there was nobody else like al-Fayyūmī.¹⁶ His name was Sa'īd, also said to be Sa'dīyā, and he lived so recently that some of our contemporaries were alive before he died. Among his books there were:¹⁷

⁸ Kāṣḍu was an old Babylonian form for the people of Chaldea. This probably means that the languages were a Chaldean dialect and Hebrew.

⁹ In Al-Fihrist, when lists of books are given, the word kitāb ("book") is placed before each title. In this translation, this word will be omitted.

¹⁰ The Arabic word is saffā, derived, like the Hebrew verb shāfete, from an old Semitic word for "judges."

¹¹ This is a transliteration of the old Hebrew form malkhā.

¹⁵ This book was evidently Esther, which was known in Hebrew as Megilloth. Sometimes, however, this term was used for Esther and four other books. See Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, I, 773.

¹⁶ He was the famous tenth-century Jewish scholar from Egypt, known as Saadia Ben Joseph, Gaon of the Academy of Sura.

¹⁷ In Al-Fihrist the phrase usually found before a list of books is, literally, "And to him from the books," which in translation is rendered as "Among his books there were."

Origins; Sacred Laws; Commentary on Isaiah; Commentary on the Torah, arranged without explanation;¹⁸ Proverbs, in ten chapters; Commentary on the Decrees of David; Commentary on "Al-Nikut,"¹⁹ which is an exposition of the Psalms of David, for whom be peace; Commentary on the Third Sacred Book of the Last Half of the Torah, with explanation; Commentary on the Book of Job; Establishment of Prayers and Sacred Laws; Events, which is a history.

Remarks about the Gospel of the Christians, the Names of Their Books, Their Scholars, and Their Authors

I asked Yūnus the priest, who was an excellent man, about the books translated into the Arabic language which they expound and according to which they act. He replied, "Among them is the book Al-Ṣūrah (The Form) which is divided into two parts, the 'Old Form' and the 'New Form.'" He stated that the "Old [Form]" was the ancient basis for the Jewish sect and the "New [Form]" for the sect of the Christians. He also said that the "Old [Form]" depends upon a number of books, the first of which is the Torah, which is five sacred writings. [Then follows] a compilation comprising a number of books, among which are:

Joshua, the Son of Nūn; The Tribes, which is the book of Judges; Samuel and the Judgment of David; Traditions of the Children of Israel; The Story of Ruth; Solomon, the Son of David, about wise sayings; Ecclesiastes [Qoheleth]; The Song of Songs; The Wisdom of Jesus, the Son of Sirach [Ecclesiasticus].²⁰ The Prophets, composed of four books: Isaiah the Prophet, for whom be peace; Jeremiah the Prophet, for whom be peace; The Twelve Prophets, for whom be peace; Ezekiel. The New Form, which is composed of four gospels: The Gospel of Matthew; The Gospel of Mark; The Gospel of Luke; The Gospel of John. Book of the Disciples, known as Frāksīs [Acts]; Paul the Apostle, twenty-four epistles.²¹

¹⁹ Al-Nikut is evidently a transliteration of the Hebrew word nekoth ("treasure house").

²⁰ The Wisdom of Jesus, the Son of Sirach, is the title used in the Catholic edition of the Apocrypha for the book usually called Ecclesiasticus.

²¹ Frāksīs is the Arabic transliteration of the Greek πράξεις. There are 21 epistles in the Bible.

They also have books about the religious law and the judgments of their community, among which are the books of the synods, western and eastern, each of which contains a number of chapters of legal decisions.²²

One of their authorities on the religious law and judicial interpretations was Ibn Bahrīz, whose name was 'Abd Yasū'. He was at first the metropolitan of Ḥarrān and subsequently became the metropolitan of al-Mawṣil and Ḥarrah. He wrote epistles and books.

There was also the book of Marqus the Jacobite, who was known as al-Bādawī. It was a reply to two books which refuted his doctrine and denying the oneness of the Trinity professed by the Jacobites and Melchites.²³

Ibn Bahrīz was learned, his scholarship approaching that of Islām. He translated a great deal of material from books about logic and philosophy. There was also Pethiōn, who was the most accurate of the translators from the point of view of translation, also the best of them for style and diction. There were Theodorus and Yūsha' Yaḥb, Hazqīl (Ezekiel), Timotheus, and Yūsha' ibn Nūn, who were translators and commentators.²⁴ We shall give accounts about them in the chapter on the ancient sciences [Chapter VII].

Among their learned men there was Tawmā al-Ruhāwī (Thomas of Ruhā' or Edessa), who wrote an epistle to his sister about what took place between him and the opposition at Alexandria. There was also Ilyās (Elias), the metropolitan of Damascus, who wrote a book, The Call, as well as Abū 'Izzah, the Melchite bishop of Ḥarrān, among whose works there was a book in which he defamed *Nestorius*²⁵ the leader. A group has denounced him.

²² Chabot, Synodicon orientale, is a good example of a Nestorian or Eastern collection of church records.

²³ Marqus was Jacob Burdeānā, a metropolitan of the Syrian Orthodox Church, called the Jacobite Church after him. He evidently replied to Nestorian books which endorsed the doctrine that Christ had two natures. The Melchites, supported by the emperor, decreed at the Council of Chalcedon, A.D. 451, that the two natures were not separate, but one and composite. Later the Syrian Orthodox Church, or Jacobites, emphasized still further the oneness of Christ's nature as expressed in the Monophysite dogma.

²⁴ These men were all translators and not Biblical characters.

²⁵ The Flügel text has Asṭūrus, but it is evidently an error and intended for Nestorius.

The Third Section of the First Chapter of the book Al-Fihrist with accounts of the scholars and the names of their books. This section includes a description of the Book which has nothing false in front of it or behind it; a revelation from the Wise and Praised, with the names of the books composed about it and accounts of the Seven Readers and others, too, with their writings.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: Abū al-Ḥasan Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf al-Nāqī¹ said:

Yahyā ibn Muḥammad Abū al-Qāsim related to us saying, Sulaymān ibn Dā'ūd al-Ḥāshimī said, Ibrāhīm ibn Sa'd [learned] from al-Zuhri from 'Ubayd ibn al-Silf that Zayd ibn Thābit told him saying, "I was sent to Abū Bakr and when I came to him, behold, 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb was with him. Then Abū Bakr said, 'Umar has come to me and said to me, "As the slaughter of reciters² [of the Qur'ān] was excessive on the day of Yamāmah,³ I fear that the slaughter of reciters in the lands as a whole may be so great that much of the Qur'ān will be lost. I believe, therefore, that the Qur'ān should immediately be compiled." Then I said to 'Umar, "How can I do something which the Apostle of Allāh himself did not accomplish, may Allāh bless him and give him peace?" 'Umar said, "But, by Allāh, it is a good idea!" Then 'Umar continued to remind me about this matter until Allāh opened my heart for him and I viewed the affair as 'Umar saw it."

² Here the Arabic is translated as "reciters," as the literal meaning, "readers," cannot apply to persons who recited from memory.

³ The battle in A.D. 633, when the Muslim general Khālīd ibn al-Walīd defeated the rebellious Banū Ḥanīfah tribesmen and killed the false prophet Musaylimah. It is likely that in the second sentence which follows in the text the wording should be, "I believe, therefore, that you should immediately compile the Qur'ān."

Zayd ibn Thābit also related: "Abū Bakr said, 'You are a young man, intelligent, and not headstrong. You used to write down what was revealed to the Apostle of Allāh, may Allāh bless him and give him peace. So now follow up the problem of the Qur'ān and make a compilation of it.'"

Zayd then said: "By Allāh, to move a peak from the mountains would not have been a harder job for me than the one which he commanded me to do, which is the compilation of the entire Qur'ān from scraps, thin white stones, palm stems, and the breasts [memory] of men. I found 'Sūrah al-Tawbah'⁴ [recorded] by Abū Khazaymah al-Ansārī and did not discover [recorded] by anybody else the passage, 'An apostle has come to you from your own number; costly for him are your sufferings,' to the end of the sūrah."

This scripture⁵ was with Abū Bakr during his lifetime, until Allāh took him. Then it was with 'Umar until Allāh brought his life to a completion, and after that with 'Umar's daughter Ḥafṣah.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq: A reliable person has quoted that Ḥudhayfah ibn al-Yamān came to 'Uthmān ibn 'Affān when he was in 'Irāq, saying to him, 'Uthmān, "Get ahead of this people before they disagree about the Book, as the Jews and Christians have disagreed [about their scriptures]." So 'Uthmān sent the message to Ḥafṣah, "Send us the scriptures that we may transcribe them as manuscripts and then return them to you." Ḥafṣah sent them to 'Uthmān and 'Uthmān gave orders so that Zayd ibn Thābit, 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Zubayr, Sa'id ibn al-'Āṣ, and 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn al-Ḥārith ibn Hishām transcribed them as manuscripts. Moreover, he ['Uthmān] said to the group of the Quraysh,⁶ "If you and Zayd ibn Thābit differ about any passage of the Qur'ān, write it in the colloquial speech of the Quraysh, as it was revealed in their vernacular." So they accomplished this work and when the scriptures had been transcribed, 'Uthmān returned them to Ḥafṣah. Then he sent a manuscript copy to each district, ordering that every page and manuscript with a different version of the Qur'ān should be burned.

⁵ This was evidently Zayd's original collection of Qur'ānic verses, later issued as an authorized canon in corrected form.

⁶ This was the tribe at Makkah to which the Prophet belonged. Zayd did not belong to it, but the men chosen to work with him were related to the tribe.

Subdivision concerning the Revealing of the Qur'ān at Makkah and al-Madīnah, with the Sequence of Its Revelation

Abū al-Ḥasan Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf related to us saying:

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ghālib said to us, Abū Muḥammad 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Ḥajjāj al-Madīnī, who came from al-Madīnah in the year two hundred and ninety-nine [A.D. 911], said that Bakr ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb of al-Madīnah stated, al-Wāqidi Muḥammad ibn 'Umar related to us saying, Ma'mar ibn-Rāshid quoted what he received from al-Zuhri and he from Muḥammad ibn Nu'mān ibn Bashīr, who said that the first section of the Qur'ān to be revealed to the Prophet, may Allāh bless him and give him peace, was:⁷

⁹ The first clause is the title and the second the opening words of Sūrah 35. Flügel is evidently wrong in giving them as two different titles. Fifteen of the titles which follow give the names of the sūrahs rather than the opening words.

He [Abū al-Ḥasan] said:

Al-Thawrī passed on to me¹² from Farrās from al-Sha'bī, who said "Al-Nahl" was revealed at Makkah, except for those verses, "If you take vengeance, avenge in the way that they take vengeance on you."¹³ Ibn Jurayj passed on from 'Aṭā' al-Khurāsānī from Ibn 'Abbās, who said eighty-five sūrahs were revealed at Makkah, whereas twenty-eight sūrahs were revealed at al-Madīnah. At al-Madīnah there were revealed:¹⁴

Al-Baqarah (The Cow)	2
Al-Anfāl (The Spoils)	8
Al-A'rāf (The Heights)	7
Āl 'Imrān (Family of 'Imrān)	3

Al-Ḥadīd (The Iron)	57

¹² The Arabic has "Al-Thawrī told me," but the meaning must be "Al-Thawrī passed on to me," because al-Thawrī lived long before al-Nadīm and his contemporary Abū al-Ḥasan Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf, whom al-Nadīm quoted at the beginning of the passage.

¹³ This evidently refers to the last three verses of Sūrah 16.

It is said that "Al-Mu'awwidhāt" were revealed at al-Madīnah. Then there is the remainder of the Qur'ān.¹⁶

Subdivision concerning the Arrangement of the Qur'ān in the Manuscript of 'Abd Allāh ibn Mas'ūd

Al-Faḍl ibn Shādhān said, "I found in a manuscript of 'Abd Allāh ibn Mas'ūd the compilation of the sūrahs of the Qur'ān in accordance with the following sequence:¹⁷

Al-Baqarah (The Cow)	2
Al-Nisā' (The Women)	4
Āl 'Imrān (The Family of 'Imrān)	3

¹⁵ Also called "Al-Ṣaff" ("The Ranks").

These are one hundred and ten sūrahs.²⁸

According to another tradition, "Al-Ṭūr" [Sūrah 52] comes before "Al-Dhāriyāt" [Sūrah 51].

Ibn Shādhān²⁹ stated that Ibn Sīrīn said 'Abd Allāh ibn Mas'ūd did not transcribe into his manuscript either "Al-Mu'awwidhatān"³⁰ or the opening of the Book.³¹ Moreover, al-Faḍl [ibn Shādhān] quoted in sequence from al-A'mash, saying that in the reading of 'Abd Allāh [ibn Mas'ūd] there was "Ḥā'(Ḥ) Mīm(M) Sīn(S) Qāf(Q)." ³²

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I have seen a number of Qur'ānic manuscripts, which the transcribers recorded as manuscripts of Ibn Mas'ūd. No two of the Qur'ānic copies were in agreement and most of them were on badly effaced parchment. I also saw a Qur'ānic manuscript transcribed about two hundred ²⁶ The author has evidently quoted these sentences to show how different they are from the authorized version of the Qur'ān. Cf. Sūrah 103 of the authorized version.

²⁸ In the authorized version there are 114 sūrahs. In this passage there are only 106, not 110.

²⁹ The Flügel text has Abū instead of ibn, evidently a mistake.

³⁰ Sūrahs 113 and 114. Here the dual form is used instead of the plural.

³¹ This refers to "Fātiḥat al-Kitāb," the first short sūrah.

³² In the authorized version, the letters are "Ḥā' (Ḥ) Mīm (M) 'Ayn (ʿ) Sīn (S) Qāf(Q)." This is Sūrah 42.

years ago which included the opening of the Book. As al-Faḍl ibn Shādhān was one of the leading authorities on the Qur'ān and the Ḥadīth, I have mentioned what he said, in addition to what we ourselves have witnessed.

Subdivision concerning the Arrangement of the Qur'ān in the Manuscript of Ubayy ibn Ka'b
Al-Faḍl ibn Shādhān said:

One of our reliable friends has informed us, saying that the composition of the sūrahs according to the reading of Ubayy ibn Ka'b is in a village called Qariyat al-Anṣār, two parasangs³³ from al-Baṣrah, where in his home Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Anṣārī showed us a Qur'ānic manuscript, saying, "This is the copy of Ubayy which we have, handed down from our fathers." I looked into it and ascertained the headings of the sūrahs, the endings of the revelations, and the numbers of verses.³⁴

This is one hundred and sixteen sūrahs.⁴⁸

⁴² 'Abas[a] has already been mentioned as Sūrah 80. As the word also appears in Sūrah 74, v. 22, this may refer to that sūrah, which is not mentioned elsewhere in this list.

⁴³ This is probably a variation for Sūrah 98, v. 1.

⁴⁴ This sūrah is probably meant as Sūrah 65, which deals with the subject of divorce. On the other hand, Sūrah 65 has many verses, so that "Al-Khal'" may be a garbled title for Sūrah 103, which has three verses.

⁴⁶ "Al-Lumazah" almost certainly refers to Sūrah 104, but the words appended are not in the authorized version.

⁴⁷ This is a mistake, as the sūrah has already been mentioned and the name does not resemble titles of sūrahs not elsewhere mentioned.

⁴⁸ The list as given does not include such a large number, moreover, about a dozen of the sūrahs of the authorized version are omitted.

He [Al-Faḍl ibn Shādhān] said:

So far I have followed the Qur'ānic copy of Ubayy ibn Ka'b. According to the statement of Ubayy ibn Ka'b the total number of the verses of the Qur'ān is six thousand, two hundred and ten. The total number of the sūrahs of the Qur'ān according to the statement of 'Atā' ibn Yasar is one hundred and fourteen, its verses are six thousand, one hundred and seventy, its words seventy-seven thousand, four hundred and thirty-nine, and its letters three hundred and twenty-three thousand and fifteen.

According to the statement of 'Āsim al-Jahḍarī, there are one hundred and thirteen sūrahs. The total number of verses of the Qur'ān as stated by Yaḥyā ibn al-Ḥārith al-Dhamārī is six thousand, two hundred and twenty-six, while its letters are three hundred and twenty-one thousand, five hundred and thirty.

The Collectors of the Qur'ān at the Time of the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace

'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, may the favor of Allāh be with him; Sa'd ibn 'Ubayd ibn Nu'mān ibn 'Amr ibn Zayd, may Allāh be pleased with him;⁴⁹ Abū al-Dardā' 'Uwaymar ibn Zayd, may Allāh be pleased with him; Mu'adh ibn Jabal ibn Aws, may Allāh be pleased with him; Abū Zayd Thābit ibn Zayd ibn al-Nu'mān;⁵⁰ Ubayy ibn Ka'b ibn Qays ibn Mālik ibn Imru' al-Qays; 'Ubayd ibn Mu'āwiyah ibn Zayd ibn Thābit ibn al-Ḍaḥḥāk.

Arrangement of the Sūrahs of the Qur'ān according to the Manuscript of the Commander of the Faithful, 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, May Allāh Honor His Countenance
Ibn al-Munādī said:

Al-Ḥasan ibn al-'Abbās said to me, "I received the information through 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Abī Ḥammād from al-Ḥakam ibn Zuhayr al-Sadūsī from 'Abd Khayr from 'Alī, for whom be peace, that he ['Alī] perceived an augury connected with the people⁵¹ at the time of the death of the ⁴⁹ This name is sometimes written Sa'id, but both Al-Fihrist and Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, spell it without the third letter.

Prophet, may Allāh bless him and give him peace. So he swore that he would not take his cloak from his back until he had compiled the Qur'ān. He stayed, therefore, in his house for three days until he compiled the Qur'ān. This was the first manuscript in which the Qur'ān was compiled from memory. The manuscript was with the people of Ja'far.⁵²

In our own time I myself saw at the home of Abū Ya'lā Ḥamzah al-Ḥasanī, may Allāh be merciful to him, a manuscript from which some pages had dropped out, written in the handwriting of 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib. The Banū Ḥasan hold it as an inheritance, as time passes by, and this is the arrangement of the sūrahs in that manuscript.⁵³

Accounts of the Seven Readers with the Names of Those Who Quoted from Them and Read Like Them⁵⁴

Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā', whose name was Zabbān ibn al-'Alā' ibn 'Ammār ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Ḥasan ibn al-Ḥārith ibn Julhum ibn Khuzā'i ibn Māzin ibn Mālik ibn 'Amr al-Mazīnī, was one of the most learned authorities of the Qur'ān. Yūnus and other shaykhs of al-Baṣrah belonging to the fourth generation [of Islām] learned from him.

Naming of Those Who Followed the Reading of Abū 'Amr

The Reading of Abū 'Amr, a composition of Aḥmad ibn Zayd al-Ḥalwānī; The Reading of Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā', from Abū Dhuhī, quoted by 'Ismah ibn Abī 'Ismah; The Reading of Abū 'Amr, which was quoted by al-Yazīdī.⁵⁵

Account of Nāfi' ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Abī Nu'aym al-Madanī

He was also called Abbān and Abū al-Ḥasan. Al-Aṣma'i quoted Nāfi', who told him, "My origin was at Iṣbahān."

⁵² This may refer to Ja'far ibn Abī Ṭālib, but it is more likely that it is meant to be the sixth Shī'i imam, Ja'far al-Šādiq, who died A.D. 765.

⁵³ The Banū Ḥasan were descendants of the eldest son of 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib. The arrangement of sūrahs is missing.

⁵⁴ See Glossary for "reading" and "readers."

⁵⁵ Probably an eighth-century reader (see al-Ḥāshim Yazīdī), although this man was known for using a system other than that of Abū 'Amr. In this account of the readers, the word "quoted" is evidently used in connection with pupils and disciples who used the method of the master, also quoting from his books and lectures.

Naming of Those Who Quoted Nāfi

Account of Ibn Kathīr

His name was ʿAbd Allāh ibn Kathīr and his surname Abū Saʿīd, or some say Abū Bakr. He was a Qurʾānic reader of Makkah in the second generation [of Islām] and a protégé of ʿAmr ibn ʿAlqamah al-Kinānī. He was called al-Dārānī because he was a perfume seller and in al-Ḥijāz a perfumer is called a dārānī; [he was called] also al-Dārī al-Lakhmī because he was a descendant of the tribe of al-Dār ibn Hānī ibn Lakhm, to which Tamīm al-Dārī belonged.⁵⁶

He was said to be a descendant of the Persians whom Chosroes sent by ship to al-Yaman in order to drive out the Abyssinians.⁵⁷ ʿAbd Allāh al-Kathīr died during the year one hundred and twenty [A.D. 738] at Makkah, where he was buried. He was regarded as preeminent.

Naming of Those Who Quoted Ibn Kathīr

Ismāʿīl ibn ʿAbd Allāh ibn Qusṭanṭīn, a protégé of Maysarah, who was a protégé of al-ʿĀṣ ibn Hishām.

Account of ʿĀṣ ibn Bahdalāh

He was Ibn Abī al-Najūd, surnamed Abū Bakr, a protégé of the tribe of Jadhīmah ibn Mālik ibn Naṣr ibn Quʿayn. He belonged to the third generation of the scholars of al-Kūfah, following Yahyā ibn Waththāb. ʿĀṣ died in the year one hundred and twenty-eight [A.D. 745/46]. The reading used by ʿĀṣ was according to Abū ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī and Zirr ibn Ḥubaysh.

⁵⁷ Chosroes Anūshirwān sent this expedition A.D. 576, defeating the Abyssinians in al-Yaman.

Naming of Those Who Quoted ʿĀṣim

Abū Bakr ibn Ayyāsh quoted him. His name was Muḥammad, also said to be Shaʿbah ibn Sālim al-Asadī. As there was a difference of opinion about his name, his surname was said to be his real name, by which alone he was known. He was a protégé of Waṣīl ibn Ḥayyan al-Aḥḍab, and died at al-Kūfah during the year one hundred and ninety-three [A.D. 808], during the month in which al-Rashīd also passed away. He was quoted by Ḥafṣ ibn Sulaymān Abū ʿAmr al-Bazzāz.

The reading learned from ʿĀṣim dated back to ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, for whom he peace, according to the tradition of Abū ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī. Ḥafṣ died before the plague, the plague being in the year one hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 748].⁵⁸

Account of ʿAbd Allāh ibn ʿĀmir al-Yaḥsubī

He was one of the Seven [Readers], surnamed Abū ʿAmrān. It is said that he learned the Qurʾān⁵⁹ from ʿUthmān ibn ʿAffān, reading in accordance with him. He belonged to the first generation of followers [of the Prophet] at Damascus, where he died in the year one hundred and eighteen [A.D. 736].

Ibn ʿĀmir quoted a number of the Companions, among whom there were Wāthilah ibn al-Asqaʿ, Faḍalah ibn ʿUbayd, and Muʿāwiyah ibn Abī Sufyān.

Naming of Those Who Quoted Ibn ʿĀmir

Yahyā ibn al-Ḥārith al-Dhamārī, surnamed Abū ʿUmar, named for Dhamār, which is a district of the districts of al-Yaman.⁶⁰ He died in the year one hundred and forty-five [A.D. 762].

Ismāʿīl ibn ʿAbd Allāh ibn Abī Muḥājir and ʿAbd al-Raḥmān ibn ʿĀmir, his brother.⁶¹ Saʿīd ibn ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, Hishām ibn al-Ghāz,⁶² and Thawr ibn Yazīd.

⁵⁸ Ṭabarī, Annales, II, 2016 l. 3, says the plague started at al-Baṣrah the year before.

⁵⁹ At this point the Beatty MS is intact again, after a loss of pages extending from Chap. I, sect. 1, near n. 59.

⁶⁰ For makhālīf ("districts"), see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 434; for Dhamār, II, 721.

⁶¹ The text indicates that he was the brother of Ismāʿīl, but it seems to be more reasonable to regard him as the brother of Ibn ʿĀmir.

⁶² The Flügel text has ʿAmmār, which seems to be an error.

Yahyā ibn al-Ḥārith [al-Dhamārī] was quoted by a group of men, among whom there were Ayyūb ibn Tamīm, Suwayd ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz, Ṣadaqah ibn Yahyā, Muḥammad ibn Sa'īd ibn Shābūr, 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-Wāḥid, Ghazzāl ibn Khālīd,⁶⁵ Yahyā ibn Ḥamzah, and others besides them.

Ḥamzah ibn Ḥabīb al-Zayyāt

He was one of the Seven [Readers], about whom it was said that he had a son, 'Umārah, and so was called Abū 'Umārah.⁶⁴ He was a protégé of 'Alī 'Akramah ibn Rib'ī al-Taymī and used to transport oil from al-Kūfah to Hulwān, bringing back cheese and walnuts from Hulwān to al-Kūfah.

He belonged to the fourth generation of scholars at al-Kūfah, being an authority on the law. He died in the year one hundred and fifty-six [A.D. 772/73], during the caliphate of Abū Ja'far [al-Manṣūr]. Among his books there were:

The Reading of Ḥamzah; Allotments of Inheritance.

Naming of Those Who Quoted Ḥamzah

Khālīd ibn Yazīd, 'Ā'idh ibn Abī 'Ā'idh, al-Kisā'i, al-Ḥasan ibn 'Aṭīyah, and 'Abd Allāh ibn Mūsā al-Absī.

Al-Kisā'i the Grammarian

He was 'Alī ibn Ḥamzah ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Balūman ibn Fīrūz,⁶⁵ by origin a Persian and one of the Seven Readers. He came from al-Kūfah where he was brought up, but he used to move from one town to another. He died in one of the villages of al-Rayy named Iranbūyah⁶⁶ during the year one hundred and seventy-nine [A.D. 795].

⁶⁵ The Beatty MS has 'Irrāl, but the word must be meant as Ghazzāl.

⁶⁵ Yāqūt, Irshād, Part V, p. 183, and Khallikān, II, 237, give Fīrūz, though the Beatty MS gives Mazūn, which is almost certainly an error.

⁶⁶ Yāqūt, Geog., I, 223 has Iranbūyah, whereas the Beatty MS gives Raubūyah. Yāqūt is probably correct.

He read according to 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Abī Laylā and Ḥamzah ibn Ḥabīb. Any disagreement between al-Kisā'i and Ḥamzah was connected with the method of reciting of Ibn Abī Laylā. Ibn Abī Laylā recited in the manner of 'Alī, for whom be peace.

Al-Kisā'i was one of the [Qur'ānic] readers of the City of Peace [Baghdād]. At first he recited to the people with the reading of Ḥamzah, but later he chose his own reading with which he read to the people during the caliphate of Hārūn [al-Rashid]. We shall give a more complete account about him in what follows, if Allāh so wills.

Naming of Those Who Quoted al-Kisā'i

Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm al-Marwazī, Abū al-Ḥārith al-Layth ibn Khālīd, Abū 'Umar Ja'far ibn 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz, and Hāshim al-Yazīdī.

The persons who learned from him but disagreed with him about certain letters were: Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim ibn Sallām; Nuṣayr ibn Yūsuf; Aḥmad ibn Jubayr, the mosque reader of Damascus; Abū Tawbah Maymūn ibn Ḥafṣ; 'Alī ibn al-Mubārak al-Liḥyānī; Hishām al-Ḍarīr, the grammarian; and Abū Dhuhl Aḥmad ibn Abī Dhuhl. Šālīḥ ibn 'Āsim al-Nāqī gained a certain amount of knowledge from him, but did not use his reading. Yahyā ibn 'Ādam drew upon his reading to a certain extent, but only in a limited way.⁶⁷

Naming of the Books Which the Scholars Composed about His Reading

The Things about Which al-Kisā'i Disagreed with Ḥamzah, by Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn al-Mughīrah; about his reading according to al-Mughīrah ibn Shu'ayb al-Tamīmī; about his reading according to Abū Muslim 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Wāqīd al-Wāqīdī; The Letters of al-Kisā'i, according to Sawrah ibn al-Mubārak.⁶⁸

There was also his book, The Meaning of the Qur'ān.⁶⁹

⁶⁷ The translation follows the Beatty MS, which seems to be more accurate than the Flügel edition.

⁶⁹ This title is omitted in the Beatty MS.

The Names of the Readers with Odd Systems and the Relationships of the Readers⁷⁰

The People of al-Madīnah

'Abd Allāh ibn 'Ayyāsh ibn Abī Rabī'ah al-Makhzūmī belonged to the first generation of the followers [of the Prophet's time] at al-Madīnah and had his own reading. Abū Sa'īd Abān ibn 'Uthmān ibn 'Affān also belonged to the first generation of followers, with his reading. Muslim ibn Ḥabīb al-Nalidī was one of the followers, who also had his reading.

Shaybah ibn Niḍāḥ ibn Surjus ibn Ya'qūb belonged to the second generation [of Islām] at al-Madīnah. He was a protégé of Umm Salāmah, but the only person we know of who quoted Niḍāḥ was his son, because he was ahead of his time in his reading, using his own reading.

There was also Abū Ja'far al-Madanī, whose name was Yazīd ibn Qa'qā', a protégé of 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Ayyāsh ibn Abī Rabī'ah al-'Ataqah, who quoted from Abū Hurayrah, Ibn 'Umar ['Abd Allāh] and other authorities, but had his own reading. He died during the caliphate of Hārūn [al-Rashīd].

The People of Makkah

Ibn Abī 'Umārah was quoted by Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā' and had his own reading; Muḥays, who had his own reading;⁷¹ Dīrbās, also with his reading; Humayd ibn Qays al-A'raj, who had his system.

The People of al-Baṣrah

'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Ishāq al-Ḥaḍramī had his reading; 'Āsim al-Jahdārī with his reading; 'Isā ibn 'Umar al-Thaqafī also had his reading; Ya'qūb al-Ḥaḍramī also had his reading; Abū al-Mundhir Sallāmī had his reading.

The People of al-Kūfah⁷²

Talhah ibn Muṣarrif al-Ayyāmī of Hamadhān was surnamed Abū 'Abd Allāh and was one of the inhabitants of al-Kūfah. When he saw the people coming to him in large numbers, he walked over to al-A'mash to study with him. Then the people [students] transferred to al-A'mash, leaving Talhah, who died in the year one hundred and twelve [A.D. 730/31].⁷³ He had his reading.

⁷⁰ See Glossary for "reader" and "reading."

⁷² This paragraph is omitted in the Flügel edition. For the tribes mentioned, see Durayd, Ishtiqāq, p. 179; Durayd, Geneal., p. 110.

Yahyā ibn Waththāb of al-Kūfah from the [tribe of] Banū Asad ibn Khuzaymah was a protégé of the Banū Kāhil Tribe. He died at al-Kūfah during the year one hundred and three [A.D. 721/22]. He had his own reading.

'Isā ibn 'Umar al-Hamadhānī, not the grammarian,⁷⁴ had his reading. Al-A'mash also had his reading. Later on we shall give detailed information about them. Ibn Abī Laylā had his reading, but mention of him is also postponed until later.

The People of al-Shām⁷⁵

Abū al-Barhusam, whose name was 'Imrān ibn 'Uthmān al-Zubaydī, had his reading. Yazīd al-Barbarī had his reading. Khālīd ibn Ma'dān also had his reading.

The People of al-Yaman

Muḥammad ibn al-Sunayfi' originated in al-Yaman, but lived at al-Baṣrah during the later years of his life. He had his own reading.

Baghdād

Khalaf ibn Hishām ibn Tha'lab al-Bazzār⁷⁶ was one of the people of Fam al-Ṣillh, but he went to the City of Peace [Baghdād], becoming one of its citizens. He attended the lectures of Sharīk, Abū 'Awānah, and Ḥammād ibn Zayd, also studying with Sulaym, the friend of Ḥamzah [ibn Ḥabīb], but he differed with Ḥamzah about certain points. He died during the year two hundred and twenty-nine [A.D. 843]. Among his books there was The Readings.⁷⁷

⁷³ Flügel gives the year as A.H. 103.

⁷⁴ The grammarian was 'Isā ibn 'Umar al-Thaqafī.

⁷⁵ The names in this paragraph are given as in the Beatty MS, which differs from the Flügel edition.

⁷⁷ The title is lacking in the Flügel edition.

Ibn Mujāhid

The last person whose priority was acknowledged in the City of Peace [Baghdād] during his generation was Abū Bakr Aḥmad ibn Mūsā ibn al-‘Abbās ibn Mujāhid, who was unique in his time without competition. With his kindness, wisdom, piety, and knowledge of the Qur’ānic readings and sciences he was a man of noble virtue, refinement of character, wealth of humor, penetrating understanding, and excellence.

He was born in the year two hundred and forty-five [A.D. 859] and he died on Wednesday, the last night of Sha‘bān [the eighth Muslim month] in the year three hundred and twenty-four [A.D. 935]. He was buried the day after his death in the burial place of the women’s quarters in his house in Sūq al-‘Aṭash. Among his books there were:

Large book of readings; small book of readings; The Yā‘āt (The Y’s); The Hā‘āt (The H’s); The Reading of Abū ‘Amr; The Reading of Ibn Kathīr; The Reading of ‘Āṣim; The Reading of Nāfi‘; The Reading of Ḥamzah; The Reading of al-Kisā‘ī; The Reading of ‘Āmir; The Reading of the Prophet, may Allāh bless him and give him peace.

Ibn Shanabūdh

His name was Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Ayyūb ibn Shanabūdh. He was hostile to Abū Bakr [Ibn Mujāhid], not consorting with him. He was religious, nonaggressive, but foolish.⁷⁸ Shaykh Abū Muḥammad Yūsuf ibn al-Ḥasan al-Sirāfi told me that Allāh strengthened him with his father’s skill in modulation, though he had little science. He quoted many readings and wrote various books about them.

He died in the year three hundred and twenty-eight [A.D. 939] in his prison at the sultan’s palace. Abū ‘Alī [Muḥammad ibn ‘Alī] ibn Muqlah flogged him with lashes and when he prayed [to Allāh] that his [Ibn Muqlah’s] hand should be cut off, [Allāh] granted that the hand [of Ibn Muqlah] should be amputated; a rare answer to prayer.⁷⁹

⁷⁸ For the word translated as “nonaggressive,” the Beatty MS is not clear, but Flügel gives salāmah (“peace”).

⁷⁹ For the life of Abū ‘Alī Muḥammad ibn Muqlah and the amputation of his hand, see Khallikān, III, 266–70.

Mention of Some of the Readings of Ibn Shanabūdh⁸⁰

“When the call to prayer is made on the day of congregation, pass on to the remembrance of Allāh.” [Qur’ān 62:9, gives hasten instead of pass on.]

He also read, “And there was in front of them a king, taking every good ship by force.” [Qur’ān 18:79, gives, “And there was behind them a king, taking every ship by force.”]

He read, “Like al-ṣūf al-manfūsh (carded wool).” [Qur’ān 101:5, has, “Like al-‘ihn al-manfūsh.”]

He read, “The hands of Abū Lahab will perish and they have perished. There shall not profit . . .” [Qur’ān 111:1, 2, give, “The hands of Abū Lahab will perish and he will perish. There shall not profit . . .”]

He read, “Today we deliver you by making you strong, that you may be a sign to whoever comes after you.” [Qur’ān 10:92, gives, “And today we deliver you with your body that you may be a sign to whoever comes after you.”]

He read, “And when it fell, the people (al-ins) perceived that the jinn, if they had known the unseen, would not have remained in a state (ḥawl) of painful (alim) torment.” [Qur’ān 34:14, gives, “And when it fell the jinn perceived that if they had known the unseen, they would not have remained in abject (mahin) torment.”]

He read, “By the night when it enshrouds and the day when it is bright, and the male and the female.” [Qur’ān 92:1, gives, “By the night when it enshrouds and the day when it is bright, and what created the male and the female.”]

He read, “The unbelievers have lied and there will be punishment.” [Qur’ān 25:77, gives, “You have lied and there will be punishment.”]

He read, “Unless you do so, there will be confusion on the earth and widespread (arīd) corruption.” [Qur’ān 8:73, gives great (kabir) instead of widespread.]

⁸⁰ The Beatty MS has certain additions and variations which make the difference between this heretical version of Qur’ānic verses and the orthodox one greater than it appears in the Flügel edition. In this passage, the words in italics are the ones which differ from the authorized version of the Qur’ān, while the explanations in brackets are notes not contained in Al-Fihrist. It should be realized that the verse numbers cited for the Qur’ān may not correspond with the numbers of some versions, as the numbering is not always identical.

He read, "And let there be a people among you who invite what is good, commanding what is right, refraining (nāhūn) from what is wrong, and who seek the aid of Allāh in what befalls them, for these are they who are fortunate."⁸¹ [Qur'ān 3:104, gives a different form of the same verb for refraining and omits and who seek the aid of Allāh in what befalls them.]

It is said that he [Ibn Shanabūdh] confessed all of this [variation]. Then he was moved to repentance and used his handwriting in contrition, so that he wrote:

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Ayyūb [Ibn Shanabūdh]: I used to read expressions differing from the version of 'Uthmān ibn 'Affān, which was confirmed by consensus, its recital being agreed upon by the Companions of the Apostle of Allāh. Then it became clear to me that this was wrong, so that I am contrite because of it and from it torn away. Now before Allāh, may His name be glorified for from Him is acquittal, behold the version of 'Uthmān is the correct one, with which it is not proper to differ and other than which there is no way of reading.

Among his books there was How Ibn Kathīr Differed from Abū 'Amr.

Ibn Kāmil Abū Bakr

He was one of the scholars famous for a knowledge of the sciences of the Qur'ān. He was [named] Aḥmad ibn Kāmil ibn Khalaf ibn Shajarah,⁸² was born at Sāmarrā, and was an authority for many sciences. He died ——. Among his books there were:

The Strange in the Qur'ān; The [Qur'ānic] Readings; Nearness, about unveiling of the obscure; An Abridgment of Interpretation, concerning the Miracle of Revelation; Postures [for Prayer]; History; Abridgment of the Law; the large book, [Legal] Conditions; the small book [Legal] Conditions.

Abū Ṭāhir

His name was 'Abd al-Wāḥid ibn 'Umar ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī Hāshim al-Bazzāz. He was an inhabitant of Baghdād, and studied under Abū Bakr ibn Mujāhid, Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad ibn Sahl al-Ushnānī, and Abū 'Uthmān Sa'īd ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Ḍarīr, the reader to whom he was attached. He excelled in connection with elocution and reading,⁸³ knowing also something useful about grammar. He died on Thursday, eight days before the end of Shawwāl [the tenth Muslim month], during the year three hundred and forty-nine [A.D. 960]. Among his books there were:

⁸¹ The Flügel edition inserts here, "And it is Allāh who extracted you from your mothers' wombs."

⁸² This name is not clear in the Beatty MS.

Exceptions of the Seven; The Bā'āt (The B's); The Hā'āt (The H's);⁸⁴ The Reading of al-A'mash; The Reading of Ḥamzah, the Great; The Reading of al-Kisā'ī, the Great;⁸⁵ Epistle about Raising the Voice for 'In the Name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate'; The Distinction between Abū 'Amr and al-Kisā'ī; The Disagreement between Abū 'Amr and al-Kisā'ī; The Triumph of Ḥamzah; The Reading of Ḥafṣ, His Work; The Disagreement between the Adherents of 'Āṣim and Ḥafṣ ibn Sulaymān.⁸⁶

Al-Naqqār

Abū 'Alī al-Ḥasan ibn Dā'ūd, known as al-Naqqār, belonged to the Quraysh Tribe, the Banū Umayyah, and the people of al-Kūfah. He learned from⁸⁷ Abū Muḥammad al-Qāsim, known as al-Khayyāt; al-Khayyāt learned from al-Shamūlī; al-Shamūlī learned from al-A'shā; al-A'shā learned from Abū Bakr;⁸⁸ Abū Bakr learned from 'Āṣim; 'Āṣim learned from Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī; al-Sulamī learned from 'Alī, for whom be peace; and 'Alī learned from the Prophet, for whom be peace.⁸⁹ Al-Naqqār died at al-Kūfah. Among his books there were:

The Reading of al-A'shā; Language, Derivation of Words, and the Sources of Grammar.

⁸³ The text is not clear enough here to be sure the translation "elocution and reading" is correct.

⁸⁴ For the first title in this list, the Flügel text has The Yā'āt ("The Y's"). The Beatty MS omits the third title, Al-Hā'āt, in the text, but gives it in the margin.

⁸⁵ "Great" may refer to the man, but more likely to the size of the book.

⁸⁶ Flügel has "Ḥafṣ and Sulaymān." The translation follows the Beatty MS in giving ibn.

⁸⁷ Qara' 'alā usually implies a teacher-student relationship. Here it might mean "read according to" but more likely means "learned from."

⁸⁸ Probably Abū Bakr Ibn Mujāhid.

⁸⁹ Flügel gives different forms, but the meaning is the same.

Ibn Miqṣam

He was Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Miqṣam ibn Ya'qūb, one of the readers in the City of Peace [Baghdād], close to our time. He was a man learned in language and poetry, who heard Tha'lab lecture and quoted him. He died in the year three hundred and thirty-two [A.D. 944].⁹⁰ Among his books there were:

Lights on the Science (Knowledge) of the Qur'ān; An Introduction to a Knowledge of Poetry; Proofs of Readings; the great book about grammar; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; Stopping and Starting; The Numbers of Completeness; [Qur'ānic] Manuscripts; Knowledge of Himself;⁹¹ the large book, The Seven [Readers] with their Defects; the medium-size book about the Seven [Readers]; another medium-size book; the smallest book, known as Healing of Breasts; about his unique points; The Sessions of Tha'lab.

Al-Naqqāsh Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan al-Anṣārī

He was one of the people of al-Mawṣil, where he was born. He was a [Qur'ānic] reader in the City of Peace [Baghdād], to which he moved and in which he did his reading. Among his books there were:

Explanation of the Strange in the Qur'ān; Elucidation of the Qur'ān and Its Meaning; Reason (The Mind);⁹² Contrary to Reason; Rites [especially of pilgrimage];⁹³ Understanding of the Rites; Accounts of the Storytellers;⁹⁴ The Evil of Envy; Indications of the Prophecy [of Muḥammad]; Sections (Doors) of the Qur'ān; Iram dhāt al-'Imād;⁹⁵ The Medium-Size Compendium; The Smaller Compendium; The Larger Compendium, with the names of the readers and their readings; Explanation of the Strange in the Qur'ān; the large book, The Seven [Readers] and Their Defects; the medium-size book, The Seven; the small book, The Seven; The Great Commentary, with nearly twelve thousand leaves.

⁹² Not included in the Flügel text, but in the Beatty MS.

⁹³ This could also refer to ascetic practices.

⁹⁴ For al-quṣṣās ("storytellers"), see Mez, Renaissance of Islam, p. 344.

⁹⁵ See Qur'ān 89:7.

Al-Naqqāsh died at Baghdād in the year three hundred and fifty-one [A.D. 962]. Ibn Mujāhid heard him give something of the Ḥadīth and this was rare.⁹⁶

Naming of the Books Composed about Commentary of the Qur'ān

The book of al-Bāqir Muḥammad ibn 'Alī, for whom be peace, ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Alī, for whom be peace, who was quoted by Abū al-Jārūd Ziyād ibn al-Mundhir, chief of the Jārūdiyyah [faction] of the Zaydiyyah, about whom we shall make further mention in its proper place.

The book of Ibn 'Abbās,⁹⁷ who was quoted by Mujāhid and through Mujāhid by Ḥumayd ibn Qays as well as by Waraqā', through Abū Najīh from Mujāhid, and also by 'Isā ibn Maymūn through Abū Najīh from Mujāhid.

The commentary of Ibn Tha'lab; the commentary of Abū Ḥamzah al-Thumālī, whose name was Thābit ibn Dīnār, the surname of Dīnār being Abū Ṣafīyah—Abū Ḥamzah was a companion of 'Alī, for whom be peace, one of those who were noble and trustworthy, and also a friend of Abū Ja'far;⁹⁸ the commentary of Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn Jānī in part;⁹⁹ the commentary according to Zayd ibn Aslam in the handwriting of al-Sukkarī; the commentary of Mālik ibn Anas; the commentary of al-Suddī, which we shall mention in what follows; the commentary of Ismā'il ibn Abī Ziyād; the commentary of Dā'ūd ibn Abī Hind; the commentary of Abū Rawq; the commentary of Sa'id ibn Dā'ūd.¹⁰⁰

The commentary of Sufyān ibn 'Uyaynah; the commentary of Nahshal, according to al-Ḍaḥḥāk ibn Muzāḥim; the commentary of Iḥramah, according to Ibn 'Abbās; the commentary of al-Ḥasan ibn Abī al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī; the commentary of Abū Bakr al-Aṣamm, one of the theologians; the commentary of Abū Karīmah Yahyā ibn al-Muḥallab; the commentary of Sīnān ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān the grammarian; the commentary of Sa'id ibn Bashīr, according to Qatādah; the commentary of Muḥammad ibn Thawr, according to Ma'mar following Qatādah; the commentary of al-Kalbī, [called] Muḥammad ibn Sā'ib; the commentary of Muqātil

⁹⁶ This probably means that in his lectures al-Naqqāsh quoted traditions from the Ḥadīth which were not generally known.

⁹⁸ This was probably the fifth Shī'ī imam, Abū Ja'far Muḥammad al-Bāqir.

⁹⁹ This title is included in the Flügel text, but not the Beatty MS.

¹⁰⁰ Flügel gives Rashīd ibn Dād. The Beatty MS gives a garbled word, either Sa'id or Sanad, or something similar, and Dā'ūd. Cf. Biog. Index, Sa'id ibn Dā'ūd.

ibn Sulaymān; the commentary of Ya'qūb al-Dawraqī; the commentary of al-Ḥasan ibn Wāqid, who also wrote the book, The Abrogating and Abrogated.¹⁰¹

The commentary of Muqātil ibn Ḥabbān; the commentary of Sa'īd ibn Jubayr; the commentary of Wakī' ibn al-Jarrāḥ; the commentary of Abū Rajā' Muḥammad ibn Sayf; the commentary of Yūsuf al-Qaṭṭān; the commentary of Muḥammad ibn Abī Bakr al-Muqaddimī; the commentary of Abū Bakr ibn Abī Shaybah; the commentary of Hushaym ibn Bashīr; the commentary of Abū Nu'aym al-Faḍl ibn Dukayn; the commentary of Abū Sa'īd al-Ashajj; the commentary on the verses 'illadhī nazzala fī aqwām bi-A'yānīhum'¹⁰² by Hishām al-Kalbī; the commentary of Abū Ja'far al-Ṭabarī; the commentary of Ibn Abī Dā'ūd al-Sijistānī; the commentary of Abū Bakr ibn Abī al-Thalj.

Book of Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb al-Jubbā'ī; book of Abū al-Qāsim al-Balkhī; book of Abū Muslim Muḥammad ibn Baḥr al-Iṣbahānī; book of Abū Bakr ibn al-Ikhshīd, an abridgment of the book of Abū Ja'far al-Ṭabarī;¹⁰³ An Introduction to Commentary of the Qur'ān, by Ibn al-Imām al-Miṣrī; the commentary of Abū Bakr al-Aṣamm.¹⁰⁴

The Books Composed about Meaning of the Qur'ān and Its Ambiguity and Metaphor¹⁰⁵

Meaning of the Qur'ān, by al-Kisā'ī; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by al-Akhfash Sa'īd ibn Masa'adah; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by al-Ru'āsī; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Yūnus ibn Ḥabīb, the small and large [editions]; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by al-Mubarrad;¹⁰⁶ Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Quṭrub the grammarian; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by al-Farrā', composed for 'Umar ibn Bukayr; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Abū 'Ubaydah; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Abū Fayd Mu'arrāj al-Sadūsī.

¹⁰¹ This additional title is not included in the Beatty MS.

¹⁰² This evidently refers to words of the Qur'ān, but they cannot be identified by means of the concordance.

¹⁰⁴ This title has already been cited and is therefore omitted in the Beatty MS at this point.

¹⁰⁵ For "meaning," see Glossary.

¹⁰⁷ This book and the one following are not in the Beatty MS.

Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Abū Muḥammad al-Yazīdī;¹⁰⁸ Meaning of the Qur'ān, by al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Salamah; The Light of Souls in Ma'ānī of the Qur'ān and What Is Obscure and Ambiguous in It, by al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Salamah; The Beautiful Book on Meaning of the Qur'ān, by al-Akhfash; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Ibn Kaysān, [his book] known as The Tens;¹⁰⁹ Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Ibn al-Anbārī; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by al-Zajjāj; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Khalaf the grammarian; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Tha'lab.

The great book, Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Abū Mu'adh al-Faḍl ibn Khālid the grammarian; Meaning of the Qur'ān, by Abū al-Minhāl 'Uyaynah ibn al-Minhāl, which he composed for Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm al-Ṭāhirī; The Middle Ground between Tha'lab and al-Akhfash, about the meaning, by Ibn Durustūyah;¹¹⁰ The Discipline of Tongues for Qur'ānic Grammar and Meaning, by Abū Bakr ibn Ashtah al-Iṣbahānī; Meaning of the Qur'ān, Its Interpretation and Ambiguity, by Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā ibn Dā'ūd ibn al-Jarrāḥ, the vizier—Abū Bakr ibn Mujāhid and Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Khazzāz aided him with his work.

The Books Composed about the Strange in the Qur'ān¹¹¹

The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Abū 'Ubaydah; The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Mu'arrāj al-Sadūsī; The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Ibn Qutaybah; The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Yazīdī; The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Muḥammad ibn Sallām al-Jumāhī; The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Abū Ja'far ibn Rustum al-Ṭabarī; The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim; The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Muḥammad ibn 'Azīz al-Sijistānī; The Strange in the [Qur'ānic] Manuscripts, by Abū Bakr ibn al-Warrāq;¹¹² The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Abū al-Ḥasan al-'Arūdī; The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Muḥammad ibn Dīnār al-Aḥwal; The Strange in the Qur'ān, by Abū Zayd al-Balkhī; Grammatical Analysis of Thirty Sūrahs of the Qur'ān, by Khālawayh.

¹⁰⁹ The Beatty MS gives al-'Uṣrāt ("Difficulties"), but Flügel is probably correct in giving al-'Asharāt ("Tens"), referring to tens of verses.

¹¹⁰ For spellings of Durustūyah, see Biog. Index.

¹¹¹ "Strange" (gharīb) refers to tribal forms and ambiguous passages in the Qur'ān.

¹¹² This title is mentioned twice in the Flügel edition, but omitted in the Beatty MS.

The Books Composed about the Expressions of the Qur'ān¹¹³

Expressions of the Qur'ān, by al-Farrā'; Expressions of the Qur'ān, by Abū Zayd;¹¹⁴ Expressions of the Qur'ān, by al-Aṣma'i; Expressions of the Qur'ān, by al-Haytham ibn 'Adī; Expressions of the Qur'ān, by Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā al-Qaṣī'i; Expressions of the Qur'ān, by Ibn Durayd, which was not completed.

The Books Composed about [Qur'ānic] Readings¹¹⁵

The Readings, by Khalaf ibn Hishām al-Bazzār; The Readings, by Ibn Sa'dān; The Readings, by Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim; The Readings, by Abū Ḥātim al-Sijistānī; The Readings, by Tha'lab; The Strange in the Readings, by Tha'lab; The Readings, by Ibn Qutaybah; The Readings, by Ibn Mujāhid, the large version; The Readings, by Ibn Mujāhid, the small version; The Readings, by Hushaym ibn Bashīr; The Readings, by Abū al-Ṭayyib ibn Ashnās; The Readings, by 'Alī ibn 'Umar al-Dāraquṭnī; The Readings, by Yaḥyā ibn Ādam; The Readings, by al-Wāqidi; The Readings, by Naṣr ibn 'Alī; The Readings, by Ibn Kāmil, which he did not finish; The Readings, by al-Faḍl ibn Shādhān; The Readings, by Abū Ṭāhir; The Readings, by Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā';¹¹⁶ The Readings, by Hārūn ibn Ḥātim of al-Kūfah; The Readings, by al-'Abbās ibn al-Faḍl al-Anṣārī; Proofs for Reading, by Ibn Durustūyah.¹¹⁷

The Books Composed about the Consonant Points and Vowel Signs of the Qur'ān¹¹⁸

Book of al-Khalīl, about consonant points; book of Muḥammad ibn 'Isā, about consonant points; book of al-Yazīdī, about consonant points; book of Ibn al-Anbārī, about consonant points and vowel signs; book of Abū Ḥātim al-Sijistānī, about consonant points and vowel signs; book of ¹¹³ The Arabic word translated "expressions" is luḡhāt, which can mean "languages," "colloquialisms," "phrases," "idioms," or "expressions."

¹¹⁵ See Glossary for "reading."

¹¹⁶ The Beatty MS omits this book.

¹¹⁷ For spellings of Durustūyah, see Biog. Index.

al-Dīnawarī, [surnamed] Abū Ḥanīfa, about consonant points and vowel signs with lists and categories (circles).¹¹⁹

The Books Composed about the Lāmāt (the L's) of the Qur'ān¹²⁰

The Lāmāt (The L's) by Dā'ūd ibn Abī Ṭibah; The Lāmāt (The L's), by Muḥammad ibn Sa'id; The Lāmāt (The L's), by Ibn al-Anbārī; The Lāmāt (The L's), by al-Akhfash Sa'id.

The Books Composed about Stopping and Starting in the Qur'ān

Stopping and Starting, according to Ḥamzah; Stopping and Starting, according to al-Farrā'; Stopping and Starting, by Khalaf; Stopping and Starting, by Ibn Sa'dān; Stopping and Starting, by Ḍirār ibn Ṣurad; Stopping and Starting, by Abū 'Umar al-Dūrī; Stopping and Starting, by Hishām ibn 'Abd Allāh; Stopping and Starting, by Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Yazīdī; Stopping and Starting, by Ibn al-Anbārī; Stopping and Starting, by Ibn Kaysān; book by al-Ja'd about stopping and starting; Stopping and Starting, by Sulaymān ibn Yaḥyā al-Ḍabbī, [surnamed] Abū Ayyūb.

Books Composed about Discrepancies of the [Qur'ānic] Manuscripts

The Discrepancies between the Manuscripts of the People of al-Madīnah, al-Kūfah, and al-Baṣrah, according to al-Kisā'i; book of Khalaf, Discrepancies of the Manuscripts; Discrepancies of the People of al-Kūfah, al-Baṣrah, and Syria concerning the Manuscripts, by al-Farrā'; Discrepancies between the Manuscripts, by Abū Dā'ūd al-Sijistānī; book of al-Madā'inī about the discrepancies between the manuscripts and the compiling of the Qur'ān; Discrepancies between the Manuscripts of Syria, al-Hijāz, and al-'Irāq, by Ibn 'Amir al-Yaḥsubī; book of Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Iṣbahānī about discrepancy of the manuscripts.

The Books Composed about the Full Stop

Book of Aḥmad ibn 'Isā al-Lū'lū'i; book of al-Akhfash Sa'id; book of Nuṣayr;¹²¹ book of Ya'qūb al-Ḥaḍramī; book of Nāfi' ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān; book of Rawḥ ibn 'Abd al-Mu'min.

¹¹⁹ The Flügel text confuses the last two titles.

¹²⁰ The Qur'ān was so holy that every detail was important. For that reason scholars wrote about the usage, forms, numbers, and so on, about points even as specialized as the significance of one letter of the alphabet. The last title in this paragraph is omitted in the Beatty MS.

¹²¹ Flügel has Naṣr, but the Beatty MS gives Nuṣayr, evidently Ibn Yūsuf.

The Books Composed about the Points of Agreement in the Expressions and Meaning of the Qur'ān

Book of Abū al-'Abbās al-Mubarrad; book of Abū 'Umar al-Dūrī.¹²²

The Books Composed about Mutashābihah of the Qur'ān

Book of Mahmūd ibn al-Ḥasan; book of Khalaf ibn Hishām; book of al-Qaṭī'i; book of Nāfi'; book of Ḥamzah;¹²³ book of 'Alī ibn al-Qāsim al-Rashīdī; book of Ja'far ibn Ḥarb al-Mu'tazilī; book of Muqātil ibn Sulaymān; book of Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'i; book of Abū al-Hudhayl al-'Allāf.

The Books Composed about the Spelling in the [Qur'ānic] Manuscripts

Book of Yahyā ibn al-Ḥārith; book of Ibn Shabīb; book of Aḥmad ibn Ibrāhīm al-Warrāq; book of Yaqūb ibn Abī Shaybah.

The Books Composed about the Disconnected and the Joined in the Qur'ān¹²⁴

Book of al-Kisā'i; book of al-Sarī; book of Ḥamzah ibn Ḥabīb; book of 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Amīr al-Yaḥsubī.

The Books Composed about the Sections of the Qur'ān

Book of Abu 'Umar al-Dūrī; book of Ḥumayd ibn Qays al-Hilālī; book of Ḥamzah, The Sevenths of the Qur'ān; book of al-Kisā'i; book of Sulaymān ibn 'Isā; Book of the Thirty Sections, according to Abū Bakr ibn 'Ayyāsh.

The Books Composed about the Virtues of the Qur'ān

Book of Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim ibn Sallām; book of Muḥammad ibn 'Uthmān ibn Abī Shaybah; book of Aḥmad ibn al-Mu'adhdhal; book of ¹²² The Beatty MS included another book after this, but the text has been effaced at this point.

¹²³ This was probably Ibn Ḥabīb.

Hishām ibn 'Ammār; book of Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Dūrī; book of Abū Shubayl; book of Ubayy ibn Ka'b al-Anṣārī; book of al-Haddād; book of 'Umar ibn al-Ḥaytham al-Kūfī; book of 'Alī ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Faḍḍāl of the Shī'ah; book of 'Alī ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Hāshim, about the rare forms of the Qur'ān; book of Abū al-Naḍr al-'Ayyāshī of the Shī'ah.

The Books Composed about the Number of Verses in the Qur'ān

The People of al-Madīnah:¹²⁵

The first book by Nāfi' about the number of the verses of al-Madīnah; the second book of numbers according to Nāfi'; The Numbers, by al-'Abṣī; the first book of Ibn 'Ayyāsh about the numbers of al-Madīnah; the last book of Ismā'il ibn Abī Kathīr about the [numbers of] al-Madīnah; book of Nāfi' about the tenths of the Qur'ān;¹²⁶ The Numbers, by al-Khuzā'i; The Numbers, by 'Aṭā' ibn Yasar; The Letters of the Qur'ān, according to Khalaf al-Bazzār.

The People of al-Kūfah:

The Numbers, by Ḥamzah al-Zayyāt; The Numbers, by Khalaf; The Numbers, by Muḥammad ibn 'Isā; The Numbers, by al-Kisā'i.

The People of al-Basrah:

The Numbers, by Abū al-Mu'āfa; The Numbers, according to 'Aṣim al-Jahdarī; book of al-Ḥasan [al-Baṣṭī] ibn Abī al-Ḥasan about the numbers.

The People of Syria:

Book of Yahyā ibn al-Ḥārith al-Dhamārī; book of Khālid ibn Ma'dān; book of Wakī' about the disagreement between the school of thought of Syria and other schools, in connection with the numbers [of Qur'ānic verses].

The Books Composed about the Abrogating and Abrogated in the Qur'ān¹²⁷

Book of Ḥajjāj al-A'war; book of 'Abd al-Rahmān ibn Zayd; book of Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm al-Mu'addab; book of Ibrāhīm al-Ḥarbī; book of ¹²⁵ The Arabic for "people" is ahl. The "verses of al-Madīnah" are the verses of the Qur'ān revealed to the Prophet when he was in the city of al-Madīnah.

¹²⁷ See Glossary for "the abrogating and the abrogated."

Abū Sa'īd the Grammarian [al-Naḥwī]; book of al-Ḥārith ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān; book of Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim ibn Sallām; book of Ibn Abī Dā'ūd al-Sijistānī; book of Muqātil ibn Sulaymān; book of Ja'far ibn Mubashshir; book of Ismā'il al-Yazīdī; book of Ismā'il ibn Abī Ziyād; book of Abū Muslim al-Kajjī; book of Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal; book of al-Zubayr ibn Aḥmad; book of Abū al-Qāsim al-Ḥallāj; book of Ibn al-Kalbī; book of Hishām ibn 'Alī ibn Hishām.

The Books Composed about the [Form] Hā and Its Referring Back¹²⁸

Book of Abū 'Umar al-Dūrī.

The Books Composed about the Revelation of the Qur'ān

Book of al-Ḥasan [al-Baṣrī] ibn Abī al-Ḥasan; book of 'Ikramah according to Ibn 'Abbās.

The Books Composed about the Judgments of the Qur'ān¹²⁹

Judgments of the Qur'ān, by Ismā'il ibn Ishāq, the judge; Judgments of the Qur'ān, according to the code of Mālik; Judgments of the Qur'ān, according to Aḥmad ibn al-Mu'adhdhal; Judgments of the Qur'ān, by Abū Bakr al-Rāzī according to the code of the people of al-'Irāq; Judgments of the Qur'ān, by the Imam Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Idrīs al-Shāfi'ī; Uniqueness of the Judgments of the Qur'ān, by Yaḥyā ibn Ādam; Judgments of the Qur'ān, by al-Kalbī, quoting Ibn al-'Abbās; An Affirmation of Holding to the Judgments of the Qur'ān, by Yaḥyā ibn Aktham; Judgments of the Qur'ān, by Abū Thawr Ibrāhīm ibn Khālīd; Judgments of the Qur'ān, by Dā'ūd ibn 'Alī. An Exposition according to the Judgments of the Qur'ān—the author is unknown and being inquired about.

The Books Composed about the Meaning of Miscellaneous Matters in the Qur'ān

Book of Aḥmad ibn 'Alī al-Mihrajānī, the reader, entitled Answers of the ¹²⁸ Hā is a feminine pronoun which often refers back to a feminine noun appearing earlier in the sentence. This paragraph is omitted in the Flügel edition.

¹²⁹ This paragraph is omitted by the Beatty MS. "Judgments" may imply decrees or ordinances forming a divine basis for the law; see "Ḥukm," Enc. Islām, II, 332; Qur'ān 13:41. For the code of Mālik see Chap. VI, sect. 1.

Qur'ān; Leaving the Contradictions in the Qur'ān, according to al-Firyābī; Metaphor, by Abū 'Ubaydah; Arrangement of the Qur'ān, by al-Jāhīz; book of Quṭrub about which of the verses of the Qur'ān are questioned by the heretics; Questions in the Qur'ān, by al-Jāhīz; The Created, by Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'ī; The Letters, a composition of 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Abī Ḥammād al-Kūfī; book of Bishr ibn al-Mu'tamir on allegory of the Qur'ān; Sublimity of the Qur'ān, about its arrangement and composition, by Muḥammad ibn Yazīd al-Wāsiṭī, the Mu'tazilī.

Questions Scattered through the Qur'ān, according to Abū Shuqayr;¹³⁰ Arrangement of the Qur'ān, by Ibn al-Ikshīd; Creation of the Qur'ān, by Ibn al-Rāwandī; The Lights (Al-Anwār), by Abū Muqsim;¹³¹ An Exposition about Some of the Poetry and the Eloquence of the Qur'ān, by al-Ḥasan ibn Ja'far al-Barjalī; Book of Abū Zayd al-Balkhī about the Sūrah of Praise [Sūrah 1] as a substitute for the rest of the Qur'ān; The Abrogating and the Abrogated, by al-Ja'd;¹³² Judgments of the Qur'ān, by Abū Bakr al-Rāzī; The Phrases of the Qur'ān, by a group of scholars; The Arrangement of the Qur'ān, by Abū 'Alī al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī ibn Naṣr; Similitudes (Proverbs) by Ibn al-Junayd.

*This is the end of what we have composed of the first chapter of the book Al-Fihrist, up to the time of the appearance of the new moon on Saturday of Sha'bān [the eighth Muslim month] during the year three hundred and seventy-seven. We pray Allāh for continuance of health, safety, and plenty for him for whom we have written it, as well as for ourselves. By His grace He will grant this, inspiring us by His favor and by His bounty He will assign us to His obedience. For Allāh has taken account of us and excellent is this guardian; may Allāh bless the chosen of His creation, Muḥammad and his family.*¹³³

¹³⁰ This book is not mentioned in the Beatty MS.

¹³¹ This book and the following book are not mentioned in the Beatty MS. As the authors of these books and the one in the preceding note evidently lived in the tenth century, the titles may have been inserted after the Beatty MS was transcribed. Al-Anwār probably refers to the numerous mentions of light in the Qur'ān, although it may have a more figurative meaning. Flügel gives Abū Muqsim, but this may be a mistake; see Ibn Muqsim in the Biog. Index.

¹³² This book and the four which follow are not in the Beatty MS.

¹³³ The Muslim year 377 started on May 3, A.D. 987. The last sentence of this passage is in the Beatty MS, but not in the Flügel edition. It is possible that the phrase "for whom we have written it" should be translated, "for what we have written for him." The pronoun "him" may refer to some patron or to Allāh. On the margin of the Beatty MS there is the following: "We found in the original manuscript (al-dustūr) what this states."

The Names and Mention of a Group of Recent Readers¹³⁴

Ibn al-Munādī

He was Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn Ja'far ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Abī Dā'ūd, one of the inhabitants of Baghdād, who lived in the Ruṣāfah [Quarter]. He used to Arabicize the titles of his books, competing in eloquence of composition, which brought him forth as an authority.¹³⁵ He was learned in [Qur'ānic] readings and other things, the author of more than one hundred and twenty books about different sciences, most of them sciences of the Qur'ān. He died in the year three hundred and thirty-four [A.D. 945/46], and among his books there were:

Disagreement of the Numbers [referring to verses of the Qur'ān]; Types of Prayers Seeking Protection from Plagues and Pests.

Al-Naqqāsh, Another¹³⁶

He was 'Alī ibn Murrah, surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan, one of the people of Baghdād, who lived in Jihār on Sūq al-Farsh.¹³⁷ When he died he left among his books:

Al-Kisā'i; Ḥamzah; The Eight Readers in Addition to the Seven, quoting Khalaf ibn Hishām al-Bazzār.¹³⁸

Bakkār

Bakkār ibn Aḥmad ibn Bakkār, surnamed Abū 'Isā, was a [Qur'ānic] reader in the City of Peace [Baghdād], who died in the year three hundred and fifty-two [A.D. 963]. Among his books there were:

The Reading of al-Kisā'i; The Reading of Ḥamzah.

¹³⁴ This passage was probably added to the original composition after Chapter I had been completed.

¹³⁵ In the Beatty MS the word given as "authority" is al-istaqāl, difficult to translate in this passage.

¹³⁶ The word "another" evidently points out that this man is not the well-known Abū Bakr Muḥammad al-Naqqāsh.

¹³⁸ The Beatty MS and Flügel texts for this last book differ, but this rendering seems to be correct.

Ibn al-Wāthiq

Abū Muḥammad 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn al-Wāthiq studied with al-Ḍabbī the reading of Ḥamzah. He lived in the city of Abū Ja'far al-Manṣūr¹³⁹ and when he died, among his books there were:

The Reading of Ḥamzah; The Ordinances; The Commentary.

Abū al-Faraj¹⁴⁰

A friend of Ibn Shanabūdh.

The Second Part of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars among the ancients and moderns who composed books, with the names of the books which they composed. The composition of Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Nadīm, Ishāq being known as Abū Ya'qūb al-Warrāq.¹ In it is the second chapter.

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate, in whom I confide and to whom I pray for aid of the book Al-Fihrist, in three sections, with accounts of the grammarians and scholars of language, with the titles of their books.

The First Section

with opening words about grammar, accounts of the grammarians and language scholars of al-Baṣrah, and also of the Arabian masters of literary style, with the titles of their books.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: Most of the scholars think that grammar was derived from Abū al-Aswad al-Du'alī and that Abū al-Aswad learned it from the Commander of the Faithful 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, for whom may there be the blessing of Allāh. Others say that Naṣr ibn 'Āṣim al-Du'alī, also called al-Laythī, developed grammar.²

I read what was written in the handwriting of Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn Muqlah, that Tha'lab said: "Ibn Lahīyah quoted Abū al-Naḍr, saying, 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Hurmuz was the first person to establish grammatical Arabic. He was a [Qur'anic] reader who knew more about the genealogies and historical traditions of the Quraysh than anybody else.' " The Shaykh Abū Sa'īd al-Sirāfi, with whom may Allāh be well pleased, confirmed this and also said to me, "Naṣr ibn 'Āṣim al-Laythī was one of the [Qur'anic] readers and masters of literary style from whom Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā and the people learned."

Abū Ja'far [Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad]³ ibn Rustum al-Ṭabarī said: "Naḥw (grammar) is called naḥw because when Abū al-Aswad al-Du'alī spoke to 'Alī, for whom may there be peace, he ['Alī] mentioned something about the roots of grammar. Then Abū al-Aswad said, 'I asked his leave to do naḥw (similarly) to something he had done,' so he called it naḥw."

People have disagreed about the reason which caused Abū al-Aswad to develop grammar as he did. Abū 'Ubaydah said:

Abū al-Aswad derived grammar from 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, for whom may there be peace, but he did not disclose to anyone what he had learned from 'Alī, whose countenance may Allāh honor,⁴ until Ziyād appointed him for the composition of something to serve as a guide for the people, so that they could understand the book of Allāh. Abū al-Aswad asked to be excused from this task, until one time when he heard a reader recite,

⁴ This phrase is omitted in the Beatty MS.

"Allāh is quit of the idolaters and of His Apostle."⁵ Then he said, "I never supposed that the condition of the people would come to this!" So he returned to Ziyād and said, "I will do what the emir has ordered. Let there be sought for me a scribe who is intelligent and obedient to what I say." They brought, therefore, a scribe from the 'Abd al-Kays Tribe, but he [Abū al-Aswad] was not satisfied with him. Then they came with another one, about whom Abū al-'Abbās al-Mubarrad said, "I regard him to be one of those [who are intelligent]." So Abū al-Aswad said [to the new scribe], "If you see that I open my mouth in pronouncing a letter, place a mark above, on top of it. If I close my mouth [making a u sound], place a mark in front of the letter, and if I split [my lips] double the mark."⁶ So this was the marking system of Abū al-Aswad.

Abū Sa'id, with whom may Allāh be well pleased, said:

It is also related that the reason for this [grammar] was the encounter of Sa'd with Abū al-Aswad. He [Sa'd] was a Persian from Nūbandajān⁷ who went to al-Baṣrah with a group of his people. When they went to Qudāmah ibn Maz'ūn, announcing that they had accepted Islām under his auspices, they became his protégés. While he was leading his horse this Sa'd passed by Abū al-Aswad, who said, "What's the matter with you, oh, Sa'd, why don't you ride?" He replied, "My horse is strong (ḍalī)."⁸ He meant "lame" (ẓālī). As he spoke some people who were there laughed at him. Then Abū al-Aswad said, "These protégés have sought Islām and embraced it, becoming our brothers, but we have not taught them speech." So he composed a chapter on the subject and object.

A Point Indicating that the First Person to Make a Statement about Grammar Was Abū al-Aswad al-Du'ālī

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]:⁸ In the city of al-Ḥadīthah⁹ there was a man named Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn, known as Ibn Abī Ba'rah, a collector of books. I have never seen anyone else with a library as extensive as the one which he had. It

⁶ The Beatty MS has "make it two marks." Flügel gives "under the letter."

⁸ For this passage, compare Khallikān, I, 666 n. 7.

⁹ Mas'ūdī, V, 230, speaks of al-Ḥadīthah near al-Mawṣil, while Balādhurī, Origins, p. 280, mentions a town of this name on the Euphrates. See also Yāqūt, Geog., II, 222 ff.

certainly contained Arabic books about grammar, philology, and literature, as well as ancient works. I met this man a number of times and, although he was friendly with me, he was wary and tight with his possessions, fearing the Banū Ḥamdān.¹⁰ He took out for me a large case containing about three hundred *rafl*¹¹ of double parchments, deeds, pages of paper from Egypt, Chinese paper, the paper of Tihāmah, adam skins, and the paper of Khurāsān.¹²

Among these there were *ta'liqāt*¹³ from the Arabs, individual poems from their poetry, something of grammar, anecdotes, historical traditions, names, genealogies, and other things connected with the sciences of the Arabs and other peoples. He [Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn] mentioned that a man from al-Kūfah, whose name I have forgotten, was keen about collecting ancient writings. When his death drew near, he assigned these to Muḥammad al-Ḥusayn because of mutual friendship and courtesies shown to him, and also because of their common sect, for he was a Shī'ī.

When I looked over these manuscripts, opening them, I beheld something wonderful, even though time had worn them, tending to efface and alter them. In each section, leaf, or roll, there were notes in the handwritings of the scholars, one following another, telling to whom each penmanship belonged. Under every statement there was another note, with five or six testimonials of the scholars, grouped together in their various handwritings. Among them I saw a [Qur'ānic] manuscript written with the penmanship of Khālīd ibn Abī Hayyāj, the friend of 'Alī, for whom may there be peace. Then [I read], "This manuscript fell into the hands of Abū Abd Allāh ibn Ḥānī, may Allāh have mercy for him."

I saw there the handwritings of the two imams, al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn, for whom may there be peace. I also found trusts and contracts in the handwriting of the Commander of the Faithful, ¹⁰ The feudal chiefs who established a dynasty at Aleppo under Sayf al-Dawlah, A.D. 944 to 967, liable to appropriate the library.

¹¹ In Richardson, Dictionary, a rafl is given as a weight of 12 ounces; in modern Lebanon it is over 5 pounds, and in Egypt even more.

¹³ This can mean "financial accounts," "supplements," or "marginal notes."

'Alī,¹⁴ for whom may there be peace, as well as with the penmanships of others who were scribes of the Prophet, may Allāh bless him and give him peace.

There were notes about grammar and language written in the handwritings of scholars like Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā', Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī, al-Aṣma'i, Ibn al-A'rābī, Sibawayh, al-Farrā', and al-Kisā'i, as well as with the penmanships of authorities of the Ḥadīth, such as Sufyān ibn 'Uyaynah, Sufyān [ibn Sa'id] al-Thawri, al-Awzā'i, and others besides them.

In one of his writings I saw something which showed that grammar came from Abū al-Aswad. It was on four leaves, which I judged were China paper. This was the indication on it: "Remarks about the Subject and Object, by Abū al-Aswad, may the mercy of Allāh rest upon him." It was written in the handwriting of Yahyā ibn Ya'mar. Under these notes there was written in an ancient form of penmanship, "This is the handwriting of 'Allān the Grammarian," under which there was, "This is the handwriting of al-Naḍr ibn Shumayl."

Then when this man [Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn] died, we lost the case and its contents, hearing no news about it and seeing nothing more of its contents, except for this manuscript, in spite of my many inquiries about the matter.¹⁵

Naming of Those Who Learned Grammar from Abū al-Aswad al-Du'ālī

A group of scholars learned from Abū al-Aswad, among whom there were Yahyā ibn Ya'mar; 'Anbasah ibn Ma'dān, who was 'Anbasah al-Fil ('Anbasah of the Elephant); and Maymūn ibn al-Aqrān. Some of the scholars say that Naṣr ibn 'Āṣim also studied with Abū al-Aswad.

Yahyā ibn Ya'mar was a member of the 'Adwān ibn Qays ibn 'Aylān ibn Muḍar, and was said to be attached to the Banū Layth ibn

¹⁴ The name 'Alī is omitted in the Beatty MS.

¹⁵ Because this happened, this probably means that the author of Al-Fihrist only had time to study one of the manuscripts in the old case carefully, hoping to study the others at some later time.

Kinānah.¹⁶ He was trustworthy as well as learned, and because he had met Ibn 'Abbās, Ibn 'Umar, and others, he was quoted in connection with the Ḥadīth. Thus Qatādah quoted him.

'Anbasah ibn Ma'dān al-Fahrī was one of the people of Maysān, but he went to live at al-Baṣrah. He was named after the elephant (al-fil), because his father, Ma'dān, received the elephant of Ziyād with maintenance for it, being named after it.¹⁷

After 'Anbasah there was 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Ishāq al-Ḥaḍramī, a protégé of Ḥaḍramawt whom al-Farazdaq satirized, saying:

Although 'Abd Allāh (the Slave of God) is the mawlā of his satire, Nevertheless, 'Abd Allāh is mawlā mawāliyā.¹⁸

'Isā ibn 'Umar al-Thaqafī was an outstanding man in his generation. Abū Sa'id,¹⁹ to whom may Allāh be merciful, told me that Abū Muzāhim said that Ibn Abī Sa'id recounted that Abū 'Uthmān al-Māzinī stated that al-Aṣma'i passed on from 'Isā ibn 'Umar [al-Thaqafī] who said:

While we were walking with al-Ḥasan [al-Baṣrī], 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Ishāq [al-Ḥaḍramī] being with us, al-Ḥasan said, "Catch these ideas²⁰ for they are rising." So 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Ishāq brought out his tablets and wrote on them saying, "We have received benefits from you, oh, Abū Sa'id [al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī], with eagerness."

Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā' was also [one of those who learned grammar from Abū al-Aswad al-Du'ālī].

¹⁶ For these tribes, see Durayd, Geneal., pp. 105, 162, 163.

¹⁷ Ziyād ibn Abīh, the governor of al-Ṭrāq, gave the elephant to Ma'dān. For Maysān, see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 714.

¹⁸ Khallikān, IV, 288, 289, throws much light on this passage. The words of al-Farazdaq are there translated as:

If 'Abd Allāh was a [simple] mawlā, I should satirize him,
But 'Abd Allāh is a mawlā of a family which are mawālās.

Mawlā may mean "lord," "protégé," or "slave," though here it probably means protégé; see Glossary.

¹⁹ This was the author's friend and almost certainly his teacher, the shaykh Abū Sa'id al-Ḥasan al-Sirāfī.

²⁰ Literally translated, this phrase says, "Attract these spirits," but the passage evidently indicates that some ideas rose in al-Ḥasan's mind which he wished to have taken down in writing.

An Account of 'Isā ibn 'Umar al-Thaqafi

He belonged to the generation of Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā' and was 'Isā ibn 'Umar al-Thaqafi and not 'Isā ibn 'Umar al-Hamadhānī, who was one of the people of al-Kūfah. He was quoted by the [Qur'ānic] readers, being a man of al-Baṣrah and one of the leading grammarians of al-Baṣrah. He learned from 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Ishāq [al-Ḥaḍramī] and other persons. Al-Khalīl ibn Aḥmad [in turn] studied under 'Isā ibn 'Umar [al-Thaqafi].

He, I mean 'Isā, was blind, but was one of those at al-Baṣrah who recited the Qur'ān. He died during the year one hundred and forty-nine [A.D. 766/67]. Among his books there were:

The Compilation; The Perfected (Completed).

The judge, Abū Sa'īd [al-Ḥasan al-Sirāfi], may Allāh be merciful to him, recited to us [a verse] by al-Khalīl, commemorating 'Isā ibn 'Umar and his two books:

Grammar would not have been entire and complete,
If it had not been for what 'Isā ibn 'Umar initiated,
That is, completion, and this compilation,
The two of them a sun and a moon for the people.

People lost these two books long ago. They have not fallen into the hands of anyone I know of and nobody has reported seeing them.

There is also Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā', about whom I have already given an account in the passage about [Qur'ānic] readers in the first chapter.

Account of Yūnus ibn Ḥabīb

I read what was written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Khazzāz, who said, "I think that Yūnus ibn Ḥabīb Abū al-Raḥmān was a protégé of the Banū Layth ibn Bakr ibn 'Abd Manāh ibn Kinānah Tribe." He went on to say, "I am not sure about this, but he used to be with those people. I am also uncertain as to whether or not he was a protégé." Abū Sa'īd [al-Sirāfi], to whom may Allāh be merciful, mentioned that he was surnamed Abū Muḥammad and that he was a protégé of the Ḍabbah Tribe.²¹

²¹ For the tribes, see Durayd, Geneal., pp. 105, 117.

The author of Mafākhīr al-'Ajam said that his origin was Persian, among the inhabitants of al-Jabbul,²² and that he boasted about this. He knew more than anybody else about grammatical inflections and it is related about him that he said, "I do not heed (attend the lectures of) 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Ishāq [al-Ḥaḍramī] but I once asked him, 'Is anyone known to pronounce [the word as] al-ṣawīq instead of al-sawīq (pounded grain)?' He replied, 'It is the vernacular of the 'Amr ibn Tamīm Tribe.'"

Yūnus was a companion of Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā', his circle (class) being at al-Baṣrah. He was concerned with seekers after learning, men of letters, masters of literary style, and representatives of the Bedouins.

I read what was written in the handwriting of Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn Muqlah, that Abū al-Abbās Tha'lab said that Yūnus lived for over a hundred years, being free from senility and dying in the year one hundred and eighty-three [A.D. 799/800].

In the handwriting of Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm al-Mawṣili [it is written]: "Yūnus lived eighty-eight years; he did not marry or take a concubine, nor did he have any passion except for the seeking of learning and discourse with men." Among his books there were:

Meaning of the Qur'ān; Languages (Vernaculars); the large book about rare forms [in the Qur'ān]; Similes (Proverbs); the small book of rare forms.

Account of al-Khalīl ibn Aḥmad

He was Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Khalīl ibn Aḥmad. [Aḥmad ibn Zuhayr] ibn Abī Khaythamah said that Aḥmad, the father of al-Khalīl, was the first person in Islām to be named Aḥmad. His origin was from the Azd Clan of the Farāhīd Tribe, so that Yūnus [ibn Ḥabīb] used to call him Farhūdī, like the form of Ardūsī.²³ He excelled in deriving points of grammar and verifying the rules. He was the first person who evolved prosody by which he strengthened Arab poetry. He was indifferent to the world, consecrated to learning, and an indigent poet. Al-Khalil died at al-Baṣrah during the year one hundred and seventy [A.D. 786], when seventy-four years old, and one of the books which he composed was the book Al-'Ayn.²⁴

I have read what was written in the handwriting of Abū al-Faṭḥ ibn al-Naḥwī, the associate of the Banū al-Furāt Tribe,²⁵ who was truthful, discerning, and analytical:

Abū Bakr ibn Durayd happened to see the Kitāb al-'Ayn at al-Baṣrah during the year two hundred and forty-eight [A.D. 862/63]. A warrāq from Khurāsān brought it and it was in forty-eight sections. He sold it for fifty gold coins (s., dīnār).²⁶ This book was reported to have been in Khurāsān in the library of al-Ṭāhirīyah,²⁷ until the warrāq took it. It is also said that al-Khalil wrote Kitāb al-'Ayn and then went on the pilgrimage, leaving the book in Khurāsān. Then he transferred it to al-'Irāq from the library of al-Ṭāhirīyah.

No one has quoted this book [directly] from al-Khalil, nor has anything been quoted from the traditions definitely [asserting] that he wrote it. It is said that al-Layth, a descendant of Naṣr ibn Sayyār, was for a short time a friend of al-Khalil and that al-Khalil composed it [the book] for him, so that he learned the system [of al-Khalil]. Then when death suddenly came to al-Khalil, al-Layth completed it.

Its letters are those which come from the throat and palate. They start with the 'ayn, then ḥā', hā', khā', ghayn, qāf, kāf, jīm, shīn, ṣād, ḍād, sīn, rā', ṭā', dāl, tā', zā', dhāl, thā', zā', lām, nūn, fā', mīm, ———, alif, yā', wāw.²⁸

Another Account of Kitāb al-'Ayn

Abū Muḥammad ibn *Durustūyah*²⁹ recalls that he heard about

²⁴ Kitāb al-'Ayn, the first Arabic dictionary.

²⁵ See Durayd, Geneal., p. 208 bottom.

²⁷ Al-Ṭāhirīyah was probably an official residence or institution named for Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn; see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 494.

²⁹ See the Biog. Index for spelling of this name.

Kitāb al-'Ayn through the following sequence: Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Mahdī al-Kasrawī said:

Muḥammad ibn Manṣūr, known as al-Zāj al-Muḥaddath, related to me, saying that al-Layth ibn al-Muḥaffar ibn Naṣr ibn Sayyār said, "I used to be with al-Khalil ibn Aḥmad, to whom may Allāh be merciful, and one day he told me, 'If a man wants to, he can write the letters alif, bā', tā', thā', and others like them, so as to include all of the Arabic words and to form a source (book) which has nothing lacking.'" He [al-Layth] went on to say, "I asked him, 'How can that be?' He replied, 'It [Arabic word formation] is composed of words of two, three, four, or five [consonants], with no known words any longer than that.'"

Then al-Layth said, "I began to understand him as the matter was explained to me. But instead of being satisfied with what had been described, I returned to [be with] him in connection with this matter for a few days, until he fell ill and I went on the pilgrimage. I continued to be solicitous about him, fearing lest with his illness he might die, so that what he had explained to me might be lost. But when I returned from the pilgrimage, going to him, behold he had composed [the dictionary descriptions] for all of the letters in the first part of the book. Then he dictated to me the things in it which were to be preserved and the points which were doubtful. He would say to me, 'Ask about this' and, if the point was correct, he would confirm it. Thus I compiled the book."

'Alī ibn Mahdī [al-Kasrawī] said, "From Muḥammad ibn Manṣūr I obtained a copy of this book, that is, the Kitāb al-'Ayn. Muḥammad ibn Manṣūr copied it from al-Layth ibn al-Muḥaffar."

This al-Layth was a legal expert and ascetic, whom al-Ma'mūn tried to appoint as a judge, but he did not succeed in doing this. He was quoted by Abū al-Haydhām Kilāb ibn Ḥamzah al-'Uqaylī.³⁰

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: The manuscript in the possession of Da'laj was [originally] the manuscript of Ibn al-'Alā' al-Sijistānī. Ibn Durustūyah recalls that Ibn al-'Alā' was one of the persons who together used to listen to [the reading of] this book.

³⁰ This short paragraph is not in the Beatty MS. In the Flügel edition, the name Haydhām is spelled incorrectly.

A group of scholars corrected the errors and mistakes in the Kitāb al-ʿAyn of al-Khalīl, as [for instance] when something mentioned as obsolete was really in use, or a thing mentioned as extant was obsolete. Among these there were Abū Ṭālib al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Salamah, ʿAbd Allāh ibn Muḥammad al-Karmānī, Abū Bakr ibn Durayd, and al-Hunāʾī al-Dawsī.³¹ Thus a group of scholars were helpful to him, showing the errors one to another. If Allāh so wills, we shall deal with this matter in its proper connection, when we speak of these men in their place in the book.

Al-Khalīl also wrote some other books:

Chanting; Prosody; Witnesses; Points and Signs [consonant points and vowel signs]; Death of the ʿAyn;³² Harmony.

The Names of Famous Arabs Who Taught the Scholars, with Some Information about Them and Their Genealogies³³

Thus saith Muḥammad [al-Nadīm]: It is necessary to mention them in this place, along with the diversities of their localities and the divergencies of their periods, although mention of the scholars who learned from them³⁴ comes in a different order.

Affār ibn Laqīt

It is said that he used to sit on a high dung hill, while his companions (pupils) gathered around him, learning from him. It was asked, "What is this dust-colored thing?" And some said, "Perhaps you are the biggest part of it!"³⁵

Abū al-Baydā' al-Rabāḥī

He married the mother of Abū Mālik ʿAmr ibn Kirkirah. The name of Abū al-Baydā' was Asʿad ibn ʿIṣmah. He was an Arabian

³² This title and the one following are omitted by the Beatty MS. "Death" is probably an error. It should probably be "pronouncing" or "omitting."

³³ Here the word "Arabs" signifies men of the Arabian tribes. Most of these names are not found in the other medieval books.

³⁴ The idiom is, literally, "the scholars heard from them."

³⁵ The Beatty MS differs from the Flügel text. In the former, the word for "biggest part" is not clearly written, but seems to be thabaj.

who lived at al-Baṣrah, teaching throughout his life, the boys who learned from him paying tuition. He was a poet, and from his poetry we have:

The eloquent spoke of her (it) as spoke the hesitant,
Each rhetorical in describing her.
In the same way the enemy was not hostile,
But nicely spoke as speaks a friend.

Abū Mālik ʿAmr ibn Kirkirah

He was an Arabian who taught among the Bedouins and worked as a warrāq in the settled communities. He was a protégé of the Banū Saʿd Tribe, who quoted Abū al-Baydā', his mother being subservient to Abū al-Baydā' [al-Rabāḥī].³⁶ It is said that Abū Mālik kept in his memory [all of the words of] the entire language. He belonged to the school of al-Baṣrah, and al-Jāḥiẓ said that he was one of the Ṭayyār,³⁷ who suppose that the rich are more honored by Allāh, Mighty and Powerful, than the poor. They also say that Pharaoh was more honored by Allāh than Moses and that a person who swallows a sharp forbidden thing is not harmed by it.³⁸ Among his books there were:

The Disposition of Man; Horses.

Abū ʿIrār

He was an Arabian from the Banū ʿIjl Tribe and a master of literary style, who it is said was almost as cognizant as Abū Mālik in his knowledge of language. He was also a poet.

It is related that when Jannād and Ishāq ibn al-Jaṣṣāṣ came to Abū ʿIrār, Jannād said to him, "Hear something which I have rendered and do it justice."³⁹ Upon his replying, "Speak," Jannād recited:

³⁷ This word is in the Beatty MS. The sect is not included by Shahrastānī and Baghdādī.

³⁸ The text of the Beatty MS differs from Flügel and is not entirely clear.

³⁹ In the Beatty MS the name Jannād is not carefully written, but comparison with the account of Jannād in Chap. III, sect. 1, near n. 18, makes it clear that this is correct. "Do it justice" is perhaps meant to be "I will cut it short."

If thou dost not comprehend what death is,
Behold the Convent of Hind, how its graveyard is outlined.⁴⁰

Then Ishāq said:

Thou seest the wonder of things ordained by Allāh,
Among them pledges of death, constrained by His omnipotence.

Houses thou seest, their locks above their dwellers,
With a group of visitors, but the visitor is not spoken to.

He did not compose any books.

Abū Ziyād al-Kilābī

His name was Yazīd ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Ḥurr and he was an Arabian nomad. Di'bil said, "He went to Baghdād during the days of al-Mahdī, when famine afflicted the people. He settled on the estate of al-'Abbās ibn Muḥammad, where he resided for forty years, also dying there. He was a poet from the Banū 'Āmir ibn Kilāb Tribe, among whose books there were:

Rare Forms [in the Qur'ān]; Differentiation; Camels; The Disposition of Man.⁴¹

Abū Sawwār al-Ghanawī

He was a master of literary style, with whom Abū 'Ubaydah and less distinguished persons studied. Once while he was meeting with Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb and Abū 'Uthmān al-Māzinī, Abū 'Uthmān said, "When I was a lad, I recited to my father, 'Thou seest the rain come forth from its clefts (khilālihi).'" Then Abū Sawwār retorted, "If it were good literary style it would be 'come forth from khala-lihi.'" Then he added, "My father said 'from khala-lihi' when reading."⁴²

Abū Sawwār also said, "Have you heard the saying of the poet:

⁴⁰ For the Convent of Hind at al-Ḥirah see Yāqūt, Geog., II, 707, 709.

⁴¹ This last title inserted in the Beatty MS with a marginal note.

⁴² Qur'ān 24:43 and 30:48 have khilālihi ("clefts"), so that the father's form of reading was heterodox.

A sign is made⁴³ and a wink comes forth from her,

As the coming of the rain from the rifts (khālali) of the clouds."

Then Abū 'Uthmān remarked, "Khalal and khilāl are two nouns which are identical."

Abū al-Jāmūs Thawr ibn Yazīd, the Arabian Tribesman

He came to al-Baṣrah as an envoy to the family of Sulaymān ibn 'Alī and from him Ibn al-Muqaffa' learned his eloquence of style. There were no books of his.

Abū al-Shamikh

He was an Arabian who lived at al-Ḥirah. Among his books, according to what Shaykh Abū Muḥammad ibn Abī Sa'īd remembered to have seen written with an upright handwriting, there was the book, Camels.

Shubayl ibn 'Azrah al-Dubā'i

He was one of the preachers and scholars of the Khawārij and the author of the poem, "The Strange." He started by being a Rāfiḍī for seventy years, after which he joined the Shurāt.⁴⁴ He said, "Then I got clear of the Rawāfiḍ for the sake of the true religion, the court of assembly, and peace of mind (salvation)." He died at al-Baṣrah, where there are some of his descendants.

Abū 'Adnān

He was Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān 'Abd al-A'lā, known as Ward ibn Ḥākim. He quoted Abū al-Baydā' al-Rabāḥī at al-Baṣrah, being a poet and a scholar of language. Among his books there were:

The Grammarians;⁴⁵ The Bow (Weapon); The Strange in the Ḥadīth—his interpretation grew out of the Ḥadīth of the Prophet, for whom be peace, which were ma'thūr,⁴⁶ explained in the way that the early scholars commented on the subject.

⁴³ Flügel gives yushūr bi-ghamzah, translated as "a sign is made." The Beatty MS has what appears to be tafīn bi-'umrah, which does not make sense and must be wrong.

⁴⁴ Instead of Shurāt, the Beatty MS has Shurāyah.

⁴⁵ This title is not in the Beatty MS. The next one is omitted from the Flügel text and the third title is confused in the Flügel text.

⁴⁶ Al-tafsīr al-ma'thūr was a term for a statement by the Prophet coming directly from himself, or through one of his wives or Companions known to be reliable.

Abū Thawābah al-Asadī

He was an Arabian tribesman who was quoted by al-Umawī. This al-Umawī related, "We went in to Abū Thawābah, who said, 'I have no sliced (mushannaq) food and no pleasing (mu'niq) traditions.'"⁴⁷

Abū Ḥabrah

His name was Nahshal ibn Zayd, an Arabian of the Banū 'Adī Tribe, who came to the settled regions and among whose books there was The Creatures.

Abū Shunbul al-'Uqaylī

He was a poet whose name was al-Khulanj, an Arabian tribesman and a master of literary style. He went on a deputation to [Hārūn] al-Rashīd and became attached to the Barāmakah. Among his books there was Rare Forms, written in an ancient script, corrected by Abū 'Amr ['Umar] al-Zāhid, about three hundred leaves.

Dahmaj ibn Muḥarrar al-Naṣrī

He was Naṣr ibn Qu'ayn of the Banū Asad ibn Khuzaymah Tribe, among whose books there was Rare Forms, which was quoted by Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥajjāj ibn Nuṣayr al-Anbārī; I saw it and it had about one hundred and fifty leaves, with corrections made by Abū 'Umar al-Zāhid.

Abū Muḥallim al-Shaybānī

His name was Muḥammad ibn Sa'd, but he was also called Muḥammad ibn Hishām ibn 'Awf al-Sa'dī. He was spoken of both as Muḥammad and Aḥmad and was an Arabian tribesman. He knew more than anybody else about poetry and language. Moreover, he used to roughen his manner, so as to make his words sonorous and his speech like that of a Bedouin. I read what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Sikkīt saying that Abū Muḥallim was of Persian origin, being born in Persia, although he traced his lineage to the Banū Sa'd Tribe.

⁴⁷ There is also a form mu'anniq which may have been used to make the play on words more perfect, although the meaning is not so well adapted to the passage. The Arabic is not clear enough here to tell which word is meant.

It was related by al-Mubarrad, "I heard him say fifteen mortars." He went on, "One day he said to me, 'I never saw a mortar among the nomads, so that when I did come across one, I was disdainful of it.'"⁴⁸

He was a poet, and used to satirize Aḥmad ibn Ibrāhīm, al-Kātib,⁴⁹ although the poetry of Abū Muḥallim was inferior to that of Aḥmad ibn Ibrāhīm. He said, "Mu'arraj had a better memory than other people. He caught a passage from me and remembered it all night, repeating it the next day, although it was about fifty leaves in length."

Abū Muḥallim said, "I was born during the year in which [the Caliph] al-Manṣūr went on the pilgrimage." He died during the year two hundred and forty-eight [A.D. 862/63]. Among his books there were:

Al-Anwā'; Horses; The Disposition of Man.

Abū Maḥdīyah

He was an Arabian tribesman who was an authority for the obscure. He was quoted by the scholars of al-Baṣrah, and because of him there was agitation for a long time every year. He did not write any books.⁵⁰

Abū Miṣḥal

He was an Arabian surnamed Abū Muḥammad, whose name was 'Abd al-Wahhāb ibn Ḥarīsh. While on a deputation to al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl he settled at Baghdād, where he had arguments with al-Aṣma'ī about declension. Among his books there were:

Rare Forms; The Uncultured Obscure.⁵¹

⁴⁹ The word al-kātib usually means a simple scribe, but here refers to a government secretary.

⁵⁰ In the Flügel text the name of al-Mubarrad is mentioned in this paragraph, but the Beatty MS gives a different and probably more correct version.

Abū Tharwān al-'Uklī

He was an Arabian of the Banū 'Ukal Tribe,⁵² a master of literary style, who taught among the nomads. This is what Ya'qūb ibn Sikkīt has recalled. Among his books there were:

The Disposition of the Horse; The Meaning of Poetry.

Ibn Ḍamḍam al-Kilābī

He was Abū 'Uthmān Sa'īd ibn Ḍamḍam, an envoy to al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl. He wrote some excellent poems, among which was a qaṣīdah (poem) the final words of which cannot be surpassed:

May the rain water a quarter in al-Liwā,
Where I used to know them;
From a long time ago
This was their covenant (custom).⁵³

Al-Bahdalī

His name was 'Amr ibn 'Āmir and he was surnamed Abū al-Khaṭṭāb. He composed rajaz (metric poetry) and was a master of literary style, as well as one who quoted.⁵⁴ Al-Aṣma'i learned from him, relied upon him as an authority and quoted his poems. From his poetry there is:

He offered as provender a sheep,
Which for long had been with him, strung up,
To the point that it was almost putrid.
He presented it, with the intestines wrapped.

Jahm ibn Khalaf al-Māzinī

He was one who quoted [poetry and legends], and a scholar of obscure [words and expressions], as well as of poetry. He was contemporary with Khalaf and al-Aṣma'i. They had similarity, resembling one another in their study of poetry and the unusual.

⁵² For the Banū 'Ukal Tribe, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 113.

⁵⁴ A scholar of this type would probably quote tribal poetry and legends, rather than the Ḥadīth.

He wrote a poem about creeping things and birds of attack. He belonged to the family of Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā' and it was for Ibn Munādhīr to praise Jahm:

You were named [with the surname of] the family of al-'Alā', Because you are [of] the people of al-'alā' (nobility) and a mine of learning.
The family of al-'Alā' has built for Māzin a dwelling,
Causing him (it) to abide with the stars.

From [Passages Written in] the Handwritings of the Scholars⁵⁵

Abū al-Haytham al-A'rābī; Abū al-Mujīb al-Rib'ī, whose name was Mazīd ibn Yaḥyā; Abū al-Jarrāḥ al-'Uqaylī; Abū Sa'īd al-Kilābī; al-'Adabbas al-Kinānī; Abū Zakariyā' al-Aḥmar; Abū Adham al-Kilābī; Abū al-Saqr al-'Adawī; Ghaniyah Umm al-Ḥumārīs,⁵⁶ Abū Qurrah al-Kilābī; Abū al-Ḥidrijān: taken from [what is written in] the handwriting of al-Sukkarī. Abū Tammām al-Ḥarār; Abū al-Ḥaṣīn al-Hujaymī; Mukawwazah; Abū al-'Umar, whose name was al-'Alā' ibn Bakr ibn 'Abd Rabb ibn Mishāl ibn al-Muḥallaq ibn Jushm ibn Shaddad ibn Rabī'ah ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Bakr: from [what is written in] the handwriting of Ya'qūb.⁵⁷ Abū Ziyād al-Ṣamuwī al-Kilābī;⁵⁸ al-Saqīl al-'Uqaylī, surnamed Abū al-Kumayt; Abū Faq'as Lazā'iz;⁵⁹ Abū al-Duqaysh al-Qanānī al-Ghanawī; Abū al-Saqr al-Kilābī; Haddāb al-Hujaymī; Ghaythah Umm al-Haytham; Ridād al-Kilābī; Qaribah Umm al-Buhlūl al-Asadīyah; a book was written by Umm al-Buhlūl [entitled] Rare

⁵⁷ Probably Ya'qūb ibn al-Sikkīt.

⁵⁸ On the margin of the Beatty MS there is a note probably referring to this man, saying: "called al-A'war ibn Barā' al-Kilābī."

⁵⁹ Another note in the Beatty MS may go with this name, saying: "Abū al-Qanāqim al-Faq'ashī, who was quoted by al-Kinānī."

Forms and Sources (Verbal Nouns): from [what is written in] the handwriting of al-Sukkarī. Abū Dithar al-Faq'asī—there is a section of his [book] Al-Hurqīyah;⁶⁰ Abū al-Kabas al-Bāhili; Abū Sālīh al-Ṭā'i; Abū al-Kils (Killis) al-Namrī (Namārī); Abū al-Samh al-Ṭā'i, who was one of the persons summoned at the time of al-Mu'tazz, so that he could learn from him;⁶¹ Abū al-Yad al-Kilābī; Abū 'Alī al-Yamāmī; al-Ruhmī of the period of Qāsim [Abū Muḥammad] al-Anbārī, who quoted Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim; 'Urm ibn al-Aṣbagh al-Salamī; Abū Ḥajjār 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Maṣṣūr al-Kilābī: from [what was written in] the handwriting of Ibn Abī Sa'd. Harim ibn Zayd al-Kulaybī; Abū Zayd al-Māzinī, who was quoted by Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb; Abū al-Nu'mān, an Arabian who was quoted by Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb; Abū al-Musallim al-Ghādī, who was quoted by Abū 'Amr al-Shaybanī in his [book] Rare Forms.

Among the Arabian tribesmen, who were masters of literary style, there was Abū Mus-hir the Arabian, who was quoted by Abū 'Uṭbah Jazw ibn Qaṭan al-Nabtī. Among their masters of literary style there was also Abū al-Maḍraḥī, author of the book Rare Forms, which I saw written in the handwriting of Ibn Abī Sa'd.

Persons Other than Members of This Group⁶²

Abū Di'āmāh al-'Absī, a scholar who quoted [tribal poems and traditions] and whose origin was among the nomads. He dwelt for a long time with the townspeople, becoming attached to the Barāmakah. I read from [what was written in] the handwriting of al-Yūsufī, saying that his name was 'Alī ibn Burayd, [spelled] with a rā' (r). Among his books there was Poetry and the Poets.

Mu'arrāj al-Sadūsī

He was Mu'arrāj ibn 'Amr al-Sadūsī al-Ijlī, surnamed Abū Fayd.

⁶⁰ This title is evidently given incorrectly by Flügel and is very likely given erroneously in the Beatty MS too.

⁶¹ Evidently the Caliph called upon this tribal authority to help his scholars understand tribal forms and vernaculars.

Written in the handwriting of 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Mu'tazz I found, "Mu'arrāj ibn 'Amr was descended from the children (clan) of al-Mu'arrāj. His name was Marthid ibn al-Ḥārith ibn Thaw ibn Ḥarmalah ibn 'Alqamah ibn 'Amr ibn Sadiūs." He said, "Al-fayd is saffron." It is also said to be the odor of saffron, while the verb [forms] fād, yufid, fayd(an), are used if someone dies.

Abū Fayd was a friend of al-Khalil. He died during the year one hundred and ninety-five [A.D. 810/11] on the same day on which there died Abū Nuwās. Among his books there were:

Al-Anwā'; The Rare Forms in the Qur'ān; Communities of the Tribes; Meaning.

Al-Lihyānī, [called] Ghulām al-Kisā'i

His name was 'Alī ibn al-Mubārak, also said to be Khāzim,⁶³ and he was surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan. He met with the scholars, the masters of style among the Arabians acquiring information from him.⁶⁴ 'Ubayd [Abū] al-Qāsim ibn Sallām [also] learned from him. Among his written books there was Rare Forms.

Al-Umawī

His name was 'Abd Allāh ibn Sa'id. He was not one of the Arabian literary men,⁶⁵ but he met with the scholars and entered among the tribes, deriving knowledge from the masters of style among the Arabians. Among his books there were:

Rare Forms; Migrating with the Tent.

Abū al-Manhāl

He was 'Uyaynah ibn al-Manhāl, one of those who quoted [poems and traditions]. Among his books there were:

Drinks; Current Proverbs.⁶⁶

⁶³ Before this name, the Beatty MS has what looks like bal, probably implying "on the contrary," or else it is a mistake meant to be ibn.

⁶⁴ The Beatty MS is not clear. It may be more correct to say that "he learned from the Arabian language experts."

⁶⁶ The Beatty MS omits Drinks. The Flügel text adds, after Current Proverbs, "In another place I found Current Verses."

Al-Ḥirmāzī Abū 'Alī al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī

This was how Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd quoted his name from Ibrāhīm ibn Sa'īd. He was an Arabian tribesman and quoter [of traditions and poems], who went to al-Baṣrah to live. He was connected with the Ḥirmāz ibn Mālik ibn 'Amr ibn Tanmūm Tribe,⁶⁷ it being said that because he lived among the Banū Ḥirmāz he was given their name. He was a poet and quoter [of traditions and poems].

Al-Ḥirmāzī once said, "When a city woman was asked, 'By what do you recognize the dawn?' she said, 'By the coldness of the jewelry on my body.' When a village woman was asked, 'By what do you recognize the dawn?' she said, 'By the bursting forth of the flowers in the gardens.' When a barbarous type of woman was spoken to, she said, 'It loosens my bowels.'⁶⁸ Among his books there was The Disposition of Man.

Abū al-'Amaythal

He was an Arabian tribesman whose name was 'Abd Allāh ibn Khulayd, a protégé of Ja'far ibn Sulaymān. "Al-'Amaythal" is the name of a horse, one that has a long stringy tail and struts as he walks. He was the tutor of the sons of 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir in Kurāsān. Although his origin was said to be from al-Rayy, he spoke in a heavy way, giving a Bedouin articulation to his speech.

He used to say, "I am a protégé of the Banū Hāshim."⁶⁹ Sa'd was the name of his grandfather, who was a protégé of al-'Abbās ibn 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib. He served Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn and his son, 'Abd Allāh.

One day when he [Abū al-'Amaythal] went to him ['Abd Allāh] and kissed his hand, 'Abd Allāh jokingly said, "You've scratched my hand with the sharpness of your moustache." Then Abū al-'Amaythal replied quickly, "A hedgehog's quill doesn't hurt a lion's paw." The bon mot astonished him ['Abd Allāh] so much that he ordered a rich reward for him.

⁶⁷ See Durayd, Geneal., p. 124.

⁶⁸ The Arabic word for city is madīnah and for village, dihqān, but these are also place names (for Dihqān, see Yāqūt, Geog., II, 634). "City woman" might be "woman of al-Madīnah." "Village woman" could be "woman of Dihqān," or also, "wife of a village headman." But as al-ʿiljah ('barbarous') is not mentioned as a place name by Yāqūt, the others are probably not meant as proper names either.

⁶⁹ The Banū Hāshim was the clan of the Prophet's tribe.

One day when he [Abū al-'Amaythal] came to him ['Abd Allāh] and he was refused admittance, he said:

I shall leave this door while admittance to it
Remains as I now see it, until it grows somewhat easier;
Even if I did not find a day to gain permission for access,
I found a way of avoiding a meeting.⁷⁰

When this reached 'Abd Allāh it displeased him, so that he ordered that he [Abū al-'Amaythal] should be brought no matter in what way.

Abū al-'Amaythal died during the year two hundred and forty [A.D. 853/54]. Among his books there were:

What Agrees in Pronunciation but Differs in Its Meaning;⁷¹ Resemblance; Current Verses (Texts for Migrating); The Meaning of Poetry.

'Abbād ibn Kusayb

He belonged to the Banū 'Amr ibn Jundab branch of the Banū al-'Anbar Tribe.⁷² Nicknamed Abū al-Khausā', he was a quoter of the poetry of the Arabs and acquainted with their historical traditions.

Al-Faq'asī

He was Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Asadī, who quoted [tribal traditions] about the Banū Asad Tribe, being learned in their great deeds and traditions. He was a poet, living as late as the time of al-Mansūr and his successor. The scholars learned from him about the heroic deeds of the Banū Asad. In one of the verses of his poetry he praised al-Faḍl ibn al-Rubay':⁷³

People are varied in their circumstances,
But Ibn al-Rubay' is on a course which is one.

Among his written works there was The Heroic Deeds and Poems of the Banū Asad.

⁷⁰ Both the Beatty MS and Khallikān, II, 56, make the meaning of this passage clear.

⁷¹ This title is not in the Flügel text and is squeezed into the Beatty MS, so that it is not entirely clear.

⁷² Durayd, Geneal., p. 129.

⁷³ Ibid., p. 151.

Ibn Abī Ṣubḥ

He was 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Amr ibn Abī Ṣubḥ al-Māzinī, an Arabian tribesman, who lived and died at Baghdād. He was a poet and master of literary style from whom the scholars derived knowledge, for like al-Faq'asī he had fresh information.

Di'bil said, "Al-Faq'asī went to a house where there was a feast, which was also attended by Ibn Abī Ṣubḥ, the Arabian. As they were crowded at the entrance, Ibn Abī Ṣubḥ got ahead, entering in front of Muḥammad al-Faq'asī and saying:

Oh, would that thou, mother of 'Amr,
Might see how I stand so as to excuse me,
With my shoving al-Asadī's shoulder away from me
Quickly, in the Zabūn Quarter.
As though he were a lion in the house,
He hurled at me with his eyebrows and eyes,
So that if I had regarded the adversary's right,
The adversary would have prevented them from receiving me.⁷⁴

Rabī'ah al-Baṣrī

He was a nomad who became a townsman and was both a poet and quoter of traditions. Among his books there were:

What Is Mentioned in the Selection of Poetry and Rajaz;⁷⁵ Yearning of the Camel for the Homeland.

Account of Khalaf al-Aḥmar

He was Khalaf ibn Ḥayyān surnamed Abū Muḥriz, a protégé of Abū Mūsā al-Ash'arī. It is also said that he was a protégé of the Banū Umayyah and, furthermore, that his origin was in Khurāsān, from the descendants of Qutaybah ibn Muslim. He was one of the keenest of the collectors of poetic verse and a poet who wrote his poetry in the vernacular of the nomads, plagiarizing them verse for verse.

⁷⁴ The Beatty MS has variations, different from the Flügel text. The "mother of 'Amr" might have been the poet's grandmother, as his father was 'Amr. There is a play on words. "Zabūn" was a quarter of the city, but also "a struggle, with crowding." Al-Faq'asī belonged to the Asad Tribe, and asad means "lion."

I read what was written in the handwriting of Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm [al-Mawṣilī], who said, "I heard Kaysān the grammarian when he asked, 'Oh, Abū Muḥriz, was Alqamah ibn 'Abadah Pre-Islāmic or one of the Banū Ḍabbah Tribe?" Among his books there was, Biographies of the Arabs and What Is Said about Them in Poetry.⁷⁶

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: Mention of the rest of the men who quoted and were Arabian tribesmen will be with the accounts of the grammarians and language scholars of al-Kūfah, if Allāh so wills.

An Account of the Yazīdīs according to Their Sequence

The judge Abū Sa'id, may Allāh be merciful to him, brought out for me part [of a manuscript written] in the handwriting of Abū Bakr ibn al-Sarrāj, which recorded:

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn al-'Abbās al-Yazīdī said, "Abū Muḥammad Yaḥyā ibn al-Mubārak al-'Adawī, known as al-Yazīdī, was called 'al-Yazīdī' because of his friendship with Yazīd ibn Maṣṣūr, the maternal uncle of [the Caliph] al-Mahdī. Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā' attached him [al-Yazīdī] to himself [as a protégé] while Yazīd ibn Maṣṣūr attached him to al-Mahdī. His sons were: Muḥammad ibn Abī Muḥammad, the most famous among them, as he was the grandfather of Abū 'Abd Allāh and the family's greatest poet; also Ibrāhīm; Ismā'il; 'Abd Allāh; Ya'qūb; and Ishāq; mentioned here in accordance with the sequence of their ages. Ya'qūb and Ishāq were ascetics, learned in the Ḥadīth of the Prophet. Four of them were preeminent because of their knowledge of language and Arabian colloquialisms. The members of the family who were boon companions of [the Caliph] al-Ma'mūn were Muḥammad and Ibrāhīm. Muḥammad was their foremost member and the one who went abroad with [the Caliph] al-Mu'taṣim when he journeyed to [engage in combat with] the Mubayyadah⁷⁷ in Egypt. It was there where he died, whereas the others died in Baghdād.

⁷⁷ A heterodox religious order, engaged in fighting against the caliph; see Mas'ūdī, VIII, 33, 140; Ṭabarī, Annales, Part III, pp. 1504, 1561, 1563, 1564, 1589, 1639.

"Muḥammad had twelve sons, the most important of whom were Aḥmad; then 'Abd Allāh, called as a rule by his nickname 'Abdūs; and al-'Abbās, the father of Muḥammad Abū 'Abd Allāh.⁷⁸ These three were their father's executors. There were also Ja'far, 'Alī, al-Ḥasan, the twins al-Faḍl and al-Ḥusayn, 'Isā, Sulaymān, 'Ubayd Allāh, and Yūsuf. The most distinguished among these were Aḥmad, al-'Abbās, Ja'far, al-Ḥasan, al-Faḍl, Sulaymān, and 'Ubayd Allāh.⁷⁹

"Aḥmad died before the year two hundred and sixty [A.D. 873/74]. Al-'Abbās died during the year two hundred and forty-one [A.D. 855/56], and 'Abdūs somewhat earlier. He ['Abdūs] was so addicted to amusement and pleasure that his zeal culminated in his learning to play the lute and in teaching his two sons to play also. They were blessed with riches. Al-Faḍl died in the year two hundred and seventy-eight [A.D. 891/92], and 'Ubayd Allāh during the year eighty-four [A.H. 284: A.D. 897/98]. Al-Ḥasan died in Egypt, because he accompanied Abū Ayyūb, who was the vizier's nephew [sister's son] and the governor of Egypt. Ja'far died at al-Baṣrah later than the year two hundred and thirty [A.D. 844/45] and Sulaymān died in the year forty-five [A.H. 245: A.D. 859/60].

"It is not recorded that any of them quoted scholarly information, except for Abū 'Abd Allāh [Muḥammad ibn al-'Abbās al-Yazīdī] and two of the sons of Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad. One of these was Mūsā ibn Aḥmad, surnamed Abū 'Isā, and the other was 'Isā, surnamed Abū Mūsā. They quoted from their father and Ibrāhīm ibn Abī Muḥammad what the two of them heard spoken by Abū Zayd and al-Aṣma'i.⁸⁰

The books which Abū Muḥammad [al-Yazīdī] wrote were:

Rare Forms, composed for Ja'far ibn Yaḥyā; The Shortened and the Lengthened; An Abridgment of Grammar, composed for some of the sons of al-Ma'mūn; Points and Signs [consonant points and vowel signs].

The compositions of Ibrāhīm ibn Abī Muḥammad al-Yazīdī:

What Agrees in Pronunciation but Differs in Its Meaning; Building of the Ka'bah; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Noun Forms in the Qur'ān—he reached as far as "Al-Ḥadīd" [Sūrah 57].

⁷⁸ The Beatty MS gives Ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī 'Abd Allāh, which seems to be a mistake.

⁷⁹ For the names of the members of this family, see Biog. Index, Yazīdī.

⁸⁰ The Beatty MS is evidently more accurate than the Flügel text in giving this passage.

The compositions of 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Muḥammad, surnamed Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān [al-Yazīdī]:

The Strange in the Qur'ān; An Abridgment of Grammar; Raising of the Tongue in Speech; Stopping and Starting.

The composition of Ismā'il ibn Abī Muḥammad al-Yazīdī: Generations of Poets. The compositions of Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn al-'Abbās ibn Abī Muḥammad al-Yazīdī:

Abridgment of Grammar; Horses; Virtues of the Banū al-'Abbās; Account of the Yazīdī Family.

Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Yazīdī died in the year three hundred and ten [A.D. 922/23]. At the end of his life he was summoned to teach the sons of al-Muqtadīr bi-Allāh, whom he served for a time. I have been told that one of his friends met him after he had become associated with the ruler, asking him to read something quoted, whereupon he said, "I've persisted in giving it special attention, but I'm too busy for it."⁸¹

Account of Sībawayh, One of the Disciples of al-Khalīl

Our shaykh Abū Sa'id, to whom may Allāh show mercy, said that the name of Sībawayh was 'Amr ibn 'Uthmān ibn Qanbar. He was a protégé of the Banū al-Ḥārith ibn Ka'b ibn 'Amr ibn 'Ulah ibn Khālīd ibn Mālīk ibn Udad.⁸² He was surnamed Abū Bishr, some however saying that his surname was Abū al-Ḥasan. Sībūyah (Per., sībawayh) in Persian is the odor of the apple.

He learned grammar from al-Khalīl, who was his teacher, as well as from 'Isā ibn 'Umar [al-Thaqafī], Yūnus, and others. He learned the dialects (languages) from Abū al-Khaṭṭāb al-Akhfash al-Kabīr (the Elder) and others, too.

He composed his book, unequaled before his time and unrivaled afterwards. I have read what was written in the handwriting of

Abū al-'Abbās Tha'lab, that forty-two persons cooperated in composing the Book of Sībawayh. Although Sībawayh was one of them, the principles and subjects were based on those of al-Khalīl.

Sībawayh came to al-'Irāq in the days of al-Rashīd when he was thirty-two years old and he died in Persia when he was somewhat over forty. Others say that [the purpose of] his coming to al-'Irāq was to seek Yahyā ibn Khālīd, who put him in touch with al-Kisā'ī and al-Akhfash, who had discussions with him, checking [his answers] in connection with the questions which they addressed to him.⁸³ They summoned him [to be tested] in the presence of some linguistic authorities, who had come as a deputation to the sultan. These were Abū Faq'as, Abū Dithār, Abū al-Jarrāh, and Abū Tharwān. Verification was for al-Kisā'ī.

Al-Kisā'ī spoke with Yahyā ibn Khālīd, who granted him [Sībawayh] ten thousand silver coins (s., dirham), after receiving which he journeyed to al-Baṣrah and from there to Persia, where he died during the year one hundred and seventy-seven [A.D. 793/94].

In a source different from what was written in the handwriting of Tha'lab it is recorded that if anybody desired to read the Book of Sībawayh with al-Mubarrad, he used to say, "Have you ridden through grammar, appreciating its vastness and meeting with the difficulties of its contents?" Al-Māzinī, moreover, used to say, "If anybody wishes to compose a great book about grammar in addition to the Book of Sībawayh, he ought to be ashamed of himself."

Account of al-Naḍr ibn Shumayl

He was al-Naḍr ibn Shumayl ibn Kharashah ibn Yazīd ibn Kulthūm ibn 'Antarah ibn Zuhayr ibn 'Umar ibn Julhumah ibn Ḥujr ibn Khuzā'ī ibn Māzin ibn Mālik ibn 'Amr ibn Tamīm. Although his origin was at al-Baṣrah, he lived at Marw al-Rūdh in the region of Māzin.⁸⁴ He learned from al-Khalīl and Arabians who were linguistic authorities. He died in the year two hundred and three or four [A.D. 818/19 or 819/20]. Among his books there was Al-Ṣifāt (Descriptions), a large work comprising a number of chapters, from which Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim ibn Sallām drew material for his book The Strange in Compositions.

⁸³ Al-Rashīd was the Caliph Hārūn al-Rashīd. Yahyā ibn Khālīd was the vizier, and the others mentioned were linguistic experts.

⁸⁴ A five-day journey from Marw (Merv) in Khurāsān; see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 506.

I have read something written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥasan ibn al-Kūfī, which confirmed what I myself remembered about the book Al-Ṣifāt, so that I am not relying only upon what I myself saw in it. Ibn al-Kūfī said:

The first section deals with the character of man, liberality, generosity, and the qualities of women. The second section deals with tents, houses, descriptions of mountains and chasms, and utensils. The third section is entirely devoted to the camel. The fourth section deals with flying clouds, the sun and the moon, night and day, milks, mushrooms, wells, cisterns, well ropes, buckets, and a description of wine. The fifth section deals with planting, vines, grapes, the names of herbs, trees, winds, clouds, and rain.

There were also some books of his which did not form a part of this volume:⁸⁵

Weapons; The Disposition of the Horse; Al-Anwā'; Meaning; The Strange in the Ḥadīth; Al-Muṣāfaṇah;⁸⁶ Introduction to "Kitāb al-'Ayn"; The Jim (The J);⁸⁷ The Sun and the Moon.

Account of al-Akhfash al-Mujāshi'ī

He was Abū al-Ḥasan Sa'īd ibn Masa'dah, a protégé of the Banū Mujāshi' ibn Dārim Tribe and one of the most famous of the grammarians of al-Baṣrah.⁸⁸ He learned from Sībawayh, being one of his disciples, although al-Akhfash was the elder of the two. Thus he came into contact with the scholars with whom Sībawayh associated.

⁸⁶ This is the measuring of the water that covers a pebble, to give as a share to a member of a desert band.

⁸⁸ For the Banū Mujāshi' Tribe, see Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, pp. 36 l. 19, 37 l. 17.

The way to the Book of Sībawayh was through al-Akhfash. Nobody is known to have studied the Book with Sībawayh and Sībawayh himself did not expound it. When, however, he died, the Book was studied with al-Akhfash. Among those who studied it with him there were Abū 'Umar al-Jarmī, Abū 'Uthmān al-Māzinī, and others besides them.

Al-Akhfash died during the year two hundred and twenty-one [A.D. 836], later than the death of al-Farrā'. In his book, The Virtues of Khurāsān, al-Balkhī said that his [al-Akhfash's] origin was in Khwārizm. It is also stated that he died during the year two hundred and fifteen [A.D. 830/31]. Al-Akhfash quoted Hammād ibn al-Zibriqān. He lived at al-Baṣrah and among his books there were:

Al-Awsaṭ (Middle Size), about grammar; Commentary on the Meaning of the Qur'ān; Measurings in Grammar; Prosody; The Four;⁸⁹ Expositions; the large book, Questions; the small book, Questions; Al-Qawāfī; Kings;⁹⁰ The Meaning of Poetry; The Full Stop; Voices; Description of Sheep, Their Colors, Remedies, and Ages.

Account of Quṭrub

He was Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn al-Mustanīr, also spoken of as Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad, but the first rendering is the more accurate. He learned from Sībawayh and a group of the scholars of al-Baṣrah, being reliable in his statements.

The quṭrub is a small creature, crawling without resting. It is said that Sībawayh gave him [Quṭrub] that nickname because of his way of greeting him in the early morning, for he said to him one day, "What are you but a quṭrub of the night?"

Quṭrub taught the sons of Abū Dulaf al-Qāsim ibn 'Īsā, and then his [own] son, al-Ḥasan ibn Quṭrub, taught them after Quṭrub died during the year two hundred and six [A.D. 821/22]. Among his written books there were:

Meaning of the Qur'ān; Derivations; Al-Qawāfī; Rare Forms; Periods; Triple;⁹¹ Distinguishing; Voices; Descriptions (Adjectives, ⁸⁹ "Four" may refer to cases in grammar, words of four consonants, the four seasons, or perhaps to certain periods of the spring and autumn.

⁹⁰ The title Kings in the Beatty MS looks more like malūl than malūk, so that it may mean "melancholy" or "fatigue."

⁹¹ Three consonants, three dots, or some other meaning connected with linguistics.

Account of Abū 'Ubaydah

The shaykh Abū Sa'id, may Allāh be merciful to him, said, "Abū 'Ubaydah Ma'mar ibn al-Muthannā al-Taymī was from the Taym of the Quraysh rather than Taym of the Ribāb,⁹³ for he was a protégé of theirs." It is also said that he was a protégé of the Banū 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Ma'mar al-Taymī.

We have been told that Abū Bakr ibn Mujāhid related, saying:

Al-Kudaymī recounted to me and Abū al-'Aynā', saying, "A man once said to Abū 'Ubaydah, 'Oh, Abū 'Ubaydah, you have made records of people, penetrating into their genealogies, but by Allāh you haven't informed me who your own father was and what was his origin!' Then he said, 'My father told me that his father was a Jew from Bājarwān.'"⁹⁴

I myself have read what was written in the handwriting of Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn Muqlah, that Abū al-'Abbās Tha'lab said:

Abū 'Ubaydah agreed with the doctrines of the Khawārij, so that when he read the Qur'ān he read it with reflection. He knew about the strange forms in the Qur'ān, as well as the metaphorical in the Qur'ān, but in spite of his learning, if he composed a verse of poetry he did not pay attention to its grammatical accuracy.⁹⁵

When he died no one attended his funeral, for he never used to greet a sharif or anybody else. He wrote the book Al-Mathālib (Faults), in which he spoke of the faults of some of the things connected with the Prophet,⁹⁶ may Allāh bless him and give him peace.

Abū al-'Abbās [Tha'lab] said:

⁹² This title is omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁹³ For the tribal groups, see Enc. Islam, IV, 622; Mas'ūdī, IV, 223; Durayd, Geneal., pp. 111, 228.

⁹⁴ For several towns with this name, see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 454.

⁹⁵ This sentence has been translated freely, so as to make it readable.

⁹⁶ The Arabic for the phrase "the things connected with the Prophet" is asbāb al-Nabī.

Abū 'Ubaydah lived to be nearly a hundred. He was heavy in speech, but possessed a knowledge of Islām and the Pre-Islāmic period, and in his house there was a record of the Arabs. When he spoke with his friends, such as al-Aṣma'ī, Abū Zayd, and some others, he was curt⁹⁷ while he was with them. Then, moreover, he was foul, unsound in religion and genealogy.

I read what was written in the handwriting of 'Allān al-Shu'ūbī, that Abū 'Ubaydah was nicknamed Sakht (Rigid or Overbearing). His origin was Persian. Abū 'Ubaydah was born in the year one hundred and fourteen [A.D. 732/33] and died during the year two hundred and ten [A.D. 825/26], or some say eleven. Abū Sa'id has said the year eight and some say nine. Among his books there were: The Metaphor of the Qur'ān; The Strange in the Qur'ān; The Meaning of the Qur'ān; The Strange in the Ḥadīth; Embellishment (Al-Dibāj); Al-Bāj (Tribute, Tax, Revenue); Animals; Imperfections (Al-Naqā'is); Abnā' (Sons of) Wayl;⁹⁸ Restrictive Ordinances (Penalties); Grave of Eternity (Ḥufrat Khuld);⁹⁹ Mas'ūd;¹⁰⁰ Al-Baṣrah; The Blessing (Information) of the Quoter [of Traditions]; Khurāsān; Strifes of Qays and al-Yaman; Account of 'Abd al-Qays; Account of Abnā' (Sons of) Baghīd;¹⁰¹ The Khawārij of al-Baḥrayn and al-Yamāmah;¹⁰² Protégés; Stupidity; Owls (Al-Ḍi'ān); Al-Ṭarūqah [girl (female) ready for mating]; The Field of Rāhit;¹⁰³ The Contestants; The Combat; Account of al-Barāṣ (the Sandy Desert) (or Account of al-Barrād [the standard of Ibn Qays]).

Fugitives (Al-Farrārīn) (or Al-'Izāzīn [Noble], or Al-Ghirārīn [Careless about Prayer]);¹⁰⁴ The Falcon; Pigeons (Doves); Snakes; The Eagle (Al-'Uqāb) (or Punishment [Al-'Iqāb]); Al-Nawākīḥ;¹⁰⁵ Al-Nawāshiz; ⁹⁷ The Beatty MS has nataf, which means "picked out hair," but when applied to scholarship has the connotation of being brief or curt.

⁹⁸ For this tribe, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 165.

⁹⁹ Flügel differs.

¹⁰⁰ The fourth title of the last paragraph of the list is Mas'ūd ibn 'Amr and His Murder. Here, mas'ūd may refer to the same Mas'ūd, or it may mean "prosperous."

¹⁰⁵ These are unusual plurals. Perhaps al-nawākīḥ refers to marriage and al-nawāshiz to persons resurrected.

¹⁰⁸ Omitted in the Beatty MS. Perhaps confused with Virtues of the Bāhilah Tribe, given in the previous paragraph.

¹⁰⁹ These were two famous battles between 'Alī and his competitors; see Glossary.

¹¹⁰ The Arabic word here is probably an unusual plural (al-malāwihāt) indicating either places of refuge, or chiefs offering refuge.

¹¹¹ In the Beatty MS there is probably an error, or this may be What Influences the Arabs.

¹¹² For this tribe see Durayd, Geneal., p. 164.

¹¹³ These forms are clear in the Beatty MS, but they do not fit together. Al-ḥamālīn ("bearing") does not agree with al-khimālāt ("secrets"). The Flügel text has al-ḥamālīn wa'l-ḥamālat ("masculine and feminine forms").

Among the Disciples of Abū 'Ubaydah

There was Dammādh Abū Ghassān, whose name was Rufī ibn Salamah ibn Muslim ibn Rufī al-'Abdī. He quoted Abū 'Ubaydah and copied his books, learning from him about genealogies, historical traditions, and heroic deeds.

Account of Abū Zayd

His name was Sa'īd ibn Aws al-Anṣārī and he came from Ṣulbīyah al-Khazraj. Abū al-'Abbās al-Mubarrad said, "Abū Zayd knew a great deal about grammar, but not as much as al-Khalīl and Sibawayh. Yūnus [ibn Ḥabīb] ranked with Abū Zayd in language study, and was more learned than Abū Zayd in grammar. As Abū Zayd knew more about grammar than al-Aṣma'ī and Abū 'Ubaydah, he was called Abū Zayd the Grammarian."

Abū Sa'īd said, "I do not know of any of the scholars of grammar and language at al-Baṣrah, who derived information about the Arabs from the people of al-Kūfah, except Abū Zayd, who quoted al-Mufaḍḍal al-Ḍabbī."

In the beginning of the book Rare Forms, Abū Zayd said, "Al-Mufaḍḍal al-Ḍabbī recited for me [a verse by] Ḍamrah ibn Ḍamrah al-Nahshalī of the Pre-Islāmic period:

¹¹⁷ The order of titles in the list is different in the Beatty MS from the sequence in the Flügel edition. The Beatty MS omits these last three titles.

She awoke after midnight blaming you for generosity,
But my blame and censure is wrong for you."¹¹⁸

I read what was written in the handwriting of Ishāq:¹¹⁹

Abū Zayd said to me, "I came to Baghdād at the time when [the 'Abbāsīd Caliph] al-Mahdī Muḥammad began to reign 775 [A.D.] and the scholars of every land arrived with different branches of learning. I did not see anyone more keen about poetic verse than Khalaf [ibn Ḥayyān] or more erudite and devoted to his learning than Yūnus [ibn Ḥabīb]."

Abū Zayd died in the year two hundred and fifteen [A.D. 830/31]. Among his books there were:

The Oath of 'Uthmān; Subterfuge and Joking; Confusion and Watering of Camels; Displeasing (Corrupt); The Naked (Al-Mu'arrī) (or The Comforter [Al-Mu'azzī] or The Raid [Al-Maghzā]); The Camel; The Disposition of Man; Tents (Verses of Poetry); Rain; Water; Innate Qualities (Idiosyncrasies); Plants and Trees; Languages (Vernaculars); The Reading of Abū 'Amr [ibn al-'Alā]; Rare Forms; The Plural and the Dual; Diarrhea.

Account of al-Aṣma'ī

Thus saith Muḥammad [al-Nadīm]: I read what was written in the handwriting of Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn Muqlah: "Abū al-'Abbās Tha'lab said that al-Aṣma'ī was 'Abd al-Malik ibn Qurayb ibn 'Abd al-Malik ibn 'Alī ibn Aṣma'ī ibn Muḥāhhir ibn 'Amr ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Bāhili." It is quoted that someone said to Abū 'Ubaydah, "Al-Aṣma'ī said to us, 'My father used to travel with Salm ibn Qutaybah on a horse of his.'” Abū ‘Ubaydah remarked, “Praise be to Allāh and thanks to Allāh, for Allāh is greater [than His creatures]. One boasting of what he does not own is like a person wearing a false robe and, by Allāh, the father of al-Aṣma‘ī never owned any animal other than the one inside of his robe.”

Our shaykh Abū Sa‘īd said, “Abū al-‘Abbās al-Mubarrad stated that al-Aṣma‘ī was most keen about poetry and rhetoric, as was also Abū ‘Ubaydah, who excelled al-Aṣma‘ī in his knowledge of genealogy, although al-Aṣma‘ī knew more about grammar than he did.” He [al-Aṣma‘ī] was surnamed Abū Sa‘īd, the name of Qurayb [his father] being ‘Āṣim, surnamed Abū Bakr.

Abū al-‘Aynā’ related, saying:

Al-Aṣma‘ī died at al-Baṣrah when I was present, during the year two hundred and thirteen [A.D. 828/29]. There invoked Allāh on his behalf al-Faḍl ibn Abi Ishāq, and I heard ‘Abd al-Raḥmān, his brother’s son, recite at the funeral, “To Allāh we belong and to Him are we returning.”¹²² Then I said, “What matter to him if he has been called home, in accordance with what Allāh has made known to him?”

It is also said that al-Aṣma‘ī died in the year two hundred and seventeen [A.D. 832/33]. Among his books there were:¹²³ The Disposition of Man; Types (Categories); Al-Anwā’; Marking with the Hamzah; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Differentiation; The Attributes [of God] (Descriptions); Doors;¹²⁴ Al-Maysir and al-Qidāh;¹²⁵ The Disposition of the Horse; Horses; The Camel; Sheep; Tents and Houses; Wild Beasts; Fa‘ala wa-Af‘ala; Similes (Proverbs); Opposite Words [each bearing different meanings]; Pronunciations (Dialects); Weapons; Languages (Vernaculars); Waters of the Arabs.

written in the handwriting of al-Sukkarī, about two hundred leaves; The Saddle, Bridle, Halter, and Hobbling Rope;¹²⁶ The Strange in the Ḥadīth—Uncultured Words; Rare Forms of the Arabians (or Rare Forms of Inflection [Declension]); Masculine and Feminine; The Six Poems;¹²⁷ The Seasons; Genealogy; Voices (Sounds); Names of Fermented Drinks; What the Arabs Say, Being Spread by the Peoples’ Mouths.

Al-Aṣma‘ī worked over a large number of the poems of the Arabs, but not in a way pleasing to the scholars, because he minimized [the importance of] rare forms and abbreviated quotations.¹²⁸

The Son of the Brother of al-Aṣma‘ī

In the handwriting of al-Yazīdī his name is written ‘Abd al-Raḥmān, surnamed Abū Muḥammad, but he was also said to have been surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan. He was not bright, but he was relied upon for what he quoted from his uncle and other scholars. Among his books there was The Meaning of Poetry.

Aḥmad ibn Ḥātim

He quoted al-Aṣma‘ī and was surnamed Abū Naṣr. He also quoted Abū ‘Ubaydah, Abū Zayd, and other [scholars]. He died in the year two hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 845/46], when he was over seventy years old. Among his books there were:

The Camel; Verses of “Al-Ma‘ānī”;¹²⁹ Horses; The Sown and the Palm; Trees and Plants;¹³⁰ First Milk [after Giving Birth] and [Ordinary] Milk; Derivations of Names; Birds; How the Populace Errs in Speaking; Locusts.

¹²⁷ This title and the ones which follow are not included in the Beatty MS.

¹³⁰ This title and the ones following are not in the Beatty MS.

Account of al-Athram, a Disciple¹³¹ of al-Aṣma'i and Abū 'Ubaydah

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn al-Mughirah al-Athram, who quoted a group of scholars as well as language authorities among the Arabian tribesmen. He quoted the books of Abū 'Ubaydah and al-Aṣma'i, from whom he was never separated.

[Abū al-'Abbās] Tha'lab said, "We were with al-Athram, the disciple of al-Aṣma'i, when he was dictating the poetry of al-Rā'i." He continued, "When he ended the session, Ya'qūb ibn al-Sikkīt being one of those with him, he put down the manuscript from his hand saying, 'I must ask him [Ibn al-Sikkīt] about a verse of al-Rā'i.'" Then he [Tha'lab] went on to say, "I said to him [al-Athram], 'Don't do that lest he has no answer and you humiliate him in the presence of the leaders of the session.' But he [al-Athram] said, 'It must be,' as he jumped up exclaiming, 'What do you say about this line of al-Rā'i?'"

They ruminated the cud after their hunger,
Leaving Dhū al-Abāriq and pasturing at Haqīl."¹³²

He [Tha'lab] said, "The shaykh [Ibn al-Sikkīt] stammered and gulped, not answering at all. Then he [al-Athram] asked, 'What do you have to say about another of his verses?'"

Like the high-rising smoke of a lonely man,
Hungry, causing wet thorn bushes to kindle."¹³³

Then he [Tha'lab] continued, "He [Ibn al-Sikkīt] relapsed into his state [of embarrassment] and we saw in his face disapproval and dissent. But al-Athram said (quoted), 'The loaded [camel] seeks relief with the neck.' Ya'qūb [ibn al-Sikkīt] exclaimed, 'That's wrong, it's with its chin!' Then al-Athram said, 'You're trying to be the leading person in a hurry,' and he went into his house."¹³⁴

¹³¹ He was called ṣāhib of al-Aṣma'i, and as he was much younger, it seems more accurate to translate this word as "disciple" rather than "associate."

¹³³ For a better understanding of this couplet, see Rā'i, Shi'r, p. 140 (59).

¹³⁴ This story casts much light on medieval education. As a disciple or apprentice of the great grammarian al-Aṣma'i, the younger man al-Athram was ambitious and successful. He was evidently teaching a class in poetry, not in a mosque or house, as was usual, but somewhere near his house, perhaps an open court. He tried to show

Meaning of the Simile

Ya'qūb [ibn al-Sikkīt] said that if a camel is loaded and its burden becomes heavy, it will stretch out its neck and seek support with its chin (lean on its chin), but in so doing it will gain no relief. So it is compared with a man who undertakes something or to whom something happens from which he shrinks, and he seeks the aid of one weaker than himself. This is the simile.

Al-Athram died during the year two hundred and thirty [A.D. 844/45]. Among his books there were:

Rare Forms; The Strange in the Ḥadīth.

Account of al-Jarmī

I read what was written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Khazzāz: "Abū 'Umar Ṣāliḥ ibn Ishāq al-Bajilī [al-Jarmī] was a protégé of Bajilah ibn Anmār ibn Irāsh ibn al-Ghawth, brother to al-Azd ibn al-Ghawth."¹³⁵ Abū Sa'id said that he [al-Jarmī] was a protégé of Jarm ibn Rabbān, Jarm being one of the Arab tribes from al-Yaman.

He learned grammar from al-Akhfash and others, studying the Book of Sibawayh with al-Akhfash. Although he met Yūnus ibn Ḥabīb, he did not meet Sibawayh. He learned about language from Abū Zayd, al-Aṣma'i, and their associates. Abū al-'Abbās al-Mubarrad said, "He was a protégé of Bajilah ibn Anmār." Al-Jarmī died ———.¹³⁶ Among his books there were: off at the expense of the Shaykh Ibn al-Sikkīt, the tutor of the caliph's son and a man of dignity. Tha'lab was a younger man, but one of the great scholars of his generation. His efforts to keep al-Athram from being rude failed. Al-Athram tried to show his pupils that he knew more lines of poetry than his senior, and was so conceited that he went into his house when Ibn al-Sikkīt accused him of making an erroneous quotation.

Joy (Al-Farah) (or Al-Faraj or Al-Farkh); Structures (Al-Abnīyah);¹³⁷ Prosody; Abridgment of the Grammar of the Learned; The Strange in Sibawayh;¹³⁸ Al-Qawāfi;¹³⁹ The Dual and the Plural; Structures and Inflection.

¹³⁶ Al-Jarmī died A.H. 225 (A.D. 840). The date is omitted in the Arabic text.

¹³⁷ Perhaps connected with a book of this name by Sibawayh.

¹³⁸ The Flügel text has Commentary on the Strange in Sibawayh.

¹³⁹ This title and the two which follow are not in the Beatty MS.

Account of al-Māzinī

His name was Bakr ibn Muḥammad and he was from the tribe of the Banū Māzin ibn Shaybān ibn Dhuhl ibn Tha'labah ibn 'Ukābah ibn Ṣa'b ibn 'Alī ibn Bakr ibn Wā'il. His father was Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb, a grammarian and reader [of the Qur'ān], mention of whom has already been made in the account of Abū Sawwār al-Ghanawī. Al-Wāthiq brought al-Māzinī from al-Baṣrah because of a poem sung by a slave girl in the following way:

Is not, oh, tyrant, thy evil treatment of a man
Who has greeted thee with a salutation injustice?¹⁴⁰

When he [al-Māzinī] reached Sāmarrā and, entering into the presence of al-Wāthiq, gave the verse its correct grammatical form, it happened to be in accordance with the opinion of al-Wāthiq, who bestowed upon him by the hand of Aḥmad ibn Abī Duwād five thousand silver coins (s., dirham) and sent him home to al-Baṣrah. He died ——. Among his books there were:

The Alif (The A) and the Lām (the L); Declension (Conjugation); Prosody; Embellishment (Al-Dībāj), contradicting the book of Abū 'Ubaydah; How the Populace Errs in Speaking;¹⁴¹ Al-Qawāfī.

Account of al-Tawwazī

Our shaykh Abū Sa'id, may Allāh be merciful unto him, said that his [Tawwazī's] name was 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Hārūn. According to what was written in the handwriting of Ibn Wadā' ibn al-Faḍl al-Asadī of the Quraysh, quoting Abū Sa'id, he was a protégé of the Quraysh surnamed Abū Muḥammad.

He studied (read) with al-Aṣma'i, quoted Abū 'Ubaydah and other authorities, and mastered the Book of Sibawayh under Abū 'Umar ¹⁴⁰ For the Banū Māzin ibn Shaybān Tribe, see "Māzin," Enc. Islam, III, 433. In the story which follows, al-Wāthiq (caliph A.D. 842-47) was in his palace city at Sāmarrā. His slave girl, who had been trained to recite poetry by the great scholar al-Māzinī, recited the word of a poem in a way which the caliph believed to be correct. When his scholars disagreed with him, he sent for al-Māzinī to come to Sāmarrā from al-Baṣrah. The caliph was pleased when al-Māzinī said that the girl had been correct. Authorities differ about the author of the poem and Flügel gives some errors in his version. For this incident, see Zubaydī, Ṭabaqāt, p. 92; Suyūṭī, Bughyat, p. 202; Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (2), 382; Khallikān, I, 265.

¹⁴¹ This title and the one following it are not in the Beatty MS.

al-Jarmī. Abū 'Alī al-Ṣaffār told us what he claimed to be true, saying:

Muḥammad ibn Yazīd [al-Mubarrad] said to us, "In the presence of 'Umārah ibn 'Aqīl ibn Bilāl ibn Jarīr, I read to Abū Muḥammad al-Tawwazī a selection from Jarīr beginning:

The dove was happy in the trees exciting me;
For a long time may thou tarry in the branches and the forest verdure, until I came to this line:

But the heart remaineth bound by longing
For Jumānah or Rayyā, the Barren Place (al-'Āqir).

"Then 'Umārah, having Abū 'Ubaydah in mind, said to al-Tawwazī, 'What would your master say?' Al-Tawwazī replied, 'That they are two women [referring to Jumānah and Rayyā].' 'Umārah laughed, saying, 'These two, by Allāh, are two sandy places to the right and left of my house!' Then al-Tawwazī said to me, 'Write down what he said.'"

He [al-Mubarrad] continued, "I refused out of respect for Abū 'Ubaydah, but he [al-Tawwazī] said, 'Write, for if Abū 'Ubaydah were present, he would accept this interpretation, as it is about the man's own house.'"¹⁴²

Al-Tawwazī learned so much from al-Aṣma'i that he was called [al-Aṣma'i] after him. He died ——. Among his books there were: Similes (Proverbs); Contraries (Opposites); Horses, Racing Them, Their Ages (Teeth), Their Young, Their Eyes, Exercising Them, and Which One Is Named for Its Mare; Fa'altu wa-Af'altu; Rare Forms.

Account of al-Ziyādī

Abū Sa'id, to whom may Allāh be merciful, said, "He was Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Sufyān ibn Sulaymān ibn Bakr ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Ziyād ibn Abīh. He was a pupil of (read with) al-Aṣma'i and other scholars and, although he studied the Book of Sibawayh, he did not finish it." Among his books there were:

An Exposition of the "Book" of Sibawayh; Similes (Proverbs); Points and Signs [consonant points and vowel signs]; The Writing of Historical Traditions; Names of the Clouds, the Winds, and the Rains.

¹⁴² This passage should be compared with the poet's anthology; see Jarīr, Sharḥ Diwān, pp. 304, 305. 'Umārah knew all about Jumānah and Rayyā al-'Āqir, as he was a great-grandson of the poet Jarīr, probably brought up in the old family home.

Account of al-Riyāshī

He was Abū al-Faḍl al-‘Abbās ibn al-Faraj, a protégé of Muḥammad ibn Sulaymān ibn ‘Alī al-Hāshimī. Riyāsh was a member of the Judhām Tribe¹⁴³ and, as the father of al-‘Abbās [al-Riyāshī] was his [Riyāsh’s] slave, the name derived from Riyāsh was attached to him.

He was a scholar of language and poetry who quoted al-Aṣma‘ī copiously, also quoting other authorities. Abū al-Faḥ Muḥammad ibn Ja‘far al-Naḥwī (the Grammarian) said that al-Riyāshī studied the first half of the Book of Sībawayh as a pupil of al-Māzinī.

Abū Sa‘īd related to us, saying:

Abū Bakr ibn Durayd said to us, “When I saw a warrāq of al-Baṣrah reading [aloud] the book of logic by Ibn al-Sikkīt, some people of al-Kūfah being present, I asked al-Riyāshī, who was sitting among the wārraqūn, ‘What did he [Ibn al-Sikkīt] say?’ [Al-Riyāshī replied,] ‘He said, “We learned about language from Ḥarashat al-Ḍibāb and Aklāt al-Yarābī’, who derived a knowledge of language from the inhabitants of al-Sawād: akalah al-kuwāmikh, al-shawārīz, and similar words.”’ ”¹⁴⁴

With reference to the year during which al-Riyāshī died, Abū Sa‘īd said, “Abū Bakr ibn Durayd told us that it was the year two hundred and fifty-seven [A.D. 870/71].” Among his books there were:

Horses; The Camel; How the Names¹⁴⁵ Differ from the Words of the Arabs.

Account of Abū Ḥātim al-Sijistānī

Abū Sa‘īd said, “His name was Sahl ibn Muḥammad. He quoted copiously from Abū Zayd, Abū ‘Ubaydah, and al-Aṣma‘ī, being himself a scholar of language and poetry.” Abū al-‘Abbās al-Mubarrad related that he heard him say, “I read (studied) the Book of Sībawayh twice with [as a pupil of] al-Akhfash.”

He had an excellent knowledge of prosody, was a prolific writer of books about language, or it is said poetry,¹⁴⁶ and was accurate in

¹⁴⁴ These words from the dialects of southern ‘Irāq cannot be identified.

¹⁴⁵ In the Arabic of the Beatty MS the hamzah is omitted, but the word given evidently means “names” or “nouns.”

¹⁴⁶ Perhaps this phrase should be translated as “with the speech of poetry.” One of the letters is unclear in the Arabic text, making the meaning uncertain.

quoting. Abū Bakr ibn Durayd depended upon him in connection with linguistics.¹⁴⁷ It has been told to me that he died during the year fifty-five [A.H. 255: A.D. 868/69] on a day of rain. Sulaymān ibn al-Qāsim, the brother of Ja‘far ibn al-Qāsim, prayed for him when he was buried to the right of the place of prayer of Ḥayyāl al-Mayl. Among his books there were:

How the Populace Errs in Speaking; Birds; Masculine and Feminine; Plants;¹⁴⁸ The Shortened and the Lengthened; Differentiation;¹⁴⁹ [Qur’ānic] Readings; Stopping and Starting; Eloquence of Style; The Palm Tree; Contraries (Opposites); Bows, Arrows, and Archers; Swords and Spears; Planting and Going the Rounds at Night;¹⁵⁰ Wild Beasts; Creeping Things; Spelling; Planting; The Disposition of Man; Incorporation of Letters [to make a double letter]; First Milk after Giving Birth, Curds, and Milk; Generosity; Winter and Summer; Bees and Honey; The Camel; Herbs and Vegetables; Agreement [when one word follows another without altering the sense of the phrase]; Fertility and Drought; Contradictions of the Manuscripts [of the Qur’ān]; Locusts;¹⁵¹ Yearning for the Homeland; Heat and Cold, Sun and Moon, Night and Day; The Difference between the Sons of Adam and All the Animate Creatures.

Account of al-Mubarrad¹⁵²

I read what was written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Khazzāz, that:

The name of al-Mubarrad was Muḥammad ibn Yazīd ibn ‘Abd al-Akbar ibn ‘Umayr ibn Ḥasanān ibn Sulaym ibn Sa‘d ibn ‘Abd Allāh ibn Durayd ibn Mālik ibn al-Ḥārith ibn ‘Āmir ibn ‘Abd Allāh ibn Bilāl ibn ‘Awf ibn

¹⁴⁷ The following sentence is found at this point in the Flügel edition and in the margin of the Beatty MS: “Ibn Durayd said, ‘He was accomplished with books, clever and intelligent in explaining obscure passages.’ ”

¹⁴⁸ The Flügel text has Trees and Plants.

¹⁴⁹ This title is written twice in the Beatty MS.

¹⁵¹ Omitted from the Beatty MS.

¹⁵² The Beatty MS gives al-Mubarrid, but in most of the translation the usual spelling, al-Mubarrad, is used. Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (7), 137, says that al-Māzinī gave this man the nickname “Mubarrid” (meaning “cool-headed in establishing the truth”), but the scholars of al-Kūfah changed it to “Mubarrad” (“chilly”), the name by which the grammarian is known.

Aslam ibn Ahjan ibn Ka'b ibn al-Hārith ibn Ka'b ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Mālik ibn Naṣr ibn al-Azd, al-Azd said to be the son of al-Ghawth. Our shaykh, Abū Sa'īd, said that:

Our shaykh, Abū Sa'īd, said that:

After the generation of al-Jarmī and al-Māzinī, grammar passed on to Abū al-'Abbās Muḥammad ibn Yazīd al-Azdī al-Thumālī [al-Mubarrad], who was descended from the Thumālah, a subtribe of al-Azd.¹⁵³ He learned grammar from al-Jarmī, al-Māzinī, and other scholars, developing the work of al-Māzinī.

It is said that he [al-Mubarrad] started studying the Book of Sībawayh with al-Jarmī, but completed it with al-Māzinī. In the handwriting of al-Ḥakīmī [there is the following quotation] from the book Device of the Men of Letters, which says:

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn al-Qāsim said, "Al-Mubarrad was one of the *Sūrahūn*¹⁵⁴ of al-Baṣrah who sweep the grounds. He was called 'Ḥayyān al-Sūrahī,' but as he traced his lineage to al-Yaman, al-Mubarrad married the daughter of al-Ḥafṣā al-Mughannī, this Ḥafṣā being a noble man (sharīf) of the people of al-Yaman."

Abū Sa'īd said:

According to what Abū Bakr ibn al-Sarrāj and Abū 'Alī al-Ṣaffār have told us about him [al-Mubarrad], his birth was during the year two hundred and ten [A.D. 825/26] and he died in the year two hundred and eighty-five [A.D. 898/99], when he was seventy-nine years old.

It is also said that his birth was during the year two hundred and seven [A.D. 822/23]. Al-Ṣūlī [Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Yahyā] said, "I heard him say that." He was buried in the cemetery of the Kūfah Gate. Among his books there were:

Al-Kāmil (The Complete);¹⁵⁵ The Garden; Improvisation; Etymology; Al-Anwā' and the Seasons; Al-Qawāfī; Penmanship and Spelling;

¹⁵³ See Durayd, Geneal., p. 288.

¹⁵⁴ As this sect does not occur in Shahrastānī, Baghdādī, Mas'ūdī, and other reference books, it is probably some local group at al-Baṣrah. The Beatty MS, which has been followed here, gives the idea that it was a band who were sweepers.

¹⁵⁵ Recent Arabic editions of this famous book have been published by Dār al-Kutub and Maktabat Nahḍat Miṣr in Cairo, and there is also the older edition put out by Kreyzing of Leipzig in 1864.

Introduction to Sībawayh; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; The Meaning of the Qur'ān, known as Kitāb al-Tāmm (Entirety); Proving the Readings [methods of reading the Qur'ān]; Explanation of the Arguments of the "Book" of Sībawayh; Necessity of Poetry; The Training of an Examiner;¹⁵⁶ The Letters in the Meaning of the Qur'ān to "Tā'(T) Hā'(H)";¹⁵⁷ The Meaning of the Attributes of Allāh, May His Name Be Glorified; Praiseworthy and Vile; Pleasing Gardens; Names of the Calamities among the Arabs; The Compendium—he did not finish it; Consolation.

Among the Transcribers of al-Mubarrad¹⁶²

Ibn al-Zajjājī, whose name was Ismā'il ibn Aḥmad, and al-Shāshī, whose name was Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad.

Abū Sa'īd, may Allāh have mercy for him, said, "In his [al-Mubarrad's] time there appeared a group interested in the Book of ¹⁵⁶ This probably refers to a scholar trained to examine old poems and tribal vernaculars.

¹⁵⁷ Tā' hā' are the letters which begin Sūrah 20.

¹⁵⁸ The word used in the Beatty MS seems to be qa'r ("thorough searching"), followed in the translation, although Flügel gives the word as ma'na ("meaning").

¹⁵⁹ For Kitāb al-Awsaṭ fī al-Nahw of al-Akhfash (the Middle), see Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (4), 244.

¹⁶⁰ This title and those following are in the Flügel edition but not in the Beatty MS.

¹⁶¹ This is perhaps a misprint, meant to be instead the grammatical forms Al-Fā'il wa-al-Maf'ūl.

Sibawayh, but they did not have (produce) a book equal to his, I mean to that of al-Mubarrad.¹⁶³ An example [of those interested in Sibawayh] was Abū Dhakwān al-Qāsim ibn Ismā'il. Abū Dhakwān wrote a book, The Meaning of Poetry, which was quoted by Ibn Durustūyah. He happened to go to Sirāf at the time of al-Zanj.¹⁶⁴ He was erudite, an authority on historical tradition, and the member of a group [of scholars]. Al-Tawwazī was the husband of the mother of Abū Dhakwān.

[Another] example was 'Ubayd ibn Dhakwān, surnamed Abū 'Alī, who lived at 'Askar Mukranī¹⁶⁵ and among whose books there were Contraries,¹⁶⁶ Reply of the Silencer, Oaths (Divisions) of the Arabians. [Another] example was Abū Ya'lā ibn Abī Zur'ah, a friend of al-Māzinī, who was eminent, a scholar of grammar and language, and trustworthy in his quoting. One of his written books was A Compendium of Grammar, which he did not finish.

Among the Scholars of al-Baṣrah

Abū Ja'far Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Rustunī ibn Yazdibān al-Ṭabarī, who belonged to the generation of Abū Ya'lā ibn Abī Zur'ah. Among his books there were:

The Strange in the Qur'ān; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; Form of the Hamzah; Declension (Conjugation); Grammar.

An Example [of Those Interested in Sibawayh]: Al-Ushnāndānī

He was surnamed Abū 'Uthmān and was quoted by Abū Bakr ibn Durayd, whom he met at al-Baṣrah. Among his books there were:

The Meaning of Poetry; Verses (Tents) of the Arabs.

¹⁶³ This evidently refers to Al-Kāmil, the first title in the list of books in the account of al-Mubarrad.

¹⁶⁴ For Sirāf, see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 211. For the Zanj Rebellion, see Glossary.

¹⁶⁵ A well-known town of southern Persia; see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 676-77.

An Example: Al-Mabrimān

He was Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn Ismā'il, surnamed Abū Bakr, who was one of the people of al-'Askar.¹⁶⁷ He had a dialogue with Abū Ḥāshim about instruction for explaining Sibawayh, which with the desire and help of Allāh we shall mention.¹⁶⁸ Among his books there were:

The Letters 'Ayn (Eyes, Springs); Grammar Compounded according to the Weak Letters; An Explanation of the "Book" of Sibawayh, which he did not complete; An Explanation of the Arguments (Proofs) of the "Book" of Sibawayh; The Illustrious Book of Streams (Events);¹⁶⁹ Description of Thanks to the Beneficent.

Account of al-Zajjāj

He was Abū Isḥāq Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad al-Sārī (Sutri) al-Zajjāj, the first pupil (leading disciple) of al-Mubarrad, with whom he studied. Whoever, moreover, wished to become a pupil of al-Mubarrad first of all explained to him [al-Zajjāj] what he wished to study. Later al-Zajjāj rose higher to be with 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Sulaymān [the vizier] and then with [the Caliph] al-Mu'taḍid, whose children he taught.

The reason for his connection with al-Mu'taḍid was that some of the court companions described for al-Mu'taḍid the book Compendium of Speech, which Maḥbarah al-Nadīm wrote. The name of Maḥbarah was Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā ibn Abī 'Abbād, surnamed Abū Ja'far. The name of Abū 'Abbād was Jābir ibn Zayd ibn al-Ṣabbāḥ al-'Askarī. He [Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā] was highly cultured and a court companion of al-Mu'taḍid.¹⁷⁰ When he composed his book in the form of tables, al-Mu'taḍid ordered [his vizier] al-Qāsim ibn 'Ubayd Allāh to find out who could explain these tables. So he [al-Qāsim] sent to Tha'lab, exposing the matter (problem), but he [Tha'lab] did not undertake the solution of the tables, saying, "I am not acquainted with this problem, but if you wish [me to work

¹⁶⁹ This is probably al-majāzī, which usually means "streams" or "events," but here may have a more technical meaning. It could be al-majāzī ("metaphorical").

¹⁷⁰ It is not perfectly clear to whom the pronouns refer, but it seems logical to interpret the passage as translated.

on] Kitāb al-'Ayn [of al-Khalīl], it is available, and there is no quoting (public presentation) of it." Then he [al-Qāsim] wrote to al-Mubarrad, asking him to explain it [the Compendium of Speech], but he answered that the book was a long one, involving labor and toil, whereas he had grown old, with resulting weakness. But [he said], "If you will turn it over to my friend Ibrāhīm ibn Sarī [al-Zajjāj] I hope that he can accomplish the task." Al-Qāsim neglected to mention al-Zajjāj to al-Mu'taḍid until al-Mu'taḍid pressed him. Then he informed him of what Tha'lab and al-Mubarrad had said and that the matter should be entrusted to al-Zajjāj. Al-Qāsim did this [referred the commentary to al-Zajjāj]¹⁷¹ and al-Zajjāj said, "Although I do not yet have the manuscript and have not yet seen the tables, I will undertake the work."

When, therefore, he ordered him to work on two parts,¹⁷² al-Zajjāj borrowed books about language from Tha'lab, al-Sukkārī, and others, because he did not know much about language. He interpreted all of two parts, having it written in the handwriting of al-Tirmidhī al-Saghīr Abū al-Ḥasan. After he had bound it and brought it to the vizier, the vizier took it to al-Mu'taḍid, who was delighted with it and ordered that three hundred gold coins (s., ḍinār) should be bestowed upon him. He also commanded him to write a commentary on the entire book. When al-Zajjāj had finished this, no manuscript was issued to any place other than the library of al-Mu'taḍid.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: This commentary appeared during the misfortunes of the sultan, apart by itself. We saw it and it was on fine paper.¹⁷³ It is said that because of it al-Zajjāj received a high position, there being assigned to him an allowance among the court companions, an allowance among the legal authorities, and an allowance among the scholars—about three hundred gold coins (s., ḍinār).

¹⁷¹ The Beatty MS clearly implies this insertion.

¹⁷² The Beatty MS, differing from Flügel here, gives al-thumā'i. In this spot, the word may mean "two parts" or "half," although it more often means "double," or has some technical signification.

Al-Zajjāj died on Friday, the eleventh night from the end of Jumādā al-Ākhirah [the eighteenth day of the sixth Muslim month] during the year three hundred and ten [A.D. 922/23]. Among his books there were:

What He Explained in the "Compendium of Speech";¹⁷⁴ Meaning of the Qur'ān; Etymology; Al-Qawāfi; Prosody; Differentiation; The Disposition of Man; The Disposition of the Horse; Abridgment of Grammar; Fa'altu wa-Af'altu; What Is Inflected and What Is Not Inflected; Commentary on the Verses of Sibawayh; Rare Forms.

Account of Ibn Durayd

Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Duraydī, who was one of his young men especially attached to him, said, "Abū Bakr [Ibn Durayd], to whom may Allāh show mercy, said to me, 'I was born at al-Baṣrah on Ṣāliḥ Street (Sikkat Ṣāliḥ) during the year two hundred and twenty-three [A.D. 837/38].'"

He was Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Durayd ibn 'Atāhiyah ibn Ḥantam ibn Ḥasan, the son of Ḥamāmī, whose name came from that of a village in the region of 'Umān called Ḥamāmā and who was the son of Jarw ibn Wāsi' ibn Wahb ibn Salamah ibn Jusham ibn Ḥādir ibn Jusham ibn Zālīm ibn Ḥādir ibn Asad ibn 'Adī ibn 'Amr ibn Mālik ibn Fahm ibn Ghānim ibn Daws ibn 'Adnān ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Mālik ibn Naṣr ibn Azd ibn al-Ghawth. After living at al-Baṣrah he [Ibn Durayd] went to 'Umān, where he dwelt for a while. He moved on to Jazīrat Ibn 'Umārah, where he spent some time, and then went to live in Persia. Finally he came to Baghdād, where he settled down.¹⁷⁵

He was learned in the language and poetry of the Arabs, for he studied with the scholars of al-Baṣrah, learning from men like Abū

¹⁷⁴ This was probably a commentary on the work of Muḥammad ibn Yahyā.

¹⁷⁵ The names of this genealogical series belong to tribes, which are dealt with in Ibn Durayd's own book, Al-Ishtiqāq (see Bibliography). His biography should be compared with the accounts in Khalikān, III, 37, and Yāqūt, Irshād, VI, (6), 483. Ibn Durayd was born at al-Baṣrah about A.D. 838. When he was about 32 years old the Zanj Rebellion occurred, so he left home and spent some 12 years in 'Umān in southeastern Arabia. When the rebellion ended A.D. 883 and he was about 44 or 45 years old, he returned to al-Baṣrah. Perhaps Jazīrat Ibn 'Umārah was a suburb of al-Baṣrah, where the other biographies say he lived. Finally he went to Persia and then Baghdād.

Ḥatīm [al-Sijistānī], al-Riyāshī, al-Tawwazī, and al-Ziyādī. Abū Bakr [Ibn Durayd], moreover, quoted the book Musālamāt al-Ashraf (Gestures of Friendship of the Nobles), written by his paternal uncle al-Ḥasan ibn Muḥammad. He died at Baghdād during the year three hundred and twenty-one [A.D. 933/34], and was buried in the cemetery known as al-Abbāsīyah on the east side to the rear of Sūq al-Silāḥ (the Weapon Bazaar).¹⁷⁶ Among his books there were:

Al-Jamharah (The Main Part, The Collection), about the science of language, which had diversities in its transcribing, with many additions and deletions, for he dictated some of it in Persia and also dictated some from memory at Baghdād. When the dictation was inconsistent, he added and subtracted. What he dictated to his pupils (young men) in Persia is known to be the beginning of the book, whereas the complete form, which is regarded as reliable, is the last transcription. The last person to make the transcription correct, in his copy, was Abū al-Faṭḥ 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Aḥmad the grammarian, who wrote it from a number of manuscripts and read it over with him [Ibn Durayd].¹⁷⁷

Saddle and Bridle; Etymology (Al-Ishtiqāq);¹⁷⁸ Large Book of the Horse; Small Book of the Horse; Al-Anwā'; The Gathered; The Acquired; Errors in Speaking; Arab Pilgrims; What He Is Questioned about in Speech and Is Answered by Him from Memory—'Alī ibn Ismā'il ibn Ḥarb compiled it under his supervision (collected it from him); Languages (Vernaculars); Weapons; The Strange in the Qur'ān, which he did not complete; Training of the Scribe, similar to the book of Ibn Qutaybah—as he did not complete more than a rough draft, nothing resulted that can be relied upon; The Borrower of Passages (The Quoter);¹⁷⁹ The Jeweled Girdle; Fa'altu wa-Af'altu; Description of Clouds and Rain.

Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Duraydī said to me:

I was present when Abū 'Alī ibn Muqlah [Muḥammad ibn 'Alī] and Ibn Ḥafṣ¹⁸⁰ were studying, with Abū Bakr [Ibn Durayd], the book of ¹⁷⁶ See Yāqūt, Geog., III, 194.

¹⁷⁷ This book, which resembles a dictionary, was published in Hyderabad, India, 1926-27, with the title Jamharat al-Lughah.

¹⁷⁸ See Bibliography.

¹⁷⁹ This title and the ones following it are omitted in the Beatty MS.

¹⁸⁰ Flügel gives Abū Ḥafṣ, the Beatty MS gives Ibn Ḥafṣ. This man was perhaps some scholar of secondary importance, who lived during the last half of the ninth and the early tenth centuries.

al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Salamah in which he refutes al-Khalīl. He [Ibn Durayd] was saying, "Abū Tālib [al-Mufaḍḍal] told the truth about one thing which he happened upon, but Abū Tālib made an erroneous statement about another matter." Then I saw this passage, which Ibn Ḥafṣ collected on about one hundred leaves, his version being mediocre.

Account of Ibn al-Sarrāj

Ibn Durustūyah, [surnamed] Abū Muḥammad, said:

He was one of the brightest of the young men of al-Mubarrad, with sharpness of intellect and quickness to comprehend. Al-Mubarrad was fond of him, keeping him near him, explaining things to him, meeting him in private and social gatherings, and enjoying his company.

He went on to say:

One day I saw Ibn al-Sarrāj when he had joined al-Zajjāj, being transferred to him [as a pupil] after the death of al-Mubarrad. As some man asked al-Zajjāj about a certain matter, he said to Ibn al-Sarrāj, "Answer him, oh, Abū Bakr!" He [Abū Bakr ibn al-Sarrāj] replied to him making a mistake. Then al-Zajjāj stopped him saying, "By Allāh, if I were at home I'd beat you, but the people here won't stand for that. We were just comparing you for brightness and quick understanding with al-Ḥasan ibn Rajā' and then you make a mistake over this sort of a question!" So he [Ibn al-Sarrāj] answered, "You've beaten me, oh, Abū Ishāq [al-Zajjāj], and you've trained me, but I've been neglecting what I studied while reading this book"—he meant the Book of Sibawayh—"because I've been diverted from it by logic and music, but now I'm going back [to Sibawayh and grammar]." He did return, writing the books which he composed and causing the leadership to fall to him after al-Zajjāj passed away.

He died in the year ————. ¹⁸¹ Among his books there were:

The large book, Roots (Fundamentals);¹⁸² Collection of Roots; The Small Compendium; Etymology; Commentary on Sibawayh; Proving of Readings [arguments for ways of reading the Qur'ān]; Poetry and the Poets; Winds, Air, and Fire; The Camel; Sequences in Historical Traditions and Reports.¹⁸³

¹⁸¹ The date of his death, omitted in the manuscript, was A.D. 929.

¹⁸² This probably refers to the roots or origins of words.

¹⁸³ Here munpāṣalāt, translated as "sequences," may refer to unbroken sequences in handing down traditions, or else to conjunctions used in relating traditions.

Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā al-Rummānī said, "When Ibn al-Sarrāj was present, his book which he wrote about roots was mentioned and some speaker said that it was better than the book Improvisation (Al-Muqṭaḍab).¹⁸⁴ Abū Bakr [Ibn al-Sarrāj] replied, 'Don't say that,' and recited:

But she wept first, and her weeping moved me to weep with her,
And I said, the first one is the best one."¹⁸⁵

Account of Abū Sa'īd al-Sirāfī, May Allāh Show Mercy to Him

The shaykh Abū Muḥammad, may Allāh strengthen him,¹⁸⁶ said to me:

Abū Sa'īd al-Ḥasan ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Marzubān was of Persian origin. His birth was at Sirāf, where he started his search for learning, but he left before he was twenty years old, going to 'Umān. After engaging in legal work there he returned to Sirāf, later moving to al-'Askar, where he dwelt for a time, and fell in with Muḥammad ibn 'Umar al-Ṣaymarī, the theologian, with whom he associated and whom he liked best among all his friends.

He was an authority for the law according to the codes of the 'Irāqī scholars, and was the successor of the judge Abū Muḥammad ibn Ma'rūf.¹⁸⁷ his grammar teacher, serving as a judge first on the East Side, then for both sides, and again for the East Side. The legal authority al-Karkhī used to meet with him and, being fond of him, formed for him a circle (class) in which he interpreted the law. His birth was before the year seventy [A.H. 270: A.D. 883/84] and he died between the first two nights of Rujab [the seventh Muslim month] during the year three hundred and sixty-eight [A.D. 978/79].¹⁸⁸ Among his books there were:

¹⁸⁴ This was a well-known book of al-Mubarrad.

¹⁸⁵ A more literal translation is "superiority is to the first."

¹⁸⁷ "His grammar teacher" is only in Flügel.

¹⁸⁸ Abū Sa'īd al-Sirāfī served as judge on different sides of the Tigris at Baghdād. The Flügel version gives his birth as before A.D. 903; the translation follows the Beatty MS, which is probably correct, as Suyūṭī, Bughyat, p. 221, says he interpreted the law for fifty years.

Commentary on Sībawayh; The Alfāt (The A's) at the End of a Line of Poetry and of Stopping; Accounts of the Grammarians of al-Baṣrah; The Origins, about grammar, three hundred leaves; Stopping and Starting;¹⁸⁹ The Art of Poetry and Good Style; Commentary on the "Maqṣūrah"¹⁹⁰ of Ibn Durayd.

Account of Ibn Durustūyah¹⁹¹

Abū Muḥammad 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Durustūyah met al-Mubarrad and Tha'lab, from both of whom he received instruction. He was distinguished and learned in many of the sciences of the inhabitants of al-Baṣrah, to whom he adhered with zealous loyalty. He wrote A Refutation of al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Salamah and Consideration of "Kitāb al-'Ayn." He died some time after the year three hundred and thirty [A.D. 941/42].¹⁹² Among his books there were:

Direction, about grammar; Guidance, a commentary on al-Jarmī; A Commentary on Eloquent Style; Training of the Writer (Scribe);¹⁹³ Al-Mutammin; Masculine and Feminine; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Spelling; The Strange in the Ḥadīth; The Meaning of Poetry; The Living and the Dead; The Mediation between al-Akhfash and Tha'lab in Connection with the Meaning of the Qur'ān, with the Point of View of Abū Muḥammad [Ibn Durustūyah] with Regards to the Matter; Commentary on the "Mufaḍḍaliyāt," which he did not finish;¹⁹⁴ Commentary on the Seven, which he did not finish; Meaning in the ¹⁸⁹ This title and the one which follows are not in the Beatty MS.

¹⁹⁰ Al-Fihrist does not include this title in the list of books written by Ibn Durayd, but Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (6), 489, gives as the title of one of his books Kitāb al-Maqsūr wa-al-Mamdūd ("The Shortened and the Lengthened").

¹⁹¹ See the Biog. Index for additional spellings of this name.

¹⁹² The Beatty MS omits the date. The translation is taken from Flügel. Zubaydī, Ṭabaqāt, p. 127, gives A.H. 347 (A.D. 958/59) as the year of the scholar's death.

Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā al-Rummānī, May Allāh Show Mercy to Him

Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā ibn 'Alī ibn 'Abd Allāh²⁰⁵ the Grammarian traces his origin to Sāmarrā, but was born at Baghdād during the year two hundred and ninety-six [A.D. 908/909]. He is one of ¹⁹⁵ Al-shay' probably signifies "the will" (of Allāh).

¹⁹⁶ Al-Muqtaḍab was a book written by al-Mubarrad.

¹⁹⁷ The first part of this name may be Nazrah instead of Barzakh.

¹⁹⁸ Title of a book by Tha'lab.

¹⁹⁹ Flügel gives naqā' ("purity"), which may be more correct than banā' ("structure").

²⁰⁰ This title is not mentioned with Ibn Muqsim. Instead of a book, it may mean "freedom of will," as Ibn Muqsim was heretical in his thinking.

²⁰¹ This refers to the book of al-Farrā' entitled Meaning of the Qur'ān.

²⁰² Title of a book by Ibn Qutaybah.

²⁰³ Al-zawā'id ("supplementary letters") are ten letters which can be added to the basic forms of Arabic words.

²⁰⁴ This title is omitted by the Beatty MS.

²⁰⁵ The Beatty MS omits "ibn 'Abd Allāh."

the most illustrious of the grammarians of al-Baṣrah and theologians of Baghdād, skilled in many of the studies (sciences) connected with the law, the Qur'ān, grammar, and theology, and prolific, moreover, in authorship and composition.

Most of the works which he composed were taken by dictation from him, being still extant at the time this book is being formed. We shall mention at this point his compositions concerning grammar, language, and poetry, but list his books on theology in their proper place, doing the same with the law.

Al-Fārisī, [surnamed] Abū 'Alī, May Allāh Show Mercy to Him

He was al-Ḥasan ibn Aḥmad ibn 'Abd al-Ghaffār, the grammarian, who died before three hundred and seventy [A.D. 980/81].²¹⁰ Among his books there were:

Beneficial (Corrected) Questions, in which he refutes al-Zajjāj—it is known as The Neglected; Argument That the Seven Readers Were the Imams of the Cities, as Designated by Abū Bakr Aḥmad ibn Mūsā ibn al-'Abbās ibn Mujāhid, with Whom May Allāh Be Well Pleased; The ²⁰⁶ The word "aims" (aghṛād) may be instead "expositions" (a'rād).

²⁰⁸ The full title of this book by al-Jarmī is Abridgment of the Grammar of the Learned.

²¹⁰ This date is omitted in the Beatty MS.

Recollection (Record); Elucidation in Grammar; Verses (Tents) of the Arabians;²¹¹ Digest of Governing Words in Declension (Conjugation); Baghdādī Questions;²¹² Ḥalabī Questions; Shirāzī Questions.

²¹¹ This title and the one which follows are not in the Beatty MS.

²¹² These three titles are written in small letters under the list of books. Before each title there are the words "and to him." The name "Baghdādī" is not written correctly. "Ḥalabī" refers to Aleppo. These titles were perhaps added by the same scribe who transcribed the Beatty MS, but after he had written down the original passage about al-Fārisī. It is also possible that the book titles were added at a later time by a different scribe.

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Second Section of the Second Chapter of the book Al-Fihrist with accounts of the scholars. This section includes accounts of the grammarians and language scholars of al-Kūfah.¹

Thus saith Muḥammad Ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: We discussed the scholars of al-Baṣrah first, because [scientific] knowledge of Arabic was derived from them and also because al-Baṣrah was established before al-Kūfah.²

Account of al-Ru'āsī

I read [something written] in the handwriting of Abū al-Ṭayyib, which stated that the name of al-Ru'āsī was Muḥammad ibn Abī Sārah, and that he was surnamed Abū Ja'far but called al-Ru'āsī because of the large size of his head. As he used to dwell at al-Nīl³ he was also called al-Nīlī. He was the first scholar of al-Kūfah to write a book about grammar.

Tha'lab said, "Al-Ru'āsī was the teacher of al-Kisā'ī and al-Farrā'," Moreover, al-Farrā' said:

When al-Kisā'ī went to Baghdād, al-Ru'āsī said to me, "Al-Kisā'ī has gone and you are more steadfast than he is." When I [also] went to Baghdād, I saw al-Kisā'ī and asked him some questions connected with al-Ru'āsī. When he answered me in disagreement with my point of view, I winked at a group of scholars from al-Kūfah who were with me. Then he said, "What's the matter with you? You haven't agreed [but] perhaps you're one of the people of al-Kūfah." I replied, "Yes." Then he said, "Al-Ru'āsī states thus and thus, but it is not correct. You have heard the Arabs say thus and thus," until he came to my question and I convinced him.

² Al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah were established as military camps. Al-Baṣrah became a town with buildings about A.D. 638 and al-Kūfah about A.D. 670. The first grammarian at al-Baṣrah lived during the seventh century, whereas al-Ru'āsī lived in the eighth century.

³ A suburb of al-Kūfah near ancient Babylon; see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 861.

This al-Ru'āsī was a righteous man. Once al-Ru'āsī said, "Al-Khalīl sent to me asking for my book, which I sent to him. He read it and then wrote his own book."⁴ It is [also] said that in the Book of Sibawayh there spoke al-Kūfī, meaning al-Ru'āsī.⁵ Ibn Durus-tūyah said, "Tha'lab thought that al-Ru'āsī was the first of the grammarians of al-Kūfah to compose a book about grammar." He died ———. Among his books there were:

Al-Fayṣal (Judgment, Division), which many have quoted; The Diminutive [a form in grammar]; The Meaning of the Qur'ān, which is quoted to this day; the large book, Stopping and Starting; the small book, Stopping and Starting.

Account of Mu'ādh al-Harrā'

From [what is written in] the handwriting of Abū al-Ṭayyib, the brother of al-Shāfi'i:

Mu'ādh al-Harrā' was the paternal uncle of al-Ru'āsī. He was Abū Muslim Mu'ādh al-Harrā', said to be surnamed Abū 'Alī, one of the protégés of Muḥammad ibn Ka'b al-Qaraḏī. His father called him Abū Muslim, but when he had a child, whom he named 'Alī, he was surnamed for him.

Mu'ādh was a friend of al-Kumayt, whom he advised to keep clear of Khālīd [ibn 'Abd Allāh] al-Qasrī, saying, "He is strongly prejudiced against the Muḏariyah." When al-Kumayt did not take his advice and Khālīd arrested him, putting him in prison,⁶ Mu'ādh lamented the occurrence, saying:⁶

⁴ Kitāb al-Ayn, the first Arabic dictionary.

⁵ This may mean that in the Book of Sibawayh, Sibawayh said "al-Kūfī," meaning "al-Ru'āsī."

⁶ Because a contemporary poet received a large gift for flattering Khālīd, the governor of al-'Irāq, al-Kumayt also tried to flatter him. But Mu'ādh warned him that he belonged to the tribe of Muḏar, was a Shī'i and an 'Irāqī, whereas Khālīd belonged to a hostile tribe, was a Sunnī and a Syrian; see Khallikān, III, 371, 372.

I advised you, but if counsel goes too far for the advised,
it is rarely accepted;
You repudiated what was guidance for you and there distressed you a disaster contrary to what you hoped for.
Thus there befell something different from what you desired, contrary to it, with far-reaching and enduring affliction.

When his [Mu'ādh's] saying reached al-Kumayt he [al-Kumayt] wrote to him:

I see you as one offering water to the sea,
Bringing to the sand of Yabrīn⁷ sand for trading.

Mu'ādh al-Harrā' lived until the days of the Barāmakah. He was born at the time of Yazīd ibn 'Abd al-Malik and died during the year in which the Barāmakah fell, which was the year one hundred and eighty-seven [A.D. 803]. He had children and grandchildren, all of whom died while he lived on. No books of his are known.

Account of al-Kisā'i

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Ḥamzah ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Uthmān, called Bahman ibn Fīrūz, said to have been surnamed Abū 'Abd Allāh. He was from al-Kūfah and learned from al-Ru'āsī and a group [of other scholars]. He went to Baghdād, where al-Rashīd placed him with his two sons, al-Ma'mūn and al-Amin.

I have read what was written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ṭayyib, stating that:

Al-Rashīd observed al-Kisā'i without being seen by him. Al-Kisā'i arose to put on his slippers, when he needed them for some purpose, but al-Amin and al-Ma'mūn got hold of them first and put them on for him. Then he kissed their heads and hands, making them promise not to do it again.⁸ When al-Rashīd sat in his audience hall he said, "Who among the people is the most honored by service?" They replied, "The Commander of the Faithful [the caliph], may Allāh exalt him!" He said, "No, but rather al-Kisā'i, for al-Amin and al-Ma'mūn serve him." Then he told them the story.

⁷ See Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 1005.

⁸ Al-Kisā'i was tutor to the two sons of Hārūn al-Rashīd. Handling shoes and slippers was regarded as a menial duty for slaves and humble servants.

It is said that when the disease of al-Kisā'i became serious at al-Rayy, al-Rashīd began to visit him, constantly returning to him. One day he heard him [al-Kisā'i] recite:

Fate has made you settle in Dhū al-Nujayl,
But it has been shown to me, as I swear by my father, that you shall not have Dhū al-Nujayl as a residence.
Your abode should be in Dhū Baqar al-Ḥimā,
But how can Dhū Baqar be compared with the place of pilgrimage (al-muzdār)?⁹

Al-Rashīd came out saying, "By Allāh, al-Kisā'i has died." When they asked him, "How is that, oh, Commander of the Faithful?" he replied, "He told me that a nomad who was staying with him fell ill and, using this verse as an illustration, died while he was with him." It is said that al-Kisā'i did die on that day.

He was called "al-Kisā'i" because he used to attend the class of Mu'adh al-Harrā' at which the others wore cloaks, whereas he wore a kisā' and mantle.¹⁰ He died at al-Rayy in the year one hundred and ninety-seven [A.D. 812/13], both he and Abū Yūsuf the Judge being buried on the same day. Among his books there were:

The Meaning of the Qur'ān; Abridgment of Grammar; [Qur'ānic] Readings; Numbers; the large book, Rare Forms; the medium-size book, Rare Forms; the small book, Rare Forms; Terminations and Connections in the Qur'ān; Disagreement of Numbers; Spelling; Nouns; Poems of Contention and Their Forms; Forms of Surnames in the Qur'ān; Letters.¹¹

¹⁰ In this sentence "cloaks" (ḥulal) very likely refers to costumes composed of shirt, inner robe, and large outer cloak. A kisā' was probably a short cloak over the shoulders. "Mantle" (ridā') is in the Flügel version. In the Beatty MS there is instead a word which seems to be rūmādī; it cannot be identified and may be a mistake. These names for garments signified different types of cloaks and mantles in different regions. For kisā', see Khallikān, II, 238.

¹¹ This title is omitted in the Beatty MS.

Naṣr ibn Yūsuf

He was a friend of al-Kisā'i, a grammarian and philologist, among whose books there were:

The Camel; The Disposition of Man.¹²

Among the Scholars of al-Kūfah

Abū al-Ḥasan al-Aḥmar, not Khalaf,¹³ lived before and after al-Kisā'i. He started ahead of him, studying under al-Ru'āsī, but reading [the Qur'ān] according to al-Kisā'i. Among his books there were:

Declension (Conjugation); Sure Knowledge of the Masters of Literary Style.¹⁴

Among Their Scholars Also, and Those among Them Who Quoted

Khalid ibn Kulthūm al-Kalbī, who according to what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī handed down [traditions about] the poems and the tribes, being versed in the genealogies, surnames, and times of the people. He also wrote works about the poems and tribes. Among his books there were:

Poets Who Are Remembered; Poems of the Tribes, dealing with a number of tribes.

Account of al-Farrā'

Abū Zakarīyah ibn Ziyād al-Farrā', a protégé of the Banū Minqar Tribe, was born at al-Kūfah. According to [what is written in] the handwriting of Salamah, al-Farrā' was called al-'Absī. From [what is written in] the handwriting of al-Yūsufī [he was called] Yaḥyā ibn Ziyād ibn Qāwī-Bakht¹⁵ ibn Dāwar ibn Kūdanār. According to [what is written in] the handwriting of Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn Muqlah:

¹² Second title not included in the Beatty MS.

¹⁴ Second title not included in the Beatty MS.

¹⁵ This name and the ones which follow are Arab transliterations of Persian names and probably inaccurate. Compare with Suyūṭī, Bughyat, p. 411.

Abū al-'Abbās Tha'lab said that the reason why al-Farrā' dictated his book about meaning [Ma'ānī al-Qur'ān] was because a friend of his, 'Umar ibn Bukayr, who was attached to al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl,¹⁶ wrote to al-Farrā', "The Emir al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl may ask me one question after another about the Qur'ān, which I shall be unable to answer. Do you think that you can collect some answers for me, or write a book, so that I can refer to what you have done?"

So al-Farrā' said to his associates,¹⁷ "Meet together, so that I can dictate to you a book about the Qur'ān." Then he appointed a day for them and, when they came together, he joined them. There happened to be a man in the mosque who was accustomed to give the call to prayer and to read [the Qur'ān] to the people during worship.¹⁸ So al-Farrā' turned to him, saying, "Recite the Fātiḥah of the Book,¹⁹ so that we can explain it!" Then he went through the entire book, the man reading and al-Farrā' explaining.

Abū al-'Abbās [Tha'lab] said, "No one previous to him was his equal and I don't suppose anybody will surpass him." Abū al-'Abbās also said: "The reason why he dictated Al-Ḥudūd was because a number of the associates (students) of al-Kisā'i came and asked him to dictate to them some verses about grammar, which he proceeded to do. At their third meeting some of them said to the others, 'If this kind of thing, which is like teaching grammar to small boys, continues, the best thing to do will be to get clear of him,' which they did. Then he became angry, saying, 'You asked me to hold a session (class), but when I took my seat you held back. By Allāh, I'll keep on dictating grammar, even if only two show up!' So he dictated this [book] for sixteen years. Never was there seen a book in his hand except once, when he was dictating the chapter 'Mulāzim' from a manuscript."²⁰

Abū al-'Abbās [Tha'lab] also said, "Al-Farrā' held sessions for the people in his mosque next to his house, opposite to where al-Wāqidī lived." He also said, "Al-Farrā' used to philosophize in his compositions and literary works, so as to insert philosophical terms in his diction."

He [al-Farrā'] spent most of his time at Baghdād, where throughout his life he collected [fees]. Then, when it was the end of the

¹⁷ These associates were probably his students.

¹⁸ Evidently al-Farrā' taught in a mosque near his house. It was the custom to give lessons in a mosque in medieval times.

¹⁹ This is the opening sūrah of the Qur'ān.

²⁰ This probably refers to the sixth chapter of the book Al-Ḥudūd.

year he went to al-Kūfah, where he stayed for forty days among his people, to whom he distributed what he had collected, showing them kindness.

Nothing is quoted from his poetry except these verses which Abū Ḥanīfah al-Dīnawarī has quoted from al-Ṭuwāl:

Oh, governor over a jarīb of land, with nine doorkeepers,²¹
Seated in the midst of a ruin, in which he is served by a doorkeeper,
Never before have we heard of the doorkeeper of a ruin;
Eyes shall not disclose me to you at a door,
For one like me does not endure the repulse of doorkeepers.

While on his way to Makkah al-Farrā' died, during the year two hundred and seven [A.D. 822/23]. Among his books there were:

Meaning of the Qur'ān, which he composed for 'Umar ibn Bukayr—four parts;²² Splendor, which he wrote for 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir; Languages (Vernaculars); Noun Forms in the Qur'ān; The Plural and Dual in the Qur'ān; Stopping and Starting; The Excellent; Instrument for Writing; Rare Forms, quoted by Salamah and Ibn Qāḍim; Fa'ala wa-Af'ala;²³ The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine.

Titles of *Al-Ḥudūd*²⁴

I copied them from [what was written in] the handwriting of Salamah ibn 'Āṣim in the following sequence:

The Arabians, about Arabic Roots; Al-Naṣb [form of relation] Derived from the Verb; The Definite and the Indefinite; Min wa-Rubb ('From'

²² The Beatty MS omits "four parts."

²⁴ The Beatty MS gives "Titles of Al-Ḥudūd" as a subheading under al-Farrā', Al-Ḥudūd being a well-known book on grammar by al-Farrā'. Ḥudūd may be translated as "definitions"; ḥadd is the singular form. Each title is introduced by the word ḥadd; this word is omitted in the translation. The first title may be Declension (Conjugation) ("Al-Ṭ-rāb").

and 'Perhaps');²⁵ Numbers; Invariable and Variable (Mulāzamah wa-Ḥall);²⁶ Al-ʿImād [a pronoun between the subject and predicate]; The Transitive Verb; In [a particle] and Its Sister Particle; Kay wa-Kay-lā ('In Order that' and 'Lest'); Ḥattā ('Until,' 'So That'); Instigating (Al-Ighrā); Al-Duʿā (Calling, Addressing [as in prayer]); The Two Forms of Nūn (N), Heavy and Light;²⁷ Interrogation; Division; The Answer; Alladhī, Man, wa-Mā ('Who,' 'Who?', and 'What'); Rubb wa-Kam ('Perhaps' and 'How Many?'); The Oath; Double and Dual;²⁸ The Call (Proclamation).

The Elogy; Al-Tarkhīm [dropping the last letter of a noun]; An ('That') Spelled with Alif (A); Idh, Idhā, and Idhan [forms of 'if']; What Does Not Mention Its Subject; Law ('If,' 'Notwithstanding') in Construction and Separate;²⁹ Narrative; Making the Diminutive; Al-Nisbah [form of relationship];³⁰ Spelling; Referring Back; Verb with Four Consonants; Verb with Three Consonants; A Word Declined from Two Places;³¹ Making a Double Letter (Incorporation Together); Marking with a Hamzah; Structures; The Plural; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; Faʿala wa-Afʿala; The Interdiction; Stopping and Starting; What [Form] Is Current and What Is Not Current.³²

Mention of Those Who Were Famous among the Associates of *al-Farrāʾ*³³

Ibn Qādim

Abū Jaʿfar Muḥammad ibn Qādim was an associate of al-Farrāʾ. He taught al-Muʿtazz before he [al-Muʿtazz] became the caliph ²⁵ In the Beatty MS this title is not properly written.

²⁶ Flügel gives mulāzamat rajl, which is a legal term, and does not seem to belong to grammar. The Beatty MS is not clear, but suggests mulāzamah wa-ḥall, which might also be translated as "invariable and free to change."

²⁷ The Beatty MS omits "and light."

²⁸ The word given as "double" is not clearly written in the Beatty MS.

²⁹ This title is in the Beatty MS, where it is not clearly written. Flügel omits it.

³⁰ The Flügel text gives instead Al-Tathnīyah ("Forming the Dual").

³¹ This word translated "declined" may be either muʿrab or muʿarrab. It might also mean "Arabicized," but here probably means "declined."

[A.D. 866]. When he did administer the caliphate he sent a messenger, who coming to him [Ibn Qādim] when he was an aged shaykh in his home, said, "I am a messenger of the Commander of the Faithful." He [Ibn Qādim] replied, "There is no Commander of the Faithful in Baghdād," meaning that they were seeking to appoint one. Then he [the messenger] said, "To the contrary, al-Muʿtazz has started to rule."

As al-Muʿtazz disliked him [Ibn Qādim] because of his harsh discipline, he feared the impulsiveness [of the caliph]. Accordingly, after saying to his family, "Peace be unto you," he set forth and did not return to them. This was during the year two hundred and fifty-one [A.D. 866]. Among his books there were:

Sufficiency, about grammar;³⁴ The Strange in the Ḥadīth; Abridgment of Grammar.

Salamah ibn ʿĀṣim

Salamah ibn ʿĀṣim, surnamed Abū Muḥammad, was an associate (pupil) of al-Farrāʾ, being a scholar of al-Kūfah. He was reliable in his quoting and an authority on grammar. He quoted all of the books of al-Farrāʾ, without deviating from him, and died while conversing with him.³⁵ Among his books there were:

The Strange in the Ḥadīth; The Vexed (Al-Malūl), about grammar.³⁶

Al-Ṭuwāl

He was surnamed Abū ʿAbd Allāh. No book of his is known. Abū al-ʿAbbās Thaʿlab said, "Al-Ṭuwāl was keen in analyzing Arabic, Salamah had a good memory for quoting books, while Ibn Qādim had a good grasp of causes (defects)."³⁷

³⁴ The Beatty MS leaves a space for this title; it was not filled in.

³⁵ At this point the Beatty MS has, badly written, what seems to be "died while conversing with him," whereas Flügel gives "Salamah died."

³⁷ The word translated freely as "analyzing" is bi-ḥikm; it is omitted by Flügel. The last word of the sentence is ʿilal, which means both "causes" and "defects."

Account of Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī

The name of Abū 'Amr was Ishāq ibn Mirār—with an i after the m—al-Shaybānī. Abū 'Amr was a protégé and teacher among the families of the Banū Shaybān Tribe and named after them because of their patronage or, as is also said, because of his presence among them and his tutoring of their children.

He quoted with a broad knowledge of language and poetry and was reliable in passing on traditions, having heard many things. Collections of the poems of all the tribes were obtained from him. He also had sons and grandsons who quoted his books. One of his sons was:

'Amr ibn Abī 'Amr

He ['Amr ibn Abī 'Amr] quoted him [Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī] and learned from him, composing books about language. Among the books of 'Amr ibn Abī 'Amr there were:

Horses; Languages (Vernaculars); Rare Forms; The Strange in the Ḥadīth; The Strange in the Compositions.³⁸

It is said that Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal used to persist in attending the session of Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī, taking down from him many of his traditions.³⁹ The judge Abū al-Ḥasan al-Ḥāshimī said:

'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Qurshī passed down the tradition from al-Ḥazunbal, who said, "'Amr ibn Abī 'Amr told us saying, 'When my father collected the poems of the Arabs, there were over eighty tribes. Everything that a tribe composed and made available for the people he copied in a manuscript, placing it in the mosque at al-Kūfah, until he had written over eighty manuscripts in his own handwriting.'"

Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī reached the age of one hundred and ten. He died during the year two hundred and six [A.D. 821/22]. Ya'qūb ibn al-Sikkīt said:

Abū 'Amr died when he was one hundred and eighteen years old, but he kept on writing with his own hand until he died. Sometimes he used to borrow my book, although at that time I was only a boy who was learning from him and writing what was in his books.

³⁸ Last title is omitted in the Beatty MS.

³⁹ The session was probably a class and the notes were written from dictation.

Ibn Kāmil said, "Abū 'Amr died on the day on which also died Abū al-'Atāhīyah and Ibrāhīm al-Mawṣilī, during the year two hundred and thirteen [A.D. 828/29]." Among his compiled books there were:

The Strange in the Ḥadīth, which was quoted by 'Abd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal from his father Aḥmad and in turn from Abū 'Amr; Rare Forms Known by the Jīm (the J); the large book, Rare Forms, in three manuscripts; The Palm; The Camel; The Disposition of Man; Letters;⁴⁰ Commentary on the book "Eloquent Style."

Account of al-Mufaḍḍal al-Ḍabbī

Abū al-'Abbās al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Muḥammad ibn Ya'lā ibn 'Āmir ibn Sālim ibn Abī al-Rizāl⁴¹ was from the Banū Tha'labah ibn al-Sid ibn Ḍabbah Tribe.⁴² According to what is written in the handwriting of al-Yūsufī, he was called Ibn Abī Ḍabbī, and, in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī, he was surnamed Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān.

It is said that he joined the revolt of Ibrāhīm ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ḥasan and that, although [the Caliph] al-Manṣūr defeated him, he pardoned him, so that al-Mahdī took him into his service. For [the Caliph] al-Mahdī he compiled the anthology of poetry entitled Al-Mufaḍḍaliyāt, containing one hundred and twenty-eight poems. These poems have been added to, selected, and rearranged before and behind, according to the ways they have been quoted. The correct version was handed down by Ibn al-A'rābī, the manuscript beginning with [a poem of] Ta'abbāṭa Sharran [Thābit ibn Jābir]:

Oh, habitual time of grief, how great with thee are passion and sleeplessness
And the knocking [on the memory] of a ghost of [former] fearfulness.⁴³

⁴⁰ This title and the one which follows are in the Flügel edition, but not the Beatty MS.

⁴² See Durayd, Geneal., p. 117; "Tha'labah," Enc. Islam, IV, 735.

⁴³ This is a free translation. See Mufaḍḍal, Die Mufaddaliyāt (Thorbecke), p. 1 n., and Mufaḍḍal, Al-Mufaḍḍaliyāt (Lyll), p. 25.

Al-Mufaḍḍal died during the year ———. Among his books there were:

Al-Ikhtiyārāt, which we have mentioned;⁴⁴ Similes (Proverbs); Prosody; The Meaning of Poetry; Expressions.⁴⁵

Account of Ibn al-A'rābī

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ziyād al-A'rābī. I have read [what was written] in the handwriting of Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn Muqlah, that Abū al-'Abbās Tha'lab said, "I watched the class (session) of Ibn al-A'rābī, which about a hundred people were attending. When he was asked questions and they studied (read) with him, he gave answers without using a manuscript (book)." He went on to say, "I was present with him for about ten years and never saw a book in his hand." He died at Surra Man Ra'a (Sāmarrā) when he was over eighty years of age.

Abū al-'Abbās [Tha'lab] also said, "He dictated to the people what was deserving.⁴⁶ Never was anyone seen with a more abundant knowledge of poetry than he had." Abū al-'Abbās [Tha'lab] said, "He was the most accomplished of men. He learned from al-Qāsim ibn Ma'n and heard (attended the lectures of) al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Muḥammad [al-Dabbī]." It was related that he was the stepson of al-Mufaḍḍal, to whom his mother was subject.

I read what was written in the handwriting of al-Kūfī as follows:

Tha'lab said, "I heard Ibn al-A'rābī say during the year two hundred and twenty-five [A.D. 839/40], 'I was born during the night when Abū Ḥanīfah died.' He [Ibn al-A'rābī] died in the year thirty-one [A.H. 231: A.D. 846] when he was eighty years, four months, and three days old."

Information about al-Qāsim ibn Ma'n: I mention him of necessity in this place because Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn al-A'rābī learned from him. He was al-Qāsim ibn Ma'n ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Mas'ūd, whom [the Caliph] al-Mahdī appointed as a judge. Waki' said:

⁴⁴ The anthology entitled Al-Mufaḍḍalīyāt.

⁴⁶ There is a variation in the texts.

Al-Qāsim was one of the most intelligent of men in all realms of culture. He had a fine vigor, discussing the Ḥadīth with its scholars, doctrine with its scholars, poetry with its scholars, history with its scholars, theology with its scholars, and genealogy with its scholars.⁴⁷ As he met with Abū Ḥanīfah someone said to him, "Do you like to be one of the young men attached to Abū Ḥanīfah?" He replied, "People can't meet with anyone in a way more profitable than meeting with Abū Ḥanīfah."

Ibn al-A'rābī died during the year two hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 845/46]. Among his books there were:

Rare Forms, which was quoted by a group [of scholars] among whom were al-Ṭūsī, Tha'lab, and others—some say there were twelve and some say nine quotations (transcriptions); Al-Anwā'; Description of the Palm; Horses; Praise of the Tribes; The Meaning of Poetry; Explanation of Similes (Proverbs); Plants; Pronunciations (Dialects); Genealogy of Horses; Rare Forms of the Inhabitants of Dabīr; Rare Forms of the Banū Faq'as;⁴⁸ Flies, which I saw copied in the handwriting of al-Sukkārī; Plants and Herbs.⁴⁹

Ibn al-A'rābī quoted some linguistic authorities among the Arabians, including al-Ṣamūti, al-Kalbī, and Abū al-Muḥabbib al-Rabā'i.

Thābit ibn Abī Thābit

He was Abū Muḥammad Thābit ibn Abī Thābit. The name of Abū Thābit was Sa'id or, according to what is written in the handwriting of al-Sukkārī, the name of Abū Thābit was Muḥammad. He was a philologist who met with the Arabian scholars of language, learning from them. He was one of the important scholars of al-Kūfah, who died ———. Among his books there were:

The Disposition of Man; Differentiation; Interdicting and Calling;⁵⁰ Disposition of the Horse; Prosody;⁵¹ Wild Animals; Digest of Arabic.

⁴⁷ The Beatty MS and the Flügel text differ on this sentence.

⁴⁸ Dabīr is a Persian village. See Yāqūt, Geog., II, 547. The name is clearly written in the Beatty MS, but Flügel gives al-Zubayrīyīn. For the Banū Faq'as Tribe, see Durayd, Geneal., p. III.

⁴⁹ Lacking in the Beatty MS.

⁵⁰ This may refer to augury and prayer, but more likely to calling down blessings.

⁵¹ Omitted in the Flügel text.

Ibn Sa'dān

He was Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn Sa'dān al-Ḍarīr, a teacher of the common people and a [Qur'ānic] reader according to the method of Ḥamzah, later choosing his own system. His origin and stock were confused, but he was born at Baghdād and belonged to the school [of language study] of al-Kūfah. He died during the year two hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 845/46], on the Day of 'Arafah [ninth day of Dhū al-Ḥajjah, the last Muslim month]. Among his books there were: [Qur'ānic] Readings; Digest of Grammar. He also wrote some definitions similar to Al-Ḥudūd of al-Farrā', but the people did not care for them.

Hishām al-Ḍarīr

He was Hishām ibn Mu'āwiyah al-Ḍarīr, surnamed Abū 'Abd Allāh, a friend of al-Kisā'i.⁵² He wrote some definitions (ḥudūd), a number of which I have seen copied in the handwritings of Abū Ja'far al-Ṭabarī and other scholars, but they were not popular. Among his books there were:

The Abridgment; Analogy (Al-Qiyās).

Al-Khaṭṭābī

He was surnamed Abū Muḥammad, his [real] name being 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Ḥarb al-Khaṭṭāb (the Marriage Maker). He was one of the grammarians of al-Kūfah, known as al-Khaṭṭābī. Among his books there were:

The large book of grammar; the small book of grammar; The Weak Letters in Grammar; The Bases and Categories of Grammar.

Al-Sarkhasī

His name was 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Muḥammad, surnamed Abū Ṭālib. I have read what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī, saying that he was a neighbor of Hishām al-Ḍarīr and that he used to sit (teach) in the mosque of al-Tarjumāniyāh. Among his books there was the large book about grammar, which is no longer to be found.

⁵² He was almost certainly a pupil of al-Kisā'i.

Ibn Mardān al-Kūfī

He was Abū Mūsā 'Isā ibn Mardān. I have read what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī telling that he learned and quoted from Abū Ṭālib.⁵³ Among his books there was Comparison of the Origins of Grammar (Analogy According to the Principles of Grammar).

Al-Karnabā'i al-Anṣārī

His name was Hishām ibn Ibrāhīm al-Karnabā'i.⁵⁴ He was from Karnabā and learned from al-Aṣma'i and others who were from among the scholars of al-Kūfah. He was surnamed Abū 'Alī and among his books there were:

Reptiles; Wild Animals; The Disposition of Horses; Plants.⁵⁵

Account of Ibn Kumāsah

He was Abū Muḥammad 'Abd Allāh ibn Yaḥyā, whose birth was during the year one hundred and twenty-three [A.D. 740/41]. I have read what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī, saying that he was Abū Yaḥyā Muḥammad 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abd al-A'lā al-Asadī, one of the inhabitants of al-Kūfah. Although he went to live at Baghdād, he derived his knowledge from the leaders of al-Kūfah. He also met some persons who quoted the poets and language scholars of the Banū Asad Tribe, among whom there were Jazī,⁵⁶ Abū al-Mawṣūl, and Abū Ṣadaqah, all belonging to the Banū Asad. From these he learned the poetry of al-Kumayt.

Ibn Kumāsah was the son of the sister of Ibrāhīm ibn Adham, the ascetic. He died at al-Kūfah the third night of Shawwāl [the tenth Muslim month] during the year two hundred and seven [A.D. 822/23]. He was a poet, among whose books there were:

Al-Anwā'; The Meaning of Poetry; Plagiarisms of al-Kumayt from the Qur'ān⁵⁷ and Other Sources.

⁵³ Probably al-Sarkhasī, or perhaps al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Salamah al-Dabbī.

⁵⁵ Last title not in the Beatty MS.

⁵⁶ The Beatty MS has a name that looks like Ḥuwwā, whereas Flügel gives Jazī, who was an authority on tribal poetry.

⁵⁷ The word in the Beatty MS is not clearly written, but seems to be something other than "Qur'ān."

Sa'dān ibn al-Mubārik

He was Abū 'Uthmān Sa'dān ibn al-Mubārik al-Makfūf, a protégé of 'Ātikah, who was a protégé of [the Caliph] al-Mahdī and the wife of al-Mu'allā ibn Ayyūb ibn Ṭarīf. Al-Mubārik was a captive from Tukhārīstān and one of the scholars of al-Kūfah. He quoted them and also quoted Abū 'Ubaydah of al-Baṣrah. He died ———. Among his books there were:

The Disposition of Man; Wild Beasts; Similes (Proverbs); Contradictions, quoted from Abū 'Ubaydah; The Two Lands, Water, Mountains, and Seas—I saw a portion of it written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī.

Al-Ṭūsī

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Sinān al-Taymī, who was learned in the traditions of the tribes and the poems of preeminent men. He met with the shaykhs of al-Kūfah and al-Baṣrah, most of his classes and study being with Ibn al-A'rābī. He had a son named ———, who followed in his footsteps in learning and memorizing. Al-Ṭūsī was hostile to Ibn al-Sikkīt because they both learned from Naṣrān al-Khurasānī and, after his death, disagreed about his writings. He left no written works.

Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim ibn Sallām

He was Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim ibn Sallām, said to be the son of Sallām ibn Miskīn ibn Zayd, Zayd being a porter. Abū 'Ubayd used to dye his head and beard with red henna, showing dignity and a fine appearance. After serving as tutor to the sons of al-Ḥarāthamah, he became the judge of Ṭarsūs at the time of Thābit ibn Naṣr ibn Mālik, remaining with him and his son until he went to the district of 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir.

He was good and pious, modest and sound in judgment. He quoted Ibn al-A'rābī, Abū Ziyād al-Kilābī, al-Umawī, Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī, al-Kisā'i, and al-Farrā', as well as some of the scholars of al-Baṣrah, among whom there were al-Aṣma'i, Abū 'Ubaydah, and Abū Zayd.⁵⁸ Whenever he wrote a book he presented it to 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir, who bestowed great wealth upon him.

⁵⁸ Probably Sa'īd ibn Aws al-Anṣārī.

He died during the year two hundred and twenty-four [A.D. 838/39] at Makkah, while he was on the pilgrimage, on the point of starting for Baghdād. This was after he had composed the books which he wrote. I read what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Nahwī as follows:

I heard 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn Sadaqāh of al-Kūfah tell what Ḥammād ibn Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm said, namely, "Abū 'Ubayd asked, 'Did you show my book, The Strange in Composition, to your father?' When I replied 'Yes,' he told me that there were in it two hundred incorrect letters. Then Abū 'Ubayd said, 'Two hundred incorrect letters are not very many for a book of this sort.'"⁵⁹

Among the books of Abū 'Ubayd there were:

The Strange in Composition; The Strange in the Ḥadīth; The Strange in the Qur'ān; The Meaning of the Qur'ān; Poets; The Shortened and the Lengthened; [Qur'ānic] Readings; Masculine and Feminine; Genealogy; Tales (News); The Training of the Judge; The Number of Verses in the Qur'ān; Oaths and Vows; Menstruation; Ceremonial Purity; Interdiction and Bankruptcy; Properties (Possessions); Similes in Use (Current Proverbs);⁶⁰ What Abrogates and Is Abrogated [in the Qur'ān]; Excellencies of the Qur'ān.

He also wrote some other legal books. Some of the associates of Abū 'Ubayd who quoted him and learned from him were:

'Alī ibn al-'Abd al-'Azīz

He died during the year two hundred and eighty-seven [A.D. 900].

Thābit ibn 'Amr ibn Ḥabīb

He was a protégé of 'Alī ibn Rābaṭah, and quoted all of his [Abū 'Ubayd's] books.

Al-Mash'arī

His name was 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn Wahb and he related, "I heard Abū 'Ubayd say, 'This book is dearer to me than ten gold coins (s., dīnār).” He continued, “Three times I asked for an explanation and he said, ‘Truly it is dearer to me than ten thousand gold coins.’” He referred to The Strange in Composition, which according to what is reported has one thousand sections with one thousand two hundred verses as examples of poetry.

Naṣrān, the Teacher of Ibn al-Sikkīt

It is said that Ya‘qūb ibn al-Sikkīt learned from him, as he was his teacher. Naṣrān said, “I studied the poetry of al-Kumayt with Abū Ḥafṣ ‘Umar ibn Bukayr.” The books of Naṣrān were preserved (memorized) by Ibn al-Sikkīt and al-Tūsī heard them [read aloud].

Account of Barzakh al-Arūḍī

Barzakh⁶¹ memorized quotations, but was very untruthful in relating information about one person or another. Yūnus [ibn Ḥabīb] the grammarian said that Barzakh was not the best quoter, but he was the biggest liar. He was attached to al-Faḍl ibn Yaḥyā and a scholar of al-Kūfah, according to what I have read in the Accounts of the Scholars of al-Kūfah, written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ṭayyib, the brother of al-Shāfi‘ī. Among his books there were:

Prosody, both the large and the small [books]; Building Words, which I saw on parchment; Refutation of al-Khalīl, Showing What Is Mistaken in “Kitāb al-‘Arūḍ” (Book of Prosody); Explanation of the Strange; The Meaning of Prosody, according to letters with numerical value;⁶² Prosody, the medium-size book.

Account of al-Sikkīt and His Son Ya‘qūb

According to what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfi: When al-Kisā’ī died, the associates (pupils) of al-Farrā’ met together and asked him to teach them, saying “You are the most learned among us.” Although he refused, they persisted with the request until he accepted. Then he needed to know their genealogies, so as to seat each one of them in accordance with the place due him. One of the persons whom he asked to state his lineage was al-Sikkīt. When he said, “What is your genealogy?” he replied, “I am from Khūzistān, may Allāh be good to you, from the village of Dawraq in the district of al-Ahwāz.” Then al-Farrā’ stayed at home for forty days, without appearing to any of his friends. When he was asked about this he replied, “Glory to Allāh, I am too bashful to see al-Sikkīt, for when I asked him about his lineage, although much of it was base, he told me the truth about it.”⁶³

⁶¹ The Beatty MS has Nazrah, but Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (2), 366 and the Flügel text give Barzakh, which is probably correct.

⁶² This title and the one following are not in the Beatty MS.

Truly he was a learned man.

Abū al-Abbās Tha‘lab said, “Ya‘qūb ibn al-Sikkīt was accomplished in a variety of sciences.” His father was a good man, one of the associates (pupils) of al-Kisā’ī, well versed in the Arabic language. He [the son Ya‘qūb] said, “I know more about grammar than my father does, but my father knows more than I do about poetry and language.”

Ya‘qūb was surnamed Abū Yūsuf. He was one of the scholars of Baghdād who drew upon those of al-Kūfah for learning. He was tutor to the sons of [the Caliph] al-Mutawakkil, about whom he had anecdotes.⁶⁴ He was acquainted with the grammar of the scholars of al-Kūfah, as well as with Qur’anic science and poetry. He met with the Arabians acquainted with language, learning from them and writing in his books what he heard them say.⁶⁵ He had his share of modesty and piety. It is said that al-Mutawakkil assigned an allowance to him until he died, during the year two hundred and forty-six [A.D. 860/61].

Ya‘qūb had a son named Yūsuf, who was a court companion to [the Caliph] al-Mu‘tadid, to whom he was personally attached. Among his [Ibn al-Sikkīt’s] books there were:

Pronunciations (Dialects); Logic;⁶⁶ Decoration; Investigation; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; the large book, Categories; Differentiation (Al-Farq);⁶⁷ Saddle and Bridle;

⁶⁴ This phrase may be “he had with him historical traditions.”

⁶⁵ He probably met with tribesmen who knew their Bedouin poetry and explained the vernacular expressions in their tribal dialects.

⁶⁶ Flügel gives Correction of Logic.

⁶⁷ In the Beatty MS this title is repeated later in the list.

Fa'ala wa-Af'ala; Creeping Things; Voices; Contraries; Trees and Plants; Wild Beasts; The Camel; Rare Forms; the large book, The Meaning of Poetry; the small book, The Meaning of Poetry; Plagiarisms of Poets and What They Agree Upon; Similes (Proverbs);⁶⁸ Permutation and Substitution [in grammar]; The Dual, the Undeclinable, and the Surnamed; Days and Nights; What Occurs in Poetry and What Is Removed from It.

Al-Ḥazunbal

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Āsim al-Tamīmī, a scholar and quoter, who quoted the book Plagiarisms of Ibn al-Sikkīt.

Account of Abū 'Aṣīdah

He was Aḥmad ibn 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Nāṣih, a scholar of al-Kūfah, who was quoted by Qāsim al-Anbārī. When [the Caliph] al-Mutawakkil wished to give orders for the selection of tutors for his two sons, al-Muntaṣir and al-Mu'tazz, he delegated the matter to Itākh. Then Itākh entrusted the affair to his secretary, who sent for al-Tuwāl, al-Aḥmar, Ibn Qādim, Aḥmad ibn 'Ubayd [Allāh Abū 'Aṣīdah], and other men of learning, summoning them to a meeting. When Aḥmad ibn 'Ubayd arrived, he sat at the far end of the group, so that the man sitting next to him asked, "Why don't you move up higher?" He replied, "Here is the place left for me."

When they had assembled, the secretary said to them, "If you will join in discussion, we shall determine your degree of scholarship, so as to make a selection." Then among them there was quoted a verse of Ibn Ghalaḥfā':

Leave me alone, verily my wrong doings and intentions were mine,
But what I spent was wealth.

They said, "Wealth is in the nominative case, as though it were the subject with 'what.'" Then they remained silent until Aḥmad [Abū 'Aṣīdah] at the far end of the gathering said, "So much for the parsing, but what is its meaning?" He said, "It means, 'Your blame should not be for me, because although I exhausted [my] wealth, honor was not lost. With regards to wealth, it is no disgrace to exhaust it."

⁶⁸ This title and the three which follow are not in the Beatty MS, and the last title is omitted by Flügel.

Then a servant came to him from the upper end of the gathering and, taking him by the hand, led him to a higher position, saying "This is not your proper place." Whereupon he replied, "When I am in a company I prefer to be raised to a higher place, rather than to be in a gathering where I am sent to a lower seat." Accordingly, he was chosen [to be a tutor], together with one other, who was Ibn Qādim. Among the books of Abū Ja'far [Abū 'Aṣīdah] there were:

The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; Additions to "Ma'āni al-Shi'r" (The Meaning of Poetry) by Ibn al-Sikkīt, with a Correction of It; Sources of Historical Tradition and Poetry.⁶⁹

Account of al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Salamah

Abū Ṭālib al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Salamah ibn 'Āsim was a philologist and scholar of al-Kūfah and also an expert penman. At first he was in the entourage of al-Faḥ ibn Khāqān, meeting Ibn al-A'rābī and other scholars. He corrected Kitāb al-'Ayn of al-Khalīl and the errors in it, thus composing a book of his own. Al-Mufaḍḍal died ———. Among his books there were:

The Excellent in the Study of Language and What Emerges from It: The Hamzah (ʾ), the Hā' (H), the 'Ayn (ʿ), the Khā' (Kh), and Ghayn (Gh), and the Hā' (H); Enlightening Souls about the Meaning of the Qur'ān, in more than twenty sections;⁷⁰ The Meaning of the Qur'ān, one part; Etymology; The Excellent, about the things in which the populace makes errors; The Lands, Sowing, Plants, Palms, and Varieties of Trees; The Disposition of Man; The Instrument of the Scribe; The Shortened and the Lengthened; The Lute (Al-'ūd) and Instruments of Entertainment;⁷¹ Introduction to the Science of Grammar; Making Clear the Likeness; The Script and the Pen; Refutation of al-Khalīl and Correction of the Mistakes, Inconsistencies, and Errors in "Kitāb

⁶⁹ The last title is not in the Beatty MS.

⁷⁰ "In more than twenty sections" is lacking in the Beatty MS.

⁷¹ "The lute" is not in the Beatty MS.

al-'Ayn"; The Excellent Book of the Communities of the Tribes; Apparition (Insanity);⁷² What a Scribe Needs; The Perfumed; Al-Anwā'.

Ṣa'ūdā'

He was one of the scholars of al-Kūfah, whose name was Muḥammad ibn Hubayrah al-Asadī, surnamed Abū Sa'id. He was one of the scholars of grammar and language who belonged to the school of al-Kūfah. He was attached to 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Mu'tazz. Among his books there were:

Summary of What Is Used by a Scribe—I saw it written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Ḥafyānī,⁷³ corrected by 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Mu'tazz; his epistle to 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Mu'tazz, about the ideas of Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim ibn Sallām which the Arabs refuted and those with which they agreed; his epistle about handwriting and what is used for sharpening and nibbing a pen.

Account of Tha'lab

According to [what is written in] the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī, he was Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā ibn Zayd ibn Sayyar Abū al-'Abbās Tha'lab. In the handwriting of Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn Muqlah it is stated that Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā [Tha'lab] said, "I saw [the Caliph] al-Ma'mūn when he came from Khurāsān, during the year two hundred and four [A.D. 819/20]. He had come from the Iron Gate on his way to the Palace of al-Ruṣāfah, the crowds being lined up as far as al-Muṣallā."⁷⁴ He went on to say, "My father was carrying me on his arm, and when al-Ma'mūn passed by he raised me up on his arm, saying to me, 'This is al-Ma'mūn.' It was during the year four [A.H. 204: A.D. 819/20], but I have remembered it to this hour. At that time I was four years old."

⁷² This title and the ones which follow are not in the Beatty MS.

⁷³ This name is not written clearly enough to be sure of its spelling or to include it in the Biog. Index. The two titles which follow are omitted in the Beatty MS.

Abū al-'Abbās [Tha'lab] also said:

I began to take an interest in Arabic studies, poetry, and language during the year sixteen [A.H. 216: A.D. 831]. When I was twenty-five years old I became skilled in Arabic, memorizing all of the books of al-Farrā', until not a single letter escaped me. I was more concerned with grammar than with other things, until I knew it accurately and became intent on poetry, rhetoric, and strange forms. I associated with Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn al-A'rābī for about ten years.⁷⁵

Abū al-'Abbās [also] said:

I remember one day when Aḥmad ibn Sa'id was with me. I was at his home with a group [of scholars], among whom there were al-Sukkārī⁷⁶ and Abū al-'Āliyah. While I was with him, he reminded us of a poem by al-Shammākh. When they started to discuss its meaning and raised questions about it, I replied without hesitation, while Ibn al-A'rābī was listening. After we had dealt with the greater part of the poem, Aḥmad ibn Sa'id turned to him [Ibn al-A'rābī] and showed him how surprised he was because of me.

Abū al-'Abbās [Tha'lab] died during the year two hundred and ninety-one [A.D. 903/904], being buried in the vicinity of his house near the Damascus Gate. Among his books there were:

What is Guarded (Preserved) in Grammar, which he wrote in the form of definitions (ḥudūd); Disagreements of the Grammarians; The Meaning of the Qur'ān; The Favored, an abridgment of grammar; How the Populace Errs in Speaking; [Qur'ānic] Readings; The Meaning of Poetry; The Diminutive; What Is Declined and What Is Not Declined; What Is Grammatical and What Is Not Grammatical; Exceptions; Similes (Proverbs); Oaths and Calamities; Stopping and Starting; The Derivation of Expressions from Legends (Historical Traditions); Spelling; The Medium, which I have seen; The Excellent Book of the Strange ⁷⁵ The last two sentences occur in the Beatty MS but not in the Flügel text.

in the Qur'ān; Questions; Definition of Grammar; Exposition of the Statement of Ibnat al-Khus [Hind]; Eloquent Style.⁷⁷

Abū al-'Abbās [Tha'lab]⁷⁸ also left discourses which he dictated to his pupils in his classes. They included something about grammar, language, [historical] traditions, the meaning of the Qur'ān, and poetry. A group [of pupils] quoted the things which they had heard and discussed with him. Among them were Abū Bakr ibn al-Anbārī, Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Yazīdī, Ibn Durustūyah, and Ibn Muqsim. Abū al-'Abbās also edited some of the poems of the great masters and other men, such as al-'A'shā, al-Nābighatān,⁷⁹ Tufayl, al-Ṭirimāh, and others. Among his pupils (associates) there were:

Abū Muḥammad 'Abd Allāh the Syrian

He was a member of the school of al-Kūfah. Among his books there was Collected Questions.

Also:

Ibn al-Ḥā'ik

His name was Hārūn, his origin being Jewish, from al-Ḥirah. He was a pupil (young man) of Abū al-'Abbās [Tha'lab] of outstanding ability and learned in the grammatical studies of al-Kūfah.

He had discussions with al-Mubarrad, and it is related that one day, while he was conversing with him, al-Mubarrad said to him, "I notice that you are full of understanding, but at the same time free from pride." Ibn al-Ḥā'ik replied to him, "Oh, Abū al-'Abbās, it is [because of] you that Allāh has provided our bread and livelihood." Then Abū al-'Abbās [al-Mubarrad] said to him, "In spite of [receiving] your bread and livelihood, you would be proud if you had a proud nature."⁸⁰ Among his books there were:

⁷⁷ This title is not in the Beatty MS. The other titles are taken from the Beatty MS, which differs from the Flügel text.

⁷⁸ The Beatty MS has Ibn al-'Abbās, which is evidently a mistake.

⁷⁹ For al-Nābighatān ("the two Nābighahs"), see al-Nābighah al-Dhubaynī and al-Nābighah al-Ja'dī in the Biog. Index.

⁸⁰ Al-Mubarrad evidently cared for Hārūn as an apprentice before Hārūn studied with Tha'lab.

The Weak Letters in Grammar; "The Strange" of al-Ḥāshimī⁸¹—there is a difference of opinion about it, some say that al-Ḥāshimī, whose name is ———, wrote it from [the dictation of] Tha'lab, others say that al-Ḥāshimī wrote it while close to Tha'lab and [therefore] it is considered that Ahmad ibn Ibrāhīm was its author.⁸²

Account of Abū Muḥammad Qāsim al-Anbārī and His Son, Abū Bakr

Abū Muḥammad Qāsim ibn Muḥammad ibn Bashshār al-Anbārī was an inhabitant of al-Anbār, who met with Salamah [ibn 'Āsim] and similar associates of al-Farrā'. He was in touch with a group of linguistic scholars and was also acquainted with historical traditions. Among his books there were:

The Disposition of the Horse; The Disposition of Man; Similes (Proverbs); The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; The Strange in the Ḥadīth.

Abū Bakr [Ibn al-Anbārī], His Son

Muḥammad ibn al-Qāsim learned from his father and from Abū Ja'far Ahmad ibn 'Ubayd [Abū 'Aṣidah], also gaining a knowledge of grammar from Abū al-'Abbās Tha'lab. He was superior to his father and more learned, having extreme brilliance and understanding, excellence of genius, and rapidity of memory. In addition to these things and observance of the virtues, he was known to be free from impropriety and weakness, being proverbial for readiness to extemporize and for agility of repartee. Most of his dictation was without any notes or book.

He did not die from old age, but passed away close to the age of fifty.⁸³ He died during the year three hundred and twenty-eight [A.D. 939/40] in Dhū al-Ḥijjah [the twelfth Muslim month], being buried in his own home. Among his books there were:

⁸¹ Flügel gives al-Ḥishāmī. Evidently Hārūn wrote a commentary about this book, The Strange, by a disciple of Tha'lab.

⁸³ The Arabic is ḍūn, which can mean "before," "after," or "near." As Ibn Khallikān says he was born A.D. 885 and the Beatty MS qualifies the word with kathīr ("very"), a reasonable translation seems to be "close to the age of fifty."

The Enigmatic in the Meaning of the Qur'ān, which he did not finish; Contraries in Grammar; The Bright; The Training of Scribes, which he did not finish; The Sufficient, about grammar; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; The Clear in (about) Grammar; Refutation of the Questions of Ibn Shanabūdh; The Strange in the Ḥadīth, which he did not finish; Spelling; The Lām (The L); Stopping and Starting; The Hā' (the H) in the Book of Allāh, May His Name Be Glorified; Al-Sab' al-Ṭuwāl, which he edited;⁸⁴ the large book, The Clear in Grammar; The Alif (The A); Al-Mufaḍḍalīyāt;⁸⁵ The Poetry of al-Rā'ī, which he edited; Refutation of Whoever Disagrees with the Version of the Qur'ān of 'Uthmān.

Abū Bakr [Ibn al-Anbārī] also compiled a number of anthologies of the poetry of the Arab masters of style. They included the poetry of Zuhayr, al-Nābighah [al-Dhubayānī], [al-Nābighah] al-Ja'dī, al-A'shā, and others in addition to them. He also gave lectures about language, grammar, and historical traditions, which a group of the scholars coming to him heard him deliver. Abū Sa'īd al-Dabīlī and others were among them.

Abū 'Umar al-Zāhid

He was Abū 'Umar Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Wāhid ibn Hāshim al-Mutarriz, known as al-Zāhid (the Ascetic), a pupil (associate) of Abū al-'Abbās Tha'lab. I heard a group of scholars magnifying his reputation and dealing with his genealogy in an exaggerated way. He was extreme in opposing and taking sides against 'Alī, for whom be peace. He lived on the street of Abū al-'Anbar, and died during the year forty-five [A.H. 345: A.D. 956/57], when he was eighty-six years old.⁸⁶ Among his books there was Al-Yāqūt, about language.⁸⁷ Account of This Book [Al-Yāqūt] and How It Became Sound (Accepted as Authentic)

⁸⁴ These were the seven long sūrahs of the Qur'ān, sūrahs 2 through 8. The five titles which follow are not found in the Beatty MS.

⁸⁵ The anthology of al-Mufaḍḍal.

⁸⁷ Al-yāqūt can mean "jewel," but usually means "ruby."

I read [what was written] about him [al-Zāhid] in the handwriting of Abū al-Faṭḥ 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Aḥmad the grammarian, who was truthful, inquiring, and searching:

Abū 'Umar Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Wāhid was an associate (pupil) of Abū al-'Abbās Tha'lab. He began to dictate this book, Kitāb al-Yāqūt, on Thursday, during the last night of al-Muharram [the first Muslim month] in the year three hundred and twenty-six [A.D. 937/38], in Jāmi' al-Madīnah in the city of Abū Ja'far,⁸⁸ extemporizing without book or notes.

He continued with the dictation, session after session, until he came to the end. I wrote down what he dictated as session followed session, after which he wished to make additions, adding more than he had already dictated. Thus he extemporized another Yāqūt, to which supplement Abū Muḥammad al-Ṣaffār gave special attention, with assiduous service, re-reading the book for Abū 'Umar. It was from him that I obtained the additions. Then the group [of pupils] came together for a reading in his presence, given by Abū Ishāq al-Ṭabarī. He called this version The Summing Up (Al-Fadhlakah). He [al-Ṭabarī] read it for him, the group listening to him.

Then even after that he added to it, so that I, ['Ubayd Allāh] collecting in my [copy of the] book all of these additions, started to read the book to him on Tuesday, three nights before the end of Dhū al-Qa'dah [the eleventh Muslim month] during the year three hundred and twenty-nine [A.D. 940/41]. I finished [reading] it in the month of Rabī' al-Ākhir [the fourth Muslim month] during the year three hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 943]. While I was reading I had with me all of the transcriptions; the manuscript of Abū Ishāq al-Ṭabarī, the manuscript of Abū Muḥammad al-Ṣaffār, the manuscript of Abū Muḥammad ibn Sa'd al-Qutrubulī, and the manuscript of Abū Muḥammad al-Ḥajjājī.⁸⁹ As I was reading to him, he gave me more additions, but finally we agreed about the entire text from start to finish.

Then, even after that, he gave extemporaneously some more "jewels" [additions to Al-Yāqūt] and supplements, further expanding the book, with Abū Muḥammad Wahb giving special attention to these additions and to serving him. Then he gathered the group [of pupils] together and promised that Abū Ishāq al-Ṭabarī would correct the book in his presence. This, moreover, would be the final editing to establish the book as authentic for him, with no further additions. This version was called Al-Mijrā'iyah.⁹⁰ The group gathered together on Tuesday, the fourteenth night of Jumādā' al-Ūlā' [the fifth Muslim month] during the year three hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 943] at his house on the Street of Abū al-'Anbar, where he dictated to those present what I copied down.

⁸⁸ Jāmi' al-Madīnah was the "Mosque of the City." The city of Abū Ja'far was the Round City of Baghdad, built by the Caliph Abū Ja'far al-Manṣūr. See Le Strange, Baghdad, pp. 33-36.

⁸⁹ These were evidently pupils who helped their master to compile his book. None of them became especially famous.

Abū 'Umar Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Wāḥid [al-Zāhid] said:

This version, which Abū Ishāq al-Ṭabarī has made unique, is the final rendering. So hear it and, after that, if any one quotes me from this transcription and version, but does not give my wording even to the extent of one letter, he will misquote me. For this has [resulted] from hour after hour⁹¹ of the reading of Abū Ishāq [al-Ṭabarī] to the rest of the people, while I myself was listening, letter after letter.

Abū al-Faḥḥ [ʿUbayd Allāh] said, "He began with this version on Tuesday, the fourteenth night of Jumādā' al-Ūlā' during the year three hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 943].

Among the books of Abū 'Umar [al-Zāhid] there were:

Commentary on the book "Eloquent Style" (Kitāb al-Faṣīḥ);⁹² Beauty of "Eloquent Style"; Al-Marjān; about "Al-Kalamāt" (The Phrases), which al-Ḥaḍramī wrote and he [al-Zāhid] plagiarized from him, transcribing the book which was a composition of al-Ḥaḍramī;⁹³ The Acrostic (Al-Murwashshah); Hours; Day and Night; Approval; Tithings; Counsel; Classification; Commentary on "The Names of the Poets";

⁹¹ The translation follows Flügel, who gives sā'ah ba'd sā'ah ("hour after hour"). The Beatty MS has shā'ah ba'd shā'ah ("publicizing after publicizing").

The Tribes; The Concealed and the Hidden; The Apple;⁹⁴ Falsity of "Al-Mustaḥsan" (The Approved); Introductions (Gateways); Revealing "Introductions"; Rare Forms; Falsity of "Al-Jamliarah" and a Refutation of Ibn Durayd; Falsity of "Kitāb al-'Ayn"; What the Arabians Disapprove Of, from what Abū 'Ubayd [al-Qāsim ibn Sallām] quoted and composed; Speed.⁹⁵

It is said that along with his [knowledge of] colloquialisms he was a poet, and from his poetry there is:

If the Rāfiḍ from Damascus completes his disgrace,
He will hide himself with his right hand.
But if he comes to you feigning an innocent face,
The rejection will appear on his forehead.⁹⁶

This poem suffices to show his ignorance.

⁹⁴ Flügel gives Al-Tuffāḥah ("The Apple"), but the word given in the Beatty MS could equally well be Al-Naffāḥah ("The Perfumed," or "The Agreeable") or Al-Thafāḥah ("The Foolish").

⁹⁵ This title is omitted in the Beatty MS. The order of the other titles follows the Beatty MS, which differs from the Flügel version.

⁹⁶ This poem is omitted by the Beatty MS. The word rāfiḍ may mean "rejected," "abandoned," or refer to one of the Rawāfiḍ heretics; see Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 34.

In the Name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Third Section of the Second Chapter

Ibn Qutaybah

He was Abū Muḥammad ‘Abd Allāh ibn Muslim ibn Qutaybah of al-Kūfah, where he was born. He was called “al-Dīnawarī” because he was the judge of al-Dīnawar. Although Ibn Qutaybah was an ardent member of the school of al-Baṣrah, he was connected with the two schools, speaking in his writings about the scholars of al-Kūfah. He was accurate in what he quoted, being an authority on language, grammar, strange forms in the Qur’ān, the meaning of poetry, and the law. He was a prolific composer and author, whose numerous works were in demand. His birth was at the time of the new moon of Rajab [the seventh Muslim month] and he died during the year two hundred and seventy [A.D. 883/84]. Among his books there were:²

The Great Book of the Meaning of Poetry (Kitāb Ma‘ānī al-Shi‘r al-Kabīr), comprising twelve books (chapters): The Horse, forty-six sections; The Camel, sixteen sections; The Scab, ten sections; The Mange, twenty sections; Regions (Dwellings), ten sections; Winds, thirty-one sections; Lions and Wild Beasts, seventeen sections; Reptiles, fourteen sections; Oaths (Faith) and Calamities, seven sections; Women and Amatory Poetry, one section; Youth and Old Age, eight sections;³ Mistakes (Taṣḥīf) of the Scholars, one section.

The Sources of Poetry (‘Uyūn al-Shi‘r), which comprises ten books (chapters): Ranks; Worthy Deeds; Meaning; Chains of Poetry (Necklaces); Good Qualities; Praises; Means of Transportation; Sacred Places; Witnesses; Jewels.

The Sources of Information (‘Uyūn al-Akhbār), comprising ten books (chapters): The Sultan; War; Dominion; Dispositions; Learning; Asceticism; Brothers; Needs; Nourishment; Women.⁴

Legal Instruction (Al-Taḥqīq), three sections of which book I have seen, filling nearly six hundred sheets in Bark handwriting.⁵ As it lacked some two sections, I inquired about the book from a group of the people of al-Jabal, who thought that it was extant [in complete form], longer than the books of al-Bandanī and better than his works.

Also among his books there were:

The Training of the Scribe (Secretary); Poetry and the Poets; Horses; Compendium of Grammar; Differences in the Ḥadīth; Inflection (Declension) in the Qur’ān; [Qur’ānic] Readings; Al-Anwā’; Comparison of the Arabs and Persians; The Difficult to Solve; Things Known; Correction of the Error of Abū ‘Ubayd [al-Qāsim ibn Sallām] in “The Strange in the Ḥadīth”; Compendium of Law; Questions and Answers; Learning (Al-‘Ilm), nearly fifty sheets; Gambling and Betting with Arrows;⁶ Small Compendium of Grammar; Refutation of the Mushabbihah; Tradition and What Is Reported;⁷ Register of the Secretaries (Dīwān al-Kuttāb); [Literary] Gems of Pearl; The Disposition of Man; Grades and Virtues from “The Sources of Poetry”; Guides of Prophecy; Disagreements in the Interpreting Ḥadīth; The ³ The Flügel edition has Genealogy and Milk.

⁴ On the margin of the Beatty MS there is the note, “Book, The Strange in the Ḥadīth, which I have seen.”

⁵ “Bark” may refer to a district of al-Yaman by that name or may be “Tark” (Turkish).

⁷ This title and those which follow are in the Flügel edition but not in the Beatty MS. The title Dīwān al-Kuttāb might also be Dīwān al-Kitāb. For the Mushabbihah, in the previous title, see the Glossary.

Wisdom of Proverbs; Drinks; The Manners of Society; The Strange in the Ḥadīth.⁸

Abū Ḥanīfah al-Dīnawarī

He was Aḥmad ibn Dā'ūd from among the people of al-Dīnawar, who learned from the scholars of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah, but derived most of his knowledge from Ibn al-Sikkīt and his [own] father.⁹ He was skilled in many sciences, among which there were grammar, philology, geometry, arithmetic, and the sciences of astronomy.¹⁰ He was accurate in connection with what he quoted and related, and known for reliability. Among his books there were:

Plants, valued by scholars for its composition; Eloquent Style; Al-Anwā'; Al-Qiblah wa-al-Zawāl;¹¹ Calculation of Cycles; Refutation of Lughdah al-Iṣbahānī;¹² An Examination of Indian Mathematics; The Cities (Regions), a large book; Addition and Subtraction (Summing Up and Dividing); Algebra and Equation; Rare Forms of Algebra; Wills; Poetry and the Poets; How the Populace Errs in Speaking; Al-Akhbār al-Ṭiwāl (Legends in the Ṭiwāl Meter).¹³

Abū al-Haytham al-Rāzī

He was mentioned by al-Sukkārī, but nothing more is known about his life. Among his books there were:

Al-Anwā', which I saw written in the handwriting of al-Sukkārī, about twenty leaves; Basis of Language.¹⁴

⁸ On the margin of the Beatty MS there is written, "The Book of the Strange in the Ḥadīth; he made improvements in it."

⁹ The Flügel edition has "son" instead of "father," but the Beatty MS, as translated, is probably correct.

¹⁰ The Flügel edition has "India" instead of "astronomy," which is taken from the Beatty MS.

¹¹ Al-qiblah is the direction to be faced in prayer, but here may have a more technical astronomical connotation. Al-zawāl usually means the going down of the sun, but may also signify the disappearance of the sun. See "Kibla," Enc. Islam, II, 985-89.

¹³ This title is omitted in the Beatty MS. Ṭiwāl indicates "long."

¹⁴ This title is omitted in the Beatty MS. The title preceding it is given incorrectly by Flügel.

Al-Sukkārī

He was Abū Sa'īd al-Ḥasan ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn al-'Alā' al-Sukkārī. I have copied his genealogy from [what was written in] the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥasan ibn al-Kūfī. He had an excellent knowledge of language, genealogy, and historical events. He was also sought after for his penmanship, because of its accuracy. He died ———. Among his books there were: Wild Beasts—he made improvements in its composition; Plants, a small portion of which I saw written in his own handwriting.

Al-Sukkārī also compiled an anthology of the poems of the masters, with selections from the tribes and from such poets as composed verse: Imru' al-Qays, al-Nābighatān,¹⁵ Qays ibn al-Khaṭīm, Tamīm ibn Ubayy ibn Muḥbil, in addition to the poems of al-Luṣūṣ and the poems of Hudhayl,¹⁶ Hudbah ibn Khashram, al-A'shā, Muzāḥim al-'Uqaylī, al-Akhtal, Zuhayr, and others besides them. He also dealt with the poetry of Abū Nuwās, commenting on its meaning and strange forms. This [anthology] was nearly a thousand leaves in length. I saw it written in the handwriting of al-Ḥalwānī, who was close to Abū Sa'īd [al-Sukkārī]. Water Sources and the Desert (Al-Manā'il wa-al-Qawwā)—I saw it written in his own handwriting;¹⁷ Tents for Migrating (Current Verses).

Al-Hāmid

He was Abū Mūsā Sulaymān ibn Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad al-Hāmid, who was a friend of Tha'lab, having a special connection with him. He learned from the scholars of al-Baṣrah, being noted for accuracy of penmanship and good technique for correctness. He was a scribe,¹⁸ among whose books there were:

¹⁵ Al-Nābighatān ("the two Nābighahs") were al-Nābighah al-Dhubaynī and al-Nābighah al-Ja'dī.

¹⁷ The Beatty MS is followed in the translation of this title. Flügel has al-qurā ("villages") instead of al-qawwā ("desert"). The title which follows is omitted in the Beatty MS.

The Disposition of Man; Plants; Wild Beasts, which I saw copied in the handwriting of his sister's son, Zakarīyā'; Abridgment of Grammar.

Al-Aḥwal

He was Abū al-'Abbās Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Dīnār¹⁹ al-Aḥwal, a scholar of language and poetry, as well as a copyist. Among his books there were:

Calamities; Weapons; What Agrees in Pronunciation but Differs in Meaning; Fa'ala wa-Af'ala; Similarities.²⁰

He also edited the poetry of Dhū al-Rummah and other poets.

Ibn al-Kūfi

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn Zubayr al-Asadī al-Kūfi, a learned man who had an accurate penmanship and quoted from a collection of books. He was truthful in giving reports and keen in analysis. Among his books there were:

The Meaning of Poetry and Disagreements of the Scholars about It—I saw a small part of it; Necklaces and Single Gems in Language and Poetry.²¹

Ibn Sa'dān Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad ibn Sa'dān ibn al-Mubārak

He was a collector of books, an accurate penman, and reliable in making quotations. Among his books there were:

Horses, which I have seen and it was delightful; The Letters of the Qur'ān.²²

His son, Muḥammad ibn Sa'dān, wrote a large book, [Qur'ānic] Readings, and a book Abridgment of Grammar.

Al-Ma'badi

His name was Aḥmad ibn Sulaymān, surnamed Abū al-Ḥusayn. He quoted 'Alī ibn Thābit, who quoted Abū 'Ubayd [al-Qāsim ibn Sallām]. His penmanship was in demand and he was one of the scholars who were famous and trusted.

¹⁹ Ibn Dīnār is omitted in the Beatty MS, but the rest of the name is included.

²⁰ This title is omitted in the Beatty MS.

²¹ The second title is not in the Beatty MS.

²² This title and the account of his son, which follows, are not included in the Beatty MS.

Al-Karmānī

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Mūsā al-Karmānī was preeminent in a knowledge of language and grammar. As he had a good handwriting and was accurate in copying, he was sought after by the people for his penmanship. He transcribed [manuscripts] for pay. Among his books there were:

What al-Khalīl Neglected in "Kitāb al-'Ayn" and What He Mentioned as Obsolete, Used, and Unused, and What He Left Out; Compendium of Language; Grammar, which he did not finish; Summary of Grammar.²³

Al-Fazārī

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Ḥabīb ibn Sulaymān ibn Samurah ibn Jundab al-Fazārī was a scholar and was accurate as a calligrapher.

Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Ishāq al-Zajjājī²⁴

He was a grammarian, among whose books there was Al-Qawāfī.

Ibn Wadā'

His name was 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Wadā' ibn al-Ziyād ibn Hānī al-Azadī, surnamed Abū 'Abd Allāh. He was learned and accurate in his penmanship, which was sought after, so that for his penmanship he received pay.

Al-Namarī²⁵

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh, among whose books there were: The Shining, about colors; The Meaning of "Al-Ḥamāsah";²⁶ Adornment.

Al-Tirmidhī al-Kabīr (the Elder, the Greater)²⁷

His name was ———.

²³ Last title omitted in the Beatty MS.

²⁴ This scholar is omitted by the Beatty MS.

²⁵ The Beatty MS omits this paragraph about al-Namarī.

²⁶ The reference may be to the anthology of this title by Abū Tammām, who died A.D. 850.

²⁷ The Flügel edition has al-Ramadhī, but the Beatty MS makes it clear that the correct name is al-Tirmidhī.

Al-Tirmidhī al-Saghīr (the Younger, the Lesser)

His name was Muḥammad ibn Muḥammad.

*Aḥmad ibn Ibrāhīm*²⁸

He was grammarian who was the teacher of Abū al-‘Abbās Tha‘lab. He was surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan and, although his penmanship was in demand, he did not compose any books.

*Ibn Fāris*²⁹

Among his books there was the book Al-Ḥamāsah.

*Al-Ḥulwānī*³⁰

He was Abū Sahl, whose name was Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn ‘Aṣīm al-Ḥulwānī. It is said that he was close to Abū Sa‘īd al-Sukkārī, quoting his books and learning from him. Although he was one of the scholars, he had an extremely bad handwriting. Among his books there was Jinni-Possessed Men of Letters.

Abū ‘Abd Allāh al-Khawlānī Ibn Mihrawayh³¹

Among his books there was Race Horses.

Al-Munkhalī

Al-Yashkūrī

Al-Talḥī

Ibn Shāhīn Abū al-‘Abbās Aḥmad ibn Sa‘īd ibn Shāhīn

‘*Alī ibn Rabi‘ah al-Baṣrī*³²

Among his books there was What the Arabs Have Said and the Populace Enlarged Upon.

²⁹ This name and the following sentence are not in the Beatty MS.

³⁰ In the Beatty MS the name al-Ḥulwānī is clearly given, but Abū Sahl is omitted, as well as the title of the book.

³¹ The Beatty MS omits this name, giving only Ibn Mihrawayh.

³² This name and book are not in the Beatty MS.

Ibn Sayf

His name was Aḥmad ibn ‘Abd Allāh ibn Sayf al-Sijistānī, who was surnamed Abū Bakr and was one of the scholars.

*Al-Aḥmadī*³³

He was Abū al-Ḥasan, whose name was Muḥammad ibn ‘Abd Allāh ibn Ṣāliḥ. He went from Baghdād to Egypt, being attached to Ibn Ḥinzābah. His handwriting was good and accurate.

*Aḥmad ibn Sahl*³⁴

His book was Choice of the Way.

Al-Jarmī Abū ‘Abd Allāh Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Ishāq ibn Abī Ḥumaydah al-Makkī

He was known as Ibn Abī al-‘Alā’, and was a scholar whose handwriting was sought after because of its precision. He was also a historian.

Abū *Dimās*³⁵

Among his books there was Al Ḥamāsah.

Account of Ibn Kaysān

He was Abū al-Ḥasan Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Kaysān. “Kaysān” is “treachery” (ghadr), his name in the vernacular of the Banū Sa‘d Tribe. Kaysān was a grammarian, but not a skilled one. Abū al-Ḥasan [the son of Kaysān] was an excellent man who combined the teachings of the two schools [of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah], deriving knowledge from both of them. Among his books there were:

The Strange in the Ḥadīth, about four hundred leaves; The Proof; Truths; The Selected; The School of Thought; Stopping and Starting;

³³ Flügel gives al-Asadī. The sentence following also differs from the Beatty MS.

³⁴ This name and book are lacking in the Beatty MS.

³⁵ Omitted by the Beatty MS.

Spelling; [Qur'ānic] Readings; Al-Shādhānī, about grammar;³⁶ Masculine and Feminine; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Declensions (Conjugations); Abridgment of Grammar; The Meaning of the Qur'ān, known as The Tens (Delights, Conversations);³⁷ Definition of the Verb and Object; Questions concerning the School of Thought of the Grammarians and the Points about Which the Scholars of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah Differ; The Sufficient in Grammar.

Lughdah al-Iṣbahānī Abū 'Alī al-Ḥasan ibn 'Abd Allāh

He was born at Iṣbahān, but came to the settled districts, where he received instruction from the same person with whom Abū Ḥanīfah al-Dīnawarī studied. Among his books there were:

Refutation of the Poets; Logic; The Weak Letters of Grammar; The Abridgment, about grammar; The Attributes (Descriptive Words); The Soft and the Cheerful; Naming; Commentary on the "Book of Meaning" of al-Bāhili; Dissolution (Refutation) of the Weak Letters of Grammar.

Ibn al-Khayyāt Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Maṣṣūr al-Khayyāt

He was an inhabitant of Samarqand who came to Baghdād, where he met with Ibrāhīm ibn al-Sarī al-Zajjāj, with whom he had a controversy. He drew upon the two schools [of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah]. Among his books there were:

The Large Book of Grammar; The Meaning of the Qur'ān; The Sufficient (The Veil);³⁸ The Abridgment.

Nafṭuwayh (Niftawayh)

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Urfah ibn Sulaymān ibn Mughayrah ibn Ḥabīb ibn al-Muhallab al-'Atakī al-Azdi. He learned from Tha'lab and al-Mubarrad and heard [the lectures of] Muḥammad ibn al-Jahm, 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Ishāq ibn Salām, and the associates of al-Madā'inī.

³⁶ In this title, al-Shādhānī is probably al-Faḍl ibn Shādhān.

His mother was a descendant of Khālīd ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Murri al-Ṭahhān, the historian, and his birth was during the year two hundred and forty-four [A.D. 858/59]. He had a virtuous character, was an excellent teacher, and drew upon both schools [of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah].

His class was in the Mosque of the People of Anbār³⁹ in the early mornings. He was in agreement with the [legal] sect of *Dā'ūd*⁴⁰ in which he was a leader. He died the sixth of Ṣafar [the second Muslim month] during the year three hundred and twenty-three [A.D. 935], being buried the day after his death at the Kūfah Gate. Ibn al-Barnhādan prayed for him. Among his books there were:

History; Abridgments; The Strange in the Qur'ān; The Sufficient in Grammar; Receiving Full Payment, about contracts;⁴¹ Similes (Proverbs); Testimonials, Al-Qawāfī and a Refutation of Whoever Thinks that the Arabs Derive Words, One from the Other; Refutation of Whoever Upholds the Creation of the Qur'ān; Refutation of al-Mufaḍḍal [ibn Salāmah] in Connection with His Criticism of al-Khalīl; Salt;⁴² Nouns (Origins); The Arabs Speak According to Nature Rather than Education.

Al-Ja'd

He was Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn 'Uthmān al-Ja'd, an associate of Ibn Kaysān, who derived knowledge from both schools [al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah]. Among his books there were:

The Meaning of the Qur'ān; [Qur'ānic] Readings; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Spelling; Masculine and Feminine; Abridgment of Grammar; Prosody; The Disposition of Man; Differentiation; The Alfāt (The A's).⁴³

⁴⁰ The sect called al-Zāhiriyyah, founded by Dā'ūd ibn 'Alī ibn Khalaf. He may have taught law, which was often scheduled before sunrise, when the pupils' minds were alert.

⁴¹ The Flügel text has a variation, which is probably wrong.

⁴² This title and the two which follow are not found in the Beatty MS.

⁴³ The last title is not in the Beatty MS.

Al-Khazzāz

He was Abū al-Ḥusayn [al-Ḥasan] 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Sufyān al-Khazzāz, who was a tutor in the home of Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā. He had a good handwriting and was one of the grammarians who derived information from both schools [of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah]. It was he who wrote the book The Meaning in the Qur'ān for 'Alī ibn 'Isā. He died ———. Among his books there were:

The Abridgment, about the Arab sciences; The Meaning of the Qur'ān;⁴⁴ The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; The Ample, about the science of language; Accounts of the Leading Men among the Judges (Rulers), which he wrote for Abū al-Ḥusayn ibn Abī 'Amr; Concubines, Given as Pledges and [Coming] Willingly;⁴⁵ Feasts of Souls, about the mention of learning; Ramaḍān [the Fast] and What Is Said about It.

Al-Bandanījī

His name was al-Yamān ibn Abī al-Yamān al-Bandanījī. He was a blind poet, as well as a scholar of language, who fell in with Ibn al-Sikkīt and other scholars of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah. Among his books there were:

Instruction in Law; The Meaning of Poetry; Prosody.

Al-'Umarī⁴⁶

He was judge of Takrīt and among his books there were:

Commentary on the Pre-Islāmic Seven and What Was Strange in Them; Commentary on the "Maqṣūrah" of Abū Bakr Ibn Durayd.

⁴⁴ This title is repeated further down on the list in the Arabic, though not in the translation.

⁴⁶ This paragraph is omitted by the Beatty MS. Takrīt is on the Tigris. The Pre-Islāmic Seven are the famous odes, "Al-Mu'allaqāt." The "Maqṣūrah" was a poem in praise of his patrons in Fars, who gave Ibn Durayd generous financial support.

Abū al-Ḥaydhām al-'Uqaylī

His name was Kilāb ibn Ḥamzah and he was an inhabitant of Harrān. He lived among the nomads, but it is said that he was educated, entering into city life at the time of al-Qāsim ibn 'Ubayd Allāh, whom he praised. He was learned, a poet, and had a handwriting for which there was a demand. He mixed the teachings of the two schools [of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah] and among his books there were:

Compendium of Grammar; Al-Arākah;⁴⁷ How the Populace Errs in Speaking.

Al-Ushnāndānī⁴⁸

He wrote a book, The Meaning of Poetry, and has already been mentioned.

Ibn Luzah al-Karkhī⁴⁹

He was one of the scholars of al-Jabal, whose name was Bundār ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamid. Luzah was his nickname. Bundār was surnamed Abū 'Amr. He mixed the teachings of the two schools [of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah]. Among his books there were:

The Meaning of Poetry; Commentary on the "Book of Meaning" of al-Bāhili;⁵⁰ Compendium of Language, a portion of which I have seen; Wild Beasts.

Ibn Shuqayr

Abū Bakr 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Shuqayr the Grammarian was said by the shaykh Abū Sa'id, to whom may Allah show mercy, to have drawn upon the two schools [of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah]. Among his books there were:

Abridgment of Grammar; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine.

⁴⁷ Probably a proper name; see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 182.

⁴⁸ This paragraph is omitted by the Beatty MS.

⁴⁹ The Beatty MS has al-Karjī.

⁵⁰ Flügel adds "al-Anṣārī." The last title is not in the Beatty MS. On the margin of the Beatty MS there is a note, "He met Ibn al-Sikkīt and others besides him."

Al-Mufajja'

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Mufajja',⁵¹ [whose name was] Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh, a scribe of al-Baṣrah who fell in with Tha'lab, learning from him and other scholars. He was a Shī'i poet, who wrote a poem entitled "Resemblances" in which he eulogized Alī, for whom be peace. He and Abū Bakr ibn Durayd lampooned one another. Among his books there were:

The Interpretation, about the meaning of poetry, which included Definition of Declension (Definition of the Arabians), Definition of Praise, Definition of Vigor; Dream and Discernment; Spelling; Pack Animals (Al-Maṭāyā'); Trees and Plants; Declension (The Arabians); The Riddle.

He also wrote:

The Properly Prepared (Al-Musta'idd), about oaths; Poems of Brigands (Javelins); Booths for Meetings; The Strange in the Poetry of Zayd al-Khayl.⁵²

*Al-Akhfash al-Ṣaghīr*⁵³

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Sulaymān al-Akhfash, the grammarian. He was greatly vexed when questioned about some matter of grammar, but he remembered historical traditions. He died during the year three hundred and fifteen [A.D. 927/28]. Among his books there were:⁵⁴

Al-Anwā'; Formation of the Dual and the Plural; Locusts.

Al-Hunā'i

His name was 'Alī ibn al-Ḥasan, surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan. He came from Egypt but belonged to the school of al-Kūfah, though he also drew upon the scholars of al-Baṣrah. He was known as

⁵² Omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁵³ He was called al-Ṣaghīr or al-Aṣghar, meaning "younger" or "lesser," to distinguish him from others of this name.

⁵⁴ All of the titles are omitted in the Beatty MS.

al-Dawsī, Daws being an Arab tribe.⁵⁵ His writings can be obtained in Egypt, where they are in demand. Among his books there were:

The Basic of Strange Forms, similar to "Kitāb al-'Ayn," but with a different arrangement. He originally composed this work about strange Arab words and vernaculars based upon the alphabet of twenty-eight letters, which are alif, bā', tā', thā', and the rest of the letters. He also wrote Al-Munaḍḍad (Strung Together), about language; Al-Farīd (The Unique).⁵⁶

*Dūmī*⁵⁷

He was one of the grammarians living close to our own time. His name was 'Umar ibn Muḥammad ibn Ja'far al-Za'farānī, surnamed Abū Aḥmad. Among his books there were:

Al-Qawāfī; Pronunciations (Dialects).

The Names of Persons from a Number of Regions Whose Names and Biographies Are Not Based on Research⁵⁸

Ibn Khālawayh

Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥusayn ibn Aḥmad⁵⁹ ibn Khālawayh learned from a group [of scholars] such as Abū Bakr ibn al-Anbārī and Abū 'Umar al-Zāhid. He was a pupil of Abū Sa'īd al-Sirāfī and mixed the teachings of the two schools [of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah]. He died at Aleppo in the service of the Banū Ḥamdān during the year three hundred and seventy [A.D. 980/81].⁶⁰ Among his books there were:

⁵⁵ See Durayd, Geneal., p. 291.

⁵⁶ First he wrote his long book, Al-Munaḍḍad, and then condensed his material as Al-Mujarrad, not mentioned in Al-Fihrist. The Beatty MS omits Al-Farīd.

⁵⁷ Flügel calls him 'Abd Allāh ibn Ja'far. The title Pronunciations (Dialects) is given by Flügel but lacking in the Beatty MS.

⁵⁸ This probably means that the author learned about these scholars, who lived near his own time, by personal contact and word of mouth rather than merely by study of books. See also Flügel, in ZDMG, XIII (1859), 581.

⁵⁹ The Beatty MS gives "ibn Muḥammad," which seems to be an error.

⁶⁰ The Beatty MS omits the date. Sa'd al-Dawlah was the member of the Ḥamdān dynasty ruling at Aleppo when he died.

Etymology; The Phrase, about grammar;⁶¹ Reviving Language; [Qur'ānic] Readings; Inflection (Declension) in Thirty Sūrah's of the Qur'ān; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; The Alfāt (The A's); The Subject;⁶² Lays [an Arabic form of the negative].

Abū Turāb

This man tried to correct Kitāb al-'Ayn of al-Khalīl, but a group of scholars refuted his revisions. Among his books there were:

Bringing to Terms (I'tiqāb), about language; Correction of al-Khalīl, in connection with what was neglected and used.

Abū al-Jūd

He was al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad ibn Ramaḍān al-'Ajlānī, a grammarian living close to our time, and a scholar of the school of al-Baṣrah. Among his books there were:

Abridgment for Students; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; Differentiation.

The Brother of Ibn Ramaḍān

He was known as Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Ramaḍān. Among his books there were:

The Names of Fermented Drinks and Their Extracts;⁶³ Retreat (The Direction Away from Makkah).

Al-Kashshī

He came from the regions of Khurāsān and, although he was able in composition, it is not known with whom he studied or to what period he belonged. Among his books there were:

Fa'altu wa-Af'altu, According to the Mu'jam Letters,⁶⁴ a large work of extreme excellence; Declensions (Conjugations), which was also large—I have seen it.⁶⁵

⁶¹ The Beatty MS gives the vowel signs indicating the word al-jumal, which when referring to grammar signifies a phrase or aggregate of words.

⁶² This title and the one following are omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁶³ This evidently refers to forms of liquor made from such materials as palm trees and grapes. The title which follows is omitted by the Beatty MS.

⁶⁴ This probably means letters marked with diacritical points.

⁶⁵ "I have seen it," seems to be the meaning of a phrase written in faint letters under the line in the Beatty MS.

Mikhnaf

I know nothing about him except this, that his books were: Explanation of Grammar; Declension (Conjugation).⁶⁶

Al-Muhallabī

Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad

He lived in Egypt. In Egypt there was another one known as Ibn Wallād and still another known as al-Rajjānī.⁶⁷ Al-Muhallabī wrote:

Explanation of the Weak Letters in Grammar; Abridgment of Grammar.⁶⁸

Abū Mushir

He was Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Marwān ibn Yasīrah, a grammarian, among whose books there were:

Compendium, about grammar; Abridgment; Account of Abū 'Uyaynah Muḥammad ibn Abī 'Uyaynah al-Muhallabī.

Al-Qummī

Ismā'īl ibn Muḥammad al-Qummī wrote the books:

Forming the Hamzah; The Weak Letters.⁶⁹

Abū al-Fahd

Al-Zajjāj, with whom he studied the Book of Sībawayh for a second time, said to him, "Oh, Abū Fahd, you did better the first time than you did the second!" Among his books there was The Exposition, about grammar.

Al-Azdī

Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad al-Azdī was one of the inhabitants of al-Baṣrah. Among his books there were:

Speech; Disagreement.⁷⁰

⁶⁶ Last title omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁶⁷ Both of these grammarians were evidently named Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad and lived in Egypt.

⁶⁸ Omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁶⁹ Omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁷⁰ Omitted in the Beatty MS.

Al-Harawī

He was from Persia and among his books there were:
Declension (Conjugation); The Explanation.⁷¹

Al-Miṣṣīṣī

Nothing else is known about him except that his books were:
Healing, about language; The Exposition.⁷²

Al-Washshā'

Abū al-Ṭayyib Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Ishāq al-A'rābī al-Washshā' was a man of letters and a master of literary style. He was also a grammarian and a teacher in a school for the common people. His books composed about historical traditions, poems, and short verses were in demand. Among his books there were:

Abridgment of Grammar; Compilation of Grammar; The Shortened and the Lengthened; Masculine and Feminine; Differentiation; The Disposition of Man; The Disposition of the Horse; The Triple.⁷³

The books which he wrote about belles-lettres and historical traditions were:

Account of the Ṣāhib al-Zanj;⁷⁴ The Shining, about lights and bright things; Yearning for Fatherlands; the large book, Definitions of Elegant Forms; Embellishment (Al-Dibāj); Accounts of Those Who Affect Elegance; Remedy for Love (Remedy to Appease Pain); The Gilded; The Acrostic (Al-Muwashshah); The Chain of Gold.

Ibn al-Marāghī

He was Abū al-Faḥ Muḥammad ibn Ja'far al-Hamdānī, later called al-Marāghī. He was a teacher at the time of the regime of Abū Manṣūr,⁷⁵ as well as a memorizer of traditions. He was also a grammarian, eloquent in style, and a historian concerned with extreme examples of generous nobility and freedom. Among his books there were:

⁷¹ Omitted by the Beatty MS.

⁷² Omitted by the Beatty MS.

⁷³ Perhaps this refers to letters with three dots or to the script of that name.

⁷⁴ 'Alī ibn Muḥammad, leader of the black slave rebellion in the Persian Gulf area, A.D. 870-83.

⁷⁵ Al-Qāhir, who became the 'Abbāsīd caliph A.D. 932.

Rejoicing, in the form of "Kitāb al-Kāmil" [by al-Mubarrad]; Supplying the Things Neglected by al-Khalīl.⁷⁶

Al-Marāghī Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn 'Alī

He was one of the inhabitants of al-Marāghah. He was prevented from prolonging his stay at al-Mawṣil. He equaled Abū al-'Abbās⁷⁷ in intelligence, being learned and religious. He studied under al-Zajjāj. Among his books there were:

Abridgment of Grammar; Exposition and Interpretation of the Arguments of Sībawayh.

Al-Bakrī

He was known as Abū al-Faḍl Muḥammad ibn Abī Ghassān al-Bakrī. Among his books there were:

Abridgment of Grammar; Differentiation.⁷⁸

'Urām

He was Abū al-Faḍl al-'Abbās ibn Muḥammad, a foolish man to whom some gave the name of "The Court Companion Grammarian." He wrote some epistles, hit and miss, about banter and diversion for a group [of friends].

Al-Zajjāj

His name was Muḥammad ibn al-Layth, the tutor of the sons of Nāṣir al-Dawlah.⁷⁹ Although I met him at al-Mawṣil, I do not know of any book of his.

Al-'Awwāmī

He was Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Ibrāhīm, the grammarian and judge. He was a friend of mine, known as "the Judge." He died ——. Among his books there was Corrections and Clarifications, about grammar.

⁷⁶ This title is omitted by the Beatty MS.

⁷⁷ Probably al-Mubarrad Abū al-'Abbās.

⁷⁸ Omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁷⁹ The ruler of al-Mawṣil, A.D. 929-68.

A Man Known as Ibn 'Abdūs

His name was 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abdūs al-Kūfī and he was a grammarian. Among his books there were:

Measure of Poetry by Meter; The Proof, about the weak letters in grammar; The Meaning of Poetry.

Al-Wafrāwandī

His name was Yūnus ibn Aḥmad ibn Ibrāhīm al-Wafrāwandī and he was a grammarian among whose books there were:

Healing, about the weak letters of grammar; Fulfillment, about the science of prosody.

Al-Diyartī

He was Abū Muḥammad al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad, one of the inhabitants of Iṣbahān, from a village named Diymart. Among his books there were:

Correction of Pronunciations (Dialects); The Happening (Misfortune), about "Al-Kāmil";⁸⁰ Commentary on "Al-Ḥamāsah."

Abū al-'Abbās⁸¹

He was Muḥammad ibn Khalaf ibn al-Marzabān. Among his books there were:

The Encompassing, about the sciences of the Qur'ān, in twenty-seven sections; Al-Ḥamāsah; Account of 'Abd Allāh ibn Ja'far ibn Abī Ṭālib, may there be peace for them.

Abū al-Ḥasan Ibn al-Warrāq⁸²

His name was Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh and among his books there were:

The Weak Letters of Grammar; The Guidance, a commentary on the "Abridgment of Grammar" of Abū 'Umar al-Jarmī.

⁸¹ This paragraph is omitted by the Beatty MS.

⁸² The Flügel text gives a different name and different titles. The translation follows the Beatty MS.

Abū Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥallāb⁸³

No book of his is mentioned.

Ibn Jinnī

He was Abū al-Faṭḥ 'Uthmān ibn Jinnī, the grammarian, whose birth was before the year three hundred and thirty [A.D. 941/42], and who died on a Friday evening of Ṣafar [the second Muslim month] during the year three hundred and ninety-two [A.D. 1001/1002].⁸⁴ Among his books there were:⁸⁵

The Explanation, a commentary on the poetry of Abū al-Ṭayyib al-Mutanabbī; Pursuit, about Arabic; Al-Mu'rab [word that can be declined] (or Al-Mu'arrab [a word that is Arabicized]); Comprehension; The Shining; Distinction between Special and Common Words; Prosody and al-Qawāfī; A Collecting of the Fundamentals of Declension (Conjugation); Stopping and Starting; Pronunciation of Words with Hamzah; Masculine and Feminine; Commentary on the Triple Elegies and Visionary Poem of al-Sharīf al-Riḍā; Meaning of the Verses of al-Mutanabbī; The Difference between Special and Common Words.

Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Namari⁸⁶

No composition of his is recalled.

Bardawayh

There is no mention of a composition of his.

Old Books with Traditions of the Grammarians

Traditions (Accounts) of the Grammarians: by al-Najīramī; by Abū Sa'īd al-Sirāfī; by al-Marzubānī, the great quoter [borrower

⁸³ Omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁸⁴ The date is omitted in the Beatty MS, which helps to prove that the manuscript was transcribed before the end of the tenth century.

⁸⁶ This paragraph and the following paragraph about Bardawayh are lacking in the Beatty MS.

from other authors]; by Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Tārikhī.⁸⁷

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: This is the end of what we have written in the chapter about grammarians and scholars of language, up to the time of the Saturday after the appearance of the moon, during the month of Sha'bān [the eighth Muslim month] in the year three hundred and seventy-seven [A.D. 987]. We pray Allāh for the long existence for what we have composed for Him and for our remaining in health, security, and sufficiency. For with His graciousness He [Allāh] will bring this to pass and His favor will inspire us, causing us to obey Him, with His generosity. For Allāh is sufficient for us, giving assurance of care. May Allāh bless the bounties of His creation, Muḥammad and [the members of] his family.

Naming of the Books Composed about the Strange in the Ḥadīth⁸⁸
The Strange in the Ḥadīth: by Abū 'Ubaydah; al-Aṣma'ī; al-Naḍr ibn Shumayl; Qutrub; Ibn al-A'rābī; Abū 'Adnān; Ibn Qadīm;⁸⁹ Abū Zayd; Salamah; al-Athram; Abū 'Ubayd; Fistūḡah Ṣāhib al-Karāsī; al-Sulamī; al-Hāmid; Ibn Qutaybah; [also] Corrections of the Mistakes of Abū 'Ubayd, by Ibn Qutaybah. The Strange in the Ḥadīth: by Ibn al-Anbārī; Ibn Durayd; Abū al-Husayn al-Qāḍī (the Judge) ibn Abī 'Umar; Ibn Kaysān; al-Ja'd; al-Ḥaḍramī, [who] composed [in cooperation] with Abū 'Umar al-Zāhid; Ibn Rustam al-Ḥarbī;⁹⁰ Ibn Durustūyah;

⁹⁰ Omitted in the Beatty MS.

Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥasan al-Kindī. The Strange in the Qur'ān, by 'Abd Allāh ibn Salām al-Dīnawarī.⁹¹

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: The book of al-Sulamī, who was al-Ḥusayn ibn Ayyāsh al-Sulamī, was quoted by Abū 'Umar Hilāl ibn al-'Alā' ibn 'Umar ibn Hilāl al-Raqqī al-Bāhili. Then from Hilāl it was quoted by Abū al-Qāsim al-Husayn ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Sādir al-Wāsiṭī.⁹²

Naming of the Books Composed about Rare Forms

Rare Forms: according to Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā'; by Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī, three editions, large, small, and medium; of Abū Zayd;⁹³ of al-Aṣma'ī; of al-Kisā'ī, three renderings; of Ibn al-A'rābī, quoted from him by twelve persons; of al-Farrā', quoted by Salamah, Ibn Qadīm, and al-Tuwāl; of al-Liḥyānī; of Abū Mishāl; of Abū Muḥammad al-Yazīdī; of Abū Ziyād al-Kilābī; of Abū Shunbul al-Uqaylī; Dahmaj al-Naṣrī; of al-Umayy; of al-Athram; of al-Zubayrīyūn,⁹⁴ according to Ibn al-A'rābī; of Ibn al-Sikkīt; of Abū al-Maḍraḥī;⁹⁵ of Abū al-Yaqṣān, which I have seen written in the handwriting of Ibn Sa'dān; of al-Tawwazī,⁹⁶ [surnamed] Abū Muḥammad; [also] the book of Abū Ishāq al-Zajjāj, about rare forms.

The Names of Books Composed about al-Anwā'

Al-Anwā': by al-Aṣma'ī; by Abū Muḥallim; by Qutrub; by Ibn al-A'rābī; by al-Mubarrad; by Ibn Qutaybah; by Abū Ḥanīfah al-Dīnawarī; by al-Zajjāj; by Ibn Durayd; by al-Wahbī; by al-Marthadī; by al-Wakī; by Ibn 'Ammār; by Abū Ghālib Aḥmad ibn Salīm al-Rāzī; by Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb.⁹⁷

⁹¹ Omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁹² This short paragraph is in the Beatty MS, but omitted by the Flügel edition.

⁹³ Probably Abū Zayd Sa'īd ibn al-Aws.

⁹⁵ The Beatty MS has al-Maḍraḥī, probably an error.

⁹⁶ This name is unclear in Flügel.

⁹⁷ The last two authors are omitted in the Beatty MS.

The Third Part

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Third Chapter of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the historians, genealogists, and students of historical traditions and literature;² three sections. The first section with accounts of the historians, genealogists, and students of biography and historical traditions, with the names of their books. The second section with accounts of the secretaries, correspondents, and administrators of the revenues,³ with the names of their books. The third section, with accounts of the men of letters, court companions, singers, buffoons, and clowns, with the names of their books.

The First Section

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I have read the following, written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥasan ibn al-Kūfī

² Instead of "literature" (al-ādāb), given in the Beatty MS, the Flügel version has "verses" (al-āyāt).

³ These categories refer to men in the government offices.

"The first person to write a book about calumnies was Ziyād ibn Abih. When he and his lineage were slandered, he wrote it for his son, saying, 'Get the better of the Arabs with this and they will leave you alone.'"

The Names and Accounts of the First Authorities from Whom a Knowledge of Heroic Deeds, Genealogies, and Anecdotes Was Derived⁴

Daghfal

According to what is written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Yazīdī, he was al-Ḥujr ibn al-Ḥārith al-Kinānī, Daghfal being a nickname. He was called Daghfal al-Dhuhli.⁵ He was the genealogist Daghfal ibn Ḥanzālah al-Sadūsī, who was alive at the time of the Prophet, may Allāh bless him and give him peace, but he never heard him speak. When he joined [the Caliph] Mu'āwiyah there came to him Qudāmah ibn Ḍarrār al-Quray'ī. Daghfal gave him [Qudāmah] his genealogy until he reached the father who begot him. Then he said, "The sons of Ḍarrār are two, one of whom is a poet and the other a hermit. Which one of the two are you?" He [Qudāmah] replied, "I am the frivolous poet. You have hit upon my genealogy and all that concerns me, so now tell me when I shall die." He [Daghfal] said, "I can't do that." The Shurāt (Shurāh) killed Daghfal. He had no compositions.

The Genealogist al-Bakrī

He was a Christian who was quoted by Ru'bah ibn al-'Ajjāj as saying, "With learning there are want, degradation, and importunity."

Lisān al-Ḥumarrah

His name was Wiqā' ibn al-Ash'ar, surnamed Abū Kilāb. He was a genealogist, the most proud and haughty among the people.

⁴ This title is translated freely.

⁵ This sentence is written on the margin of the Beatty MS. For the tribe of Dhuhl, see Durayd, Geneal., pp. 114, 117.

'Ubayd ibn Sharyah

He belonged to the Jurhum Tribe⁶ and to the period of Mu'āwiyah. He reached maturity at the time of the Prophet, may Allāh bless him and give him peace, but he never heard him speak. He went to [the Caliph] Mu'āwiyah ibn Abī Sufyān, who asked him about the traditions of the past, as well as about the Arab and Persian⁷ kings, and the reasons for the babel of tongues and the divisions of the peoples in the land. When he [Mu'āwiyah] summoned him to come from Ṣana'ā' al-Yaman, he did what Mu'āwiyah commanded him, 'Ubayd ibn Sharyah, to do, namely to collect records (poems) and genealogy. 'Ubayd lived until the time of [the Caliph] 'Abd al-Malik ibn Marwān. Among his books there were:

Similes (Proverbs); The Kings and Traditions of the Peoples of the Past.

The Names of the Persons Who Were Quoted by 'Ubayd ibn Sharyah

Al-Kayyis al-Namirī and his son Zayd ibn al-Kayyis, al-Lisayn al-Jurhumī, and 'Abd Wadd al-Jurhumī.

'Alāqah ibn Karsham al-Kilābī

He was a member of the Banū 'Āmir ibn Kilāb Tribe, who lived at the time of [the Caliph] Yazīd ibn Mu'āwiyah and had a knowledge of chronicles and the traditions of the Arabs. He was also one of the scholars from whom they learned of heroic deeds. Yazīd ibn Mu'āwiyah included him with those who kept him company in the evenings. Among his books there was Similes (Proverbs), about fifty leaves in length. I have seen it.

Ṣuḥār al-'Abdī

He was one of the Khawārij, named Ṣuḥār ibn al-'Abbās, a genealogist and preacher of the period of Mu'āwiyah ibn Abī Sufyān. Like Daghfal he knew about historical traditions. Ṣuḥār

⁶ For the Jurhum Tribe, see "Djurhum," Enc. Islam, I, 1066.

⁷ Instead of "Persian" this might be "foreign."

belonged to the party of 'Uthmān⁸ and was a member of the 'Abd al-Qays Tribe.⁹ He quoted two or three of the sayings (ḥadīth) from the Prophet, may Allāh bless him and give him peace.¹⁰ Among his books there was (Similes) Proverbs.

Al-Sharqī ibn al-Qaṭāmī

He was surnamed Abū al-Muthannā al-Kalbī. His real name was al-Walīd ibn al-Ḥusayn. He was a genealogist and quoter of historical traditions, genealogies, and records (poems). According to what is written in the handwriting of al-Yūsufī, "He was a liar."

It is quoted from al-Aṣma'ī that one of the traditionalists told him, "I said to al-Sharqī, 'What did the Arabs recite in their prayers for the dead?' He answered, 'I do not know.'" Then he [the traditionalist] went on to say to him, "They used to recite this verse:

Neither timid nor the son of cruelty wert thou;
Be at peace until the Creator sends His Messenger."

He also said, "If I am with him on Friday, there is conversation with him in the sanctuary (mosque)."¹¹ A poem, "Strange Forms," was written by al-Sharqī.

Ṣāliḥ al-ḤanafīIbn al-Kawwā'

His name was 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Amr. He belonged to the Banū Yashkur Tribe and was a genealogist and a scholar. He was also one of the Shī'ah and an adherent of 'Alī, for whom may there be peace. It is said that when they challenged [the knowledge of] Ibn al-Kawwā' as a genealogist, Maskīn al-Darāmī said:

Come to the sons of al-Kawwā', who make decisions
By their judgment of men's genealogies.

⁸ The party loyal to the third caliph; see Hitti, Arabs, pp. 176, 177.

⁹ For this tribe, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 196.

¹⁰ The pious phrase is not found in the Beatty MS.

¹¹ The wording of this passage, with its quotation, should be compared with the account in Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 268. The messenger in the couplet is the Quickener, sent by Allāh to summon the dead on the Day of Resurrection.

Al-Ṣughdī

His name was Ṣāliḥ ibn 'Imrān, but he was called al-Ṣughdī because his father lived for a long time in al-Ṣughd. He knew a great deal about the historical tales concerning the Prophet, for whom may there be peace. Among his books there was The Power (Glory) of Persons Given to Vanities.

Mujālid ibn Sa'īd ibn 'Umayr ibn Hamdān

He was surnamed Abū 'Umayr. Al-Haytham ibn 'Adī quoted him, making additions. He recounted historical traditions but, although he heard the sayings of the Prophet, he was weak among the traditionalists. He died during the year one hundred and forty-four [A.D. 761/62].

Sa'd al-Qaṣīr

He was a protégé of the Banū Umayyah Tribe and a genealogist from whom al-'*Uṭbī*¹² learned about the historical traditions, heroic deeds, and poems of his own people.

'Isā ibn Da'b Abū al-Walid 'Isā ibn Yazīd ibn Bakr ibn Da'b

He belonged to the Kinānah and the Banū al-Shuddākh Tribes.¹³ He had relatives at al-Baṣrah and his brother was Yahyā ibn Yazīd. Their father was also an authority for the historical traditions and poems of the Arabs. He himself was a poet, but the chief ability of the Da'b family was in connection with historical traditions.

Al-Qurqubī

His name was Zuhayr ibn Maymūn al-Hamdānī, surnamed Abū Muḥammad. He was a grammarian and [Qur'ānic] reader. When Zuhayr was asked, "From where did you learn about grammar?" he replied, "We heard about it and learned it from the companions of Abū al-Aswad [al-Du'ālī]." He was also learned in genealogy, historical traditions, and the chronicles (wars) of mankind. He died in the year one hundred and fifty-five [A.D. 771/72].

¹² Probably Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh.

¹³ For these tribes see "Kināna," Enc. Islam, II, 1017-18.

Account of 'Awānah

He was 'Awānah ibn al-Ḥakam ibn 'Iyād ibn Wazr ibn 'Abd al-Ḥārith al-Kalbī, surnamed Abū al-Ḥakam, one of the scholars of al-Kūfah, who was a quoter of historical traditions and acquainted with poetry and genealogy. He was eloquent in style, although blind.

According to what Hishām ibn al-Kalbī quoted from him, 'Awānah said:

'Utbah ibn al-Nahhās al-'Ijlī preached to us saying, "What is the summum bonum? Allāh, Glorified and Exalted, said in His Book [the Qur'ān], 'Nothing remains alive at death, except the honor of him who praises the Creator.'"

Then he ['Awānah] said:

I rose up in front of him exclaiming, "Allāh, to Whom be glory and praise, did not say that, for it was said by 'Adī ibn Zayd." He ['Utbah] replied, "By Allāh, I did not think that this was from other than the Book of Allāh, Glorified and Praised, but blessed is the saying of 'Adī ibn Zayd."

When he ['Utbah] came down from the pulpit, there was brought to him a woman of the Khawārij to whom he said, "Oh, enemy of Allāh, why do you revolt against the Commander of the Faithful [the Caliph], do you not respect the word of Allāh, to Whom be glory and praise: 'Foreordained for us [men] are slaying and combat, whereas for women the dragging of skirts.'" She replied, "Oh, enemy of Allāh, your ignorance of the Book of Allāh and your neglect of Allāh's truth have caused me to revolt."¹⁴

'Awānah died during the year one hundred and forty-seven [A.D. 764/65]. Among his books there were:

History; The life of Mu'āwiyah and the Banū Umayyah—this book was said to have been written by Minjāb ibn al-Ḥārith, but the truth is that it was written by 'Awānah.

I have read what was written in the handwriting of Abū 'Abd Allāh [al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī] ibn Muqlah: "Abū al-Abbās Tha'lab said, '[The Caliph] al-Walid ibn Yazīd ibn 'Abd al-Malik collected the records, poems, historical traditions, genealogies, and dialects of the Arabs and turned over the collection to Ḥammād and Jannād.”

Account of Ḥammād

He was Abū al-Qāsim Ḥammād ibn Sābūr ibn al-Mubārak ibn ‘Ubayd. Sābūr was nicknamed Abū Laylā. He was one of the captives from Daylam captured by Ibn ‘Urwah ibn Zayd al-Khayl al-Ṭā’i, who gave him to his daughter, Laylā, whom he served for fifty years. When she died he was sold for two hundred silver coins (s., dirham). ‘Āmir ibn Maṭar al-Shaybānī purchased him and then set him free. It is said that Abū Laylā was named Maysarah.

Ḥammād, who may have made mistakes about one thing after another, was a quoter of historical traditions, poems, and genealogies during the days of al-Walīd ibn ‘Abd al-Malik. He lived until the year one hundred and fifty-six [A.D. 772/73], which was the year of his death. He was a companion of *al-Mahdī*¹⁵ and he related, “I sang good poetry for al-Walīd, but he demanded something more popular (corrupt). When I sang that he enjoyed it so much that I knew it was a success. Then [in later years] I sang popular verses for al-Mahdī, but he asked me for something good, with literary excellence.¹⁶ Thus I know that it went well with them both.”

Ḥammād was born during the year seventy-five [A.D. 694/95]. When he died Muḥammad ibn Kunāsah eulogized him:

Thou hast gone beyond the fleeting sleep,
Past on hast thou, until fate has brought thee to an end.
Had caution saved thee from perishing,
Caution would have rescued thee from what befell thee.
May Allāh be merciful to thee, my brother Abū Qāsim,
For there is no impurity [mingled] with his purity.¹⁷
For thus doth time waste away,
Its wisdom perish and its traces vanish.

We have not seen any book of Ḥammād’s, but men quoted him and composed books according to him.

¹⁵ Al-Walīd was a light-hearted Umayyad caliph at the end of the dynasty. Al-Mahdī was an able ‘Abbāsid caliph, whom Ḥammād knew as a prince.

¹⁶ The Arabic word translated “literary excellence” is al-faḥl.

¹⁷ Compare this couplet with Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (4), 140.

Account of Jannād

He was Abū Muḥammad Jannād ibn Wāṣil al-Kūfī, a protégé of the Banū Asad Tribe, said to have been surnamed Abū Wāṣil. Although he was not learned in grammar and made many errors in speech, he knew more than the other people about the poetry and chronicles of the Arabs.

I read something written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ṭayyib, the brother of al-Shāfi‘ī, who said:

When Jannād and Ishāq ibn al-Jassās came to Abū ‘Irār al-‘Ijlī, the Arabian, who was a master of literary style, Jannād said to him, “Hear something which I have worked on and do it justice.” He replied “Speak!” Jannād, accordingly, said:¹⁸

If thou dost not comprehend what death is,
Behold the Convent of Hind, how its graveyard is outlined.

Then Ishāq said:

Thou seest the wonder of things ordained by Allāh,
Among them pledges of death, constrained by His omnipotence.

Houses thou seest, their locks above their dwellers,
With a group of visitors, but the visitor is not spoken to.

Abū Ishāq

He was Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥārith ibn Asmā’ ibn Khārījāh al-Fazārī, a good and excellent man, except that his traditions were full of errors. He died at al-Maṣṣīṣah in the year one hundred and eighty-eight [A.D. 804]. Among his books there was a book about biography and the holy war . . .¹⁹ and Al-Sīr, about historical events and traditions. Abū ‘Amr Mu‘āwiyah ibn ‘Amr al-Azdī quoted him. This Abū ‘Amr died at Baghdād during the year two hundred and fifteen [A.D. 830/31].

¹⁸ This same anecdote is given in Chap. II, sect. 1, near n. 39, with the account of Abū ‘Irār.

¹⁹ Flügel omits this sentence and the Beatty MS garbles the final words, which are indicated by an ellipsis here.

Account of Ibn Ishāq Ṣāhib al-*Sīr*²⁰

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ishāq ibn Yasār,²¹ who was defamed without reason. It is said that the charge was made to the governor of al-Madīnah that he took women unawares. The governor, therefore, ordered that he should be brought before him. As he [Muḥammad ibn Ishāq] had beautiful hair, he fastened up his head.²² Then he beat him with lashes and prohibited him from sitting in the rear of the mosque.²³

He had a handsome appearance and quoted Fāṭimah bint al-Mundhir [ibn Zubayr], the wife of Hishām ibn 'Urwah. This [gossip about her] reached Hishām, but he denied it saying, "When did he ever enter into her presence or hear her speak?"

It is said that poetry was composed for him, being brought with the request that it should be included in his book of biography. As he did include it, his book contained some verses which disgraced it among persons who quoted poetry. The errors in genealogy presented in his book and derived from the Jews and Christians, whom he called in his book "People of the First Knowledge" and "Possessors of Tradition," weakened and falsified his writing. He died during the year one hundred and fifty [A.D. 768]. Among his books there were:

The Caliphs, quoted by al-Umayy; Al-Sīrah (The Biography)²⁴ and the Beginning and the Wars—Ibrāhīm ibn Sa'd and al-Nufaylī quoted it.

The Name of al-Nufaylī

He was Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Numayr al-Nufaylī. He died during the year two hundred and thirty-four [A.D. 848/49] at Ḥarrān. He was surnamed Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān.

²⁰ Ṣāhib al-sīr means "author of the biographies." Flügel gives the more usual form, al-sīrah ("biography").

²¹ The Beatty MS has Yashār, which is probably a mistake, as Khallikān, II, 677, and Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 247, give Yasār.

²³ The women sat in the rear of the mosque.

²⁴ This was the famous biography of the Prophet. For the English translation, see the bibliography in Ishāq, Life of Muhammad. See p. xxv of Ishāq's introduction for the poetry in Al-Sīrah.

Najīh al-Madanī

He was Abū Ma'shar, whose name was Najīh al-Madanī, a protégé and scribe of princes of the Banū Makhzūm Tribe.²⁵ He was a freedman and one of the traditionalists, acquainted with the Ḥadīth and biography [of the Prophet]. He died during the reign of al-Ḥādī in the year seventy [A.H. 170: A.D. 785/86]. Among his books there was Raids [early wars of Islām].

Abū Mikhnaf

He was Lūṭ ibn Yaḥyā ibn Sa'īd ibn Mikhnaf ibn Sulaym al-Azdī. Mikhnaf ibn Sulaym was one of the associates of 'Alī, for whom may there be peace. He quoted the Prophet, may Allāh bless him and give him peace, and also the Companions. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Apostasy (Al-Riddah); The Invasion of Syria; The Invasion of al-Irāq; [Battle of] the Camel; [Battle of] Ṣiffīn; The People of Nahrawān and the Khawārij; Raids (Al-Ghārāt [early wars of Islām involving plunder]); Al-Ḥārith ibn Rāshid and the Banū Nājiyah;²⁶ The Assassination of 'Alī, for Whom May There Be Peace; The Execution of Hujr ibn 'Adī; The Slaying of Muḥammad ibn Abī Bakr and of al-Ashtar and Muḥammad ibn Abī Ḥudayfah; Al-*Shūrā*²⁷ and the Assassination of 'Uthmān; Al-Mustawrid ibn 'Ullafah; The Slaying of al-Husayn, for Whom May There Be Peace; The Death of Mu'āwiyah, the Reign of al-Yazīd, the Battle of al-Ḥarraḥ,²⁸ and the Fortifications of Ibn al-Zubayr; Al-Mukhtār ibn Abī 'Ubayd; Sulaymān ibn Ṣurad and 'Ayn al-Wardah.²⁹

²⁹ Better known as Ra's al-'Ayn in northeast Syria, where Sulaymān ibn Ṣurad was killed; see Yāqūt, Geog., II, 731.

³⁰ A nickname for 'A'ishah. This word is not clear in the Beatty MS.

and Abū Fudayk;³¹ The Story of the Azāriqah; The Story of Rustuq-bādh;³² *Shabīb al-Ḥarūrī*³³ and Ṣāliḥ ibn Musarraḥ; Muṭarrāf ibn al-Mughīrah; *Al-Jamājīm*³⁴ and the Disposal of 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn al-Ash'ath; Yazīd ibn al-Muhallab and His Murder at al-'Aqr;³⁵ Khālīd ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Qasrī and Yūsuf ibn 'Umar, the Death of Hishām, and the Reign of al-Walīd ibn Yazīd; Zayd ibn 'Alī, for Whom Be Peace; Yahyā ibn Zayd; Al-Ḍaḥḥāk al-Khārījī.

I have read what was written in the handwriting of Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥārith al-Khazzāz, that:

The scholars have said that Abū Mikhnaf excelled others in connection with al-'Irāq, for its historical traditions and invasions; al-Mada'inī in connection with Khurāsān, India, and Persia; and al-Wāqidi in connection with al-Ḥijāz and the biography [of the Prophet]. They shared together in a knowledge of the invasion of Syria.

Abū al-Faḍl Naṣr ibn Muzāḥim

He was a perfume seller of the Banū Munqar Tribe, who belonged to the generation of Abū Mikhnaf. Muzāḥim [his father] was the son of Sayyār al-Minqarī. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Raids [early wars of Islām]; [Battle of] Ṣiffīn; [Battle of] the Camel; Execution of Ḥujr ibn 'Adī; The Slaying of al-Husayn ibn 'Alī, May There Be Peace for Both of Them [father and son].

Ishāq ibn Bishr

He was one of the scholars of biography and historical traditions, among whose books there were:

The Beginning; The Apostasy; [Battle of] the Camel; The Invasions;³⁶ The Banners; The Zamzam Well; [Battle of] Ṣiffīn.

³¹ The texts are garbled, but as these men were comrades, this rendering is probably correct.

³² In the Beatty MS this word is written as Rushnuqbādh, but it can also be written as Rustaqubādh; see Yāqūt, Geog., II, 778; III, 227.

Sayf ibn 'Umar al-Asadī al-Tamīmī

He was one of those who were interested in biography and historical traditions. Among his books there were:

The large book, The Conquests and the Apostasy; The Camel and the Experiences of 'Ā'ishah and 'Alī, for Whom Be Peace.

Sayf was quoted by Shu'ayb ibn Ibrāhīm ibn ———.

'*Abd al-Mun'im ibn Idrīs ibn Sinān ibn ibnat Wahb ibn Munabbih*³⁷

He died during the year two hundred and twenty-eight [A.D. 842/43]. He was blind at the end of his life but lived to be over one hundred years old. Among his books there was The Beginning.

Ma'mar ibn Rāshid

He was from al-Kūfah, a scholar of biography and historical tradition, quoted by 'Abd al-Razzāq. Among his books there was Raids [early wars of Islām].

Laqīṭ al-Muḥāribī

He was Abū Hilāl Laqīṭ ibn Bakīr al-Muḥāribī of al-Kūfah, from the Banū Muḥārib ibn Khafṣah Tribe, one of those who quoted learning and composed books. He was a man of bad character and a poet, who lived until the year one hundred and ninety [A.D. 805/806]. Among his books there were:

Al-Samūr (Swift Camels); Spearmen and Robbers; Information about the Jinn.

Abū al-Yaqẓān the Genealogist

It was reported by al-Husayn ibn Fahm from al-Dimashqī that al-Zubayr quoted al-Mada'inī as saying:

Abū al-Yaqẓān was Suḥaym ibn Ḥafṣ, Suḥaym being a nickname, as his true name was 'Āmir ibn Ḥafṣ. Ḥafṣ had a son named Muḥammad, who was his eldest child. Now Ḥafṣ was a Negro, exceedingly black and so known as "the Black." Abū al-Yaqẓān said that for fifteen days his mother called him 'Ubayd Allāh (Little Slave of Allāh).

³⁷ The form ibnat means "daughter of." Wahb ibn Munabbih was one of the early converts to Islām.

Thus al-Madā'inī said:

If you say that Abū al-Yaqqān passed on a tradition to us, he is truly Abū al-Yaqqān. But if you say Suḥaym ibn Ḥafṣ, or 'Āmir ibn Ḥafṣ, or 'Āmir ibn Abī Muḥammad, or 'Āmir ibn al-Aswad (the Black), or Suḥaym ibn al-Aswad, or 'Ubayd Allāh ibn 'Āmir, or Abū Ishāq, it is also Abū al-Yaqqān.

He had a knowledge of historical traditions, genealogies, heroic deeds, and scandals, and was accurate in what he quoted about them. He died during the year one hundred and seventy [A.D. 786/87]. Among his books there were:

Intermingling of Tamīm [Clans], One with Another; Historical Traditions of the Tamīm; The Genealogy and Historical Traditions of Khindif; The Great Book of Genealogy, which included the genealogy of Iyād, Kinānah, Asad ibn Khuzaymah, al-Hawn ibn Khuzaymah, Hudhayl ibn Mudrikah, Quraysh, Banū Ṭābikhah, Qays 'Aylān, Rabī'ah ibn Nizār, Taym ibn Murrah, and other genealogies in addition to these;³⁸ Rare Forms, which I saw written in the handwriting of Ibn Sa'dān.

Khālīd ibn Ṭāliq ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Imrān ibn Ḥusayn al-Khuzā'i

He was a historian, who quoted the genealogists, and a proud, conceited man. [The Caliph] Al-Mahdī appointed him as judge of al-Baṣrah, where his pride reached the point that when prayer was offered he stood in his place, even if he stood alone. When somebody said to him, "One individual is straight in a row [at prayer],"³⁹ he replied to him, "The row is straight because of me." Among his books there were:

Heroic Deeds; Al-Muzawwajāt (Married Women) (or Al-Muzawwijāt [Women Who Make Matches]); Suits to Defend Nobility; The Proof.

Al-Zuhri

His name was 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Sa'd al-Zuhri, and he was one of the persons interested in biography. Among his books there was The Invasions of Khālīd ibn al-Walīd.

³⁸ For these tribes, see "Tamīm," Enc. Islam, IV, 643; "Iyād," II, 565; "Qais 'Ailān" (Qays 'Aylān), II, 652. See also Durayd, Geneal., pp. 18, 104, for Kinānah; p. 115 for Khuzaymah; p. 108 for Hudhayl; p. 189 for Rabī'ah ibn Nizār; p. 123 for Taym ibn Murrah. The Quraysh was the tribe of the Prophet. The Beatty MS omits al-Hawn ibn Khuzaymah.

³⁹ The row formed by one man is straight.

Ibn Abī Maryam

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Sa'id ibn al-Ḥakam ibn Abī Maryam, a genealogist and historian among whose books there were:

Genealogy; Heroic Deeds; Nawāfil of the Arabs.

Account of Muḥammad ibn al-Sā'ib [al-Kalbī]

He was Abū al-Naḍr Muḥammad ibn al-Sā'ib. In the handwriting of al-Kūfī [his genealogy is written]: "Muḥammad ibn Mālik ibn al-Sā'ib ibn Bishr ibn 'Amr ibn al-Ḥārith ibn 'Abd al-'Uzzā ibn Imru' al-Qays ibn 'Āmir ibn al-Nu'mān ibn 'Āmir ibn 'Abd Wudd ibn 'Awf ibn Kinānah ibn 'Udhrah ibn Zayd al-Lāt ibn Rufaydah ibn Kalb." He was one of the scholars of al-Kūfah acquainted with exegesis, historical traditions, and chronicles of the people, outstanding among them as a genealogist. He had a son named al-'Abbās, who quoted him.

It is said that Sulaymān ibn 'Alī [governor of al-Baṣrah] promoted Muḥammad ibn al-Sā'ib from al-Kūfah to al-Baṣrah, where he gave him a place in his court. He appointed him to dictate the exegesis of the Qur'ān to the public. But when he reached a verse in "Sūrah Barā'ah"⁴⁰ and explained it differently from what was accepted, the people said, "We won't write down this interpretation." Then Muḥammad [ibn al-Sā'ib] replied, "By Allāh, I won't dictate a single letter until the interpretation of this verse is written down as Allāh revealed it!" So the dispute was referred to Sulaymān ibn 'Alī, who said, "Write down what he says and submit to it."

Hishām ibn Muḥammad [Ibn al-Kalbī] said:

My father said to me, "I learned about the genealogy of the Quraysh⁴¹ from Abū Ṣāliḥ, Abū Ṣāliḥ having acquired it from 'Aqīl ibn Abī Ṭālib." Then he said, "I learned about the genealogy of the Kindah Tribe from Abū al-Kannās al-Kindī, who knew more about it than anyone else. I learned about the genealogy of the Ma'add ibn 'Adnān Tribe from al-Najjār ibn Aws al-'Adwānī, who from what I saw and what I heard about him had the best memory of them all. I learned about the genealogy of the Iyād Tribe from 'Adī ibn Waththāb al-Iyādī, who knew more than anyone else about Iyād."

Hishām also said, "I learned about the genealogy of the Rabī'ah Tribe from my father and from Khurāsh ibn Ismā'il al-Ijlī."

Muḥammad ibn Sā'ib said, "Once 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Ḥasan asked me about the name of Sukaynah, the daughter of al-Ḥusayn, for whom be peace. I replied, 'Umaymah.' Then he said 'You have hit it right.'" Muḥammad ibn al-Sā'ib died at al-Kūfah during the year one hundred and forty-six [A.D. 763/64]. Among his books there was Exegesis of the Qur'ān (Tafsīr al-Qur'ān).

Account of Hishām al-Kalbī (or ibn al-Kalbī)

Muḥammad ibn Sa'd, the secretary of al-Wāqidi, said, "He was Hishām ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Sā'ib ibn Bishr, a scholar of the genealogy, historical traditions, chronicles, faults, and battles of the Arabs. He derived his knowledge from his father and from a group of persons who quoted traditions."

Ishāq al-Mawṣilī said, "Whenever I saw three men appearing, three others were coming too. For if al-Haytham ibn 'Adī appeared, Hishām al-Kalbī was there; 'Allawīyah was there if Mukhāriq turned up; Abū Nuwās was on hand if Abū al-'Atāhiyah appeared."⁴²

Hishām died during the year two hundred and six [A.D. 821/22]. The books which he composed are the following, mentioned according to the sequence recorded in the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥasan, [called] Ibn al-Kūfī:

His Books about Treaties

Treaty of 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib and Khuzā'ah;⁴³ Treaty of al-Fadhūl and Qissat al-Ghazāl; Treaty of Kalb and Tamīm; Light-Armed Raiders (Al-Mughūrāt); Treaty of the Conversion to Islām among the Quraysh.⁴⁴

⁴² Ishāq al-Mawṣilī was the foremost court musician. In regard to the other names in this paragraph, al-Haytham and al-Kalbī were experts for anecdotes and tribal traditions, 'Allawīyah and Mukhāriq were popular singers, while Abū Nuwās and Abū al-'Atāhiyah were leading poets. They all lived at the time of Hārūn al-Rashīd and his immediate successors.

⁴³ See "Khuzā'a" (Khuzā'ah), Enc. Islam, II, 984.

⁴⁴ For submission of the Quraysh, see Ishāq, Life of Ishāq, p. 553.

His Books about Heroic Deeds, Aristocratic Families, Competitions for Nobility, and Girls Buried Alive⁴⁵

Contests for Nobility (Al-Munāfarāt); Aristocratic Families of the Quraysh; Virtues of Qays 'Aylān; Girls Buried Alive; Aristocratic Families of Rabī'ah; Surnames; The Sermon of 'Alī, for Whom May There Be Peace;⁴⁶ The Nobility of Qusayy ibn Kilāb and His Children during the Pre-Islāmic Period and Islām; Nicknames of the Quraysh; Nicknames of the Banū Tābikhah; Nicknames of the Qays 'Aylān; Nicknames of the Rabī'ah; Nicknames of the Yaman; Faults; Nawāfil, which comprises Nawāfil of the Quraysh,⁴⁷ Kinānah, Asad, Tamīm, Qays, Iyād, and Rabī'ah; Naming of Those of 'Ād, Thamūd, al-'Amālik (the Amalekites), Jurhum, and the Banū Isrā'īl (Children of Israel) among the Arabs Who Rendered Extra Favors;⁴⁸ The Story of al-Hijris and the Names of Its Tribes; also, Nawāfil of Qudā'ah and the Yaman.

Among the Books of Hishām [al-Kalbī] Monuments & Settlements

Appeal of Ziyād to Mu'āwīyah; Account of Ziyād ibn Abīh; Crafts of the Quraysh; Disputes (Contests); Transmitting Stories (Conversations, Recounting of Tales); Reproaches; Insurrections; Kings of the Tribes;⁴⁹ Kings of Kindah; Aristocratic Families of the Yaman; The Tubba' Kings of the Yaman;⁵⁰ Divisions of the Offspring of Ma'add;⁵¹

⁵⁰ See Hitti, Arabs, pp. 60, 85.

⁵¹ For the tribes mentioned in this title and the ones which follow, see "Ma'add," Enc. Islam, III, 58; "Nizār," III, 939; "Al-Azd," I, 529; "Djadīs," III, 992, for Tasm and Jadīs.

Scattering of the Offspring of Nizār; Scattering of al-Azd; Ṭasm and Jadis; He Who Has Recited a Verse of Poetry and Been Nicknamed for It;⁵² The Women of the Quraysh Who Are Known.

His Books with Accounts of the Forefathers ancient history

Traditions of Adam and His Offspring; 'Ād, the Beginning and the End;⁵³ The Scattering of 'Ād; Companions of the Cave [Sūrah 18]; Ascension of 'Isā,⁵⁴ for Whom Be Peace; Elders⁵⁵ of the Children of Israel; The Forefathers (Ancients); Proverbs of Ḥimyar;⁵⁶ The Retribution (Life) of al-Ḍaḥḥāk;⁵⁷ Language of the Birds; Ghaziyah;⁵⁸ Languages (Vernaculars) of the Qur'ān; Persons Who Have Lived to an Advanced Age; Idols; Arrows for Fortune Telling (Arrows for Gambling); Teeth of the Slaughtered Animal; Religions of the Arabs.

Judgments (Regimes) of the Arabs; Charges (Wills) of the Arabs; Swords; Horses; Things Buried; Stallions among the Horses of the Arabs; Court Companions; Wealth (Song); Diviners (Priests); Jinn; Chosroes Taking Arab Hostages (Chosroes Taking Arab Pledges); What the Pre-Islāmic Period Accomplished and Contributed to the Regime of Islām; Ibn 'Attāb Rabi' When He Was Asked about the Strange; 'Adī ibn Zayd al-'Ibādī; Al-Daws;⁵⁹ Bayhas and His Brothers; Marwān al-Qaraz.

His Books about How Islām Was Close to the Regime of the Pre-Islāmic Period

The Yaman and the Rule of Sayf;⁶⁰ The Deputations;⁶¹ Wives of the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace;⁶² Marriages of Arab Couples; Zayd ibn Ḥārithah, Beloved of the Prophet, May Allāh

⁵² The last two titles are omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁵³ See Qur'ān 7:65-72 and " 'Ad," Enc. Islam, I, 121.

⁵⁴ This evidently refers to Jesus. The Beatty MS does not include the pious phrase.

⁵⁵ As the form is unusual, this may not be correct.

⁵⁶ See "Ḥimyar," Enc. Islam, II, 310.

⁵⁷ Probably Ibn Qays.

⁵⁸ A tribal name; see Durayd, Geneal., p. 177.

⁵⁹ For this tribal name see Durayd, Geneal., p. 291.

⁶⁰ Almost certainly Sayf ibn Dhī Yazan, who freed the Yaman from Abyssinia, A.D. 575.

⁶¹ See Ishāq, Life of Muhammad, p. 627.

⁶² The blessings for the Prophet here and two titles further are omitted in the Beatty MS.

Bless Him and Give Him Peace; The Naming of Whoever Spoke a Verse or Was Mentioned in One; The Adornment, about traditions of the poets; He Who among the Quraysh Gloried in His Maternal Uncles; He Who Migrated and His Father;⁶³ Accounts of the Jinn and Their Poems; The Introduction of Jarīr [the poet] to al-Ḥajjāj [the governor of al-'Irāq]; Account of 'Amr ibn Ma'di Karib.

His Books about the Historical Traditions of Islām

History; History of the Traditions of the Caliphs; Descriptions (Qualities) of the Caliphs; The Ones Who Pray.

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn 'Umar al-Wāqidi, a protégé of the Aslam family, which descended from Sahm ibn ⁷⁹ The Flügel edition inserts a title which is evidently out of place. It is "The First Kilāb and Second Kilāb, which were two battles (ayyām) among the battles of the Arabs." See Iṣbahānī, Aghānī, Part XI, p. 63, and Part XII, p. 153.

⁸⁰ The Beatty MS lacks this pious phrase, and also that following "the Prophet" in the last title of this list.

⁸¹ This title may also be Al-Ghawā'il ("Misfortunes"). Flügel has a variation, Al-'Awāqil ("The Intelligent").

Aslam.⁸² He was a Shī'ī, his way of belief being good, demanding piety.⁸³

It was he who quoted that 'Alī, for whom be peace, was one of the miracles of the Prophet, may Allāh grant him peace, as the rod was to Mūsā (Moses) and the raising of the dead to 'Isā (Jesus). [He also quoted] other historical traditions.⁸⁴

He was an inhabitant of al-Madīnah, who moved to Baghdād, where he served [the Caliph] al-Rashīd⁸⁵ as judge of the 'Askar al-Mahdī Quarter.⁸⁶ He was learned in connection with the wars and the biography [of the Prophet], the invasions, the contradictory ideas of scholars about the Ḥadīth, as well as for the law, judgments, and historical traditions.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I have read the following in an ancient handwriting:⁸⁷ "After his death Al-Wāqidi left behind six hundred cases of books, each case a load for two men. He had two young men slaves, who wrote for him day and night. Previously there had been sold to him books costing two thousand gold coins (s., dīnār)."

His secretary, Muḥammad ibn Sa'd, said:

Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Wāqidi told me that he was born during the year one hundred and thirty [A.D. 747/48]. He died Monday evening, the eleventh of Dhū al-Ḥijjah [the last Muslim month], during the year two hundred and seven [A.D. 822/23] when he was seventy-eight years old. He was buried in the Cemetery of al-Khayzurān; Muḥammad ibn Samā'ah prayed for him.⁸⁸

⁸² For this tribal name, see Ṭabarī, Annales, Part I, p. 1567; Ishāq, Life of Muḥammad, p. 512.

⁸³ Cf. "al-Wāqidi," Enc. Islam, IV, 1105, for the final statement about the Shī'ī belief of this author.

⁸⁴ This paragraph follows the Beatty MS, which varies from the Flügel text.

⁸⁵ Flügel gives al-Ma'mūn.

⁸⁷ Bi-khatt 'aṭīq is the phrase given in Arabic. It probably means "an ancient handwriting," although it might refer to the handwriting of a man named 'Aṭīq, such as the contemporary of al-Nadīm, 'Aṭīq ibn Khalaf. See Ziriklī, Part IV, p. 362.

⁸⁸ Muḥammad ibn Samā'ah offered the principal prayer at the funeral. The cemetery was on the East Bank of the Tigris, north of the Ruṣāfah Quarter of Baghdād; see Le Strange, Baghdad, pp. 191, 226.

Among his books there were:⁸⁹

History, Raids, and Deputations; Historical Traditions of Makkah; The Generations [of Islām];⁹⁰ The Invasion of Syria; The Invasion of al-'Irāq; [The Battle of] the Camel; The Slaying of al-Ḥusayn;⁹¹ The Biography [of the Prophet]; Marriage of the Prophet, for Whom Be Peace; Repulsion and al-Dār;⁹² The War of Aws and Khazraj;⁹³ [The Battle of] Šiffin; The Incident of the Abyssinians and the Elephant;⁹⁴ The Death of the Prophet, for Whom Be Peace; The Marriages; Al-Saqīfah⁹⁵ and the Acknowledgment (Ba'ah) of Abū Bakr; Mention of the Call to Prayer.⁹⁶

The Life and Death of Abū Bakr; The Claims of the Quraysh and the Anṣār to the Land Tax Collection, the Establishment by 'Umar of the Registers and Classification of the Tribes, with Their Ranks and Genealogies; The Desired, concerning a knowledge of the raids [wars of early Islām]⁹⁷ and the errors of men; The Birth of al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn and the Slaying of al-Ḥusayn, for Whom Be Peace; Minting Gold Coins (s., dīnār) and Silver Coins (s., dirham); History of the Legal Authorities; Al-Ādāb (Literary Pursuits); the large book of history; Errors of the Ḥadīth; The Sunnah, the Jamā'ah, the Evil of Passion, and Refraining from Rebellion.⁹⁸

⁹⁰ The first generation was that of the Companions of the Prophet, the second that of their children, and so on.

⁹¹ Flügel gives "Al-Ḥasan, for whom may there be peace."

⁹² Al-Dār refers to the house of the Caliph 'Uthmān, where the struggle took place in A.D. 656 in which 'Uthmān was killed; see Iṣbahānī, Aghānī, Part IX, p. 37; "Othmān b. 'Affān," Enc. Islam, III, 1010.

⁹⁷ Flügel gives "the Qur'ān" here also, but the Beatty MS has al-maghāzī ("raids").

Muḥammad ibn Sa'd, Secretary of al-Wāqidi

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Sa'd, one of the associates of al-Wāqidi, whom he quoted. He composed his books from the writings of al-Wāqidi. He was reliable, trustworthy, and learned in connection with the historical traditions about the Companions of the Prophet and their successors. He died during the year two hundred and thirty [A.D. 844/45]. Among his books there were:

Historical Traditions of the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace;¹⁰⁰ the large book, Al-Ṭabaqāt (Generations, Groups), which included historical traditions about the Prophet and the generation of the Companions who were inhabitants of al-Madīnah, the generation of the inhabitants of Makkah and, after that, the generations of al-Ṭā'if, al-Yaman, al-Yamāmah, al-Baḥrayn, al-Kūfah, al-Baṣrah, al-Shām, al-Jazīrah, Miṣr (Egypt), al-Andalus (Muslim Spain), Wāsiṭ, al-Madā'in (Ctesiphon-Seleucia), Baghdād, Khurāsān, al-Rayy, Hamadhān, Qūm, al-Anbār, and the generations of the women. [Muḥammad] ibn Sa'd compiled this book from the books of al-Wāqidi, al-Kalbī, al-Haytham ibn 'Adī, and al-Madā'inī.

He also had some other books:

The small book, Generations; Horses.

Among the Associates (Pupils) of al-Wāqidi There Was Also Ismā'il ibn Majma'¹⁰¹

He died during the year two hundred and twenty-seven [A.D. 841/42]. Among his books there was Historical Traditions of the Prophet, His Raids (Wars) and Military Units.

Account of al-Haytham ibn 'Adī

He was Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Haytham ibn 'Adī al-Thu'li, an authority for poetry, historical traditions, faults, virtues, heroic deeds, and genealogy. He was accused of not having distinguished lineage. He recited [a poem] to Di'bil, satirizing [Aḥmad] Ibn Abī Duwād, al-Haytham feigning defeat with the [following] satire:

⁹⁹ Flügel gives "stealing" instead of "partnership." It is difficult to translate these ancient legal terms into modern English.

¹⁰⁰ This title is in Flügel but not the Beatty MS, while the compilations which follow are in the Beatty MS but not the Flügel text.

¹⁰¹ This paragraph is omitted in the Flügel text.

I questioned my father, for my father was acquainted.
With traditions of the settled regions and the desert wastes,
I said to him, "Is Haytham from 'Adī?"
He answered "As truly as Aḥmad is Ibn Abī Duwād."
If Haytham is of those whose lineage is pure,
Then Aḥmad is undoubtedly from Iyād.
But when Iyād was presiding over the people,
The deity was angered against mankind.¹⁰²

He died at Fam al-Ṣilḥ during the year two hundred and seven [A.D. 822/23] at the home of al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl.¹⁰³ Among his compiled books there were:

Faults; Those Who Have Lived to an Advanced Age; The Aristocratic Families of Quraysh; The Government (State); The Aristocratic Families of the Arabs; The Fall of Adam, the Dispersion of the Arabs, Their Encampments and Settlements; Encampments of the Arabs in al-Sawād and Khurāsān; Genealogy of Ṭayy;¹⁰⁴ Confederacy (Covenant) of Kalb and Tamīm, Confederacy of Dhuhl, Confederacy of Ṭayy and Asad; the small book, Faults; the large book, Faults; Faults of Rabī'ah; Historical Traditions of Ṭayy, Its Settling the Two Mountains, and the Confederacy (Covenant) of Dhuhl and Thu'al;¹⁰⁵ Praise of the People

¹⁰⁴ For the tribes, see Enc. Islam: "Ṭayy," IV, 623; "Kalb b. Wabara," II, 688; "Tamīm," IV, 643; "Asad," I, 474. See also Hitti, Arabs, p. 280 for Rabī'ah; Durayd, Geneal., pp. 114, 117, for Dhuhl; Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 51, for Thu'al.

¹⁰⁵ The two mountains are Ajā and Salmā south of Ḥā'il. See "Ṭayy," Enc. Islam, IV, 623; Yāqūt, Geog., I, 125.

Bodyguards of the Caliphs; Judges of al-Kūfah and al-Baṣrah; Officers of the Bodyguards of the Governors of al-ʿIrāq; Meeting Places [for pilgrims, fairs, and so on]; The Governors (Umarāʾ) of Khurāsān and al-Yaman;¹⁰⁹ History of the Caliphs; Land Tax (Al-Kharāj);¹¹⁰ Summer Campaigns; Al-Khawārij; Rare Forms; Who among the Companions Quoted the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace;¹¹¹ Naming of the Authorities for the Law and the Ḥadīth; History According to Years; Record of Jewels; Traditions of al-Ḥasan, for Whom Be Peace,¹¹² and His Death; One Who Converses at Night (Al-Samīr) (or Invocation [Al-Samīz]); Historical Traditions of Persia; Affairs (Sermons) of the Two Cities, Makkah and al-Madīnah; Miscellaneous Poems of the Arabs; Al-Muḥabbar;¹¹³ The Place of Death of Khālīd ibn ʿAbd Allāh al-Qasrī, of al-Walīd ibn Yazīd, and of Khalaf ibn ʿAbd Allāh.¹¹⁴

¹⁰⁶ These last three titles in the list are omitted in the Beatty MS.

¹⁰⁷ The title may be Invective ("Al-Sibāb"). Flügel gives what might be The Arrow ("Al-Nushshāb") or The Archer ("Al-Nashshāb").

¹⁰⁸ This title and the one following are not in the Flügel text.

¹⁰⁹ This title and the two which follow are not in the Flügel text.

¹¹⁰ This might also be Al-Jarrāḥ ("Surgeon") or Al-Khurāj ("Abscess"), but these medical terms are unlikely.

¹¹¹ The Beatty MS lacks this pious phrase.

¹¹² This title shows slight variations between the Beatty MS and the Flügel edition, as do several others which follow.

¹¹³ This was probably al-Muḥabbar ibn Iyās ibn Marhūb, a noble of Khurāsān during the early Islāmic period, but the consonants given in the Beatty MS might also be used to form numerous common words.

¹¹⁴ Khālīd ibn ʿAbd Allāh was killed at al-Ḥīrah, and the Caliph al-Walīd died at Bakhrāʾ south of Palmyra, but the place of Khalaf's death has not been identified.

Among Those Who Learned from al-Haytham and Composed Books

Abū ʿUmar al-ʿUmarī,¹¹⁵ whose name was Ḥafṣ ibn ʿUmar, and among whose books there were:

Adulterers among the Noblemen¹¹⁶ and Mention of the Arab Youths and What Occurred between the Two Groups, and Mention Also of the Illegitimate (Adopted) Sons of the Pre-Islāmic Period; Women, written in the handwriting of al-Sukkārī.

Account of Abū al-Bakhtarī the Judge

He was Abū al-Bakhtarī Wahb ibn Wahb ibn Kathīr ibn ʿAbd Allāh ibn Zamaʿah ibn al-Aswad ibn Asad ibn ʿAbd al-ʿUzzā ibn Quṣayy. It is said that Jaʿfar ibn Muḥammad [al-Ṣādiq], for whom may there be peace, was married to his mother, who was one of the inhabitants of al-Madīnah.

He was a legal authority, historian, and genealogist. Hārūn [al-Rashīd] appointed him as judge of the ʿAskar al-Mahdī [Quarter of Baghdād].¹¹⁷ Later he removed him, making him the governor of the city of the Apostle, for whom be peace [al-Madīnah], succeeding Bakkār ibn ʿAbd Allāh, and assigning to him the finances in addition to the judiciary. Then he was removed and came to Baghdād, where he died. He was weak in his knowledge of the Ḥadīth. Among his books there were:

Standards (Flags); Ṭasm and Jadīs;¹¹⁸ Description of the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace;¹¹⁹ Virtues of the Anṣār;¹²⁰ the large book, Virtues, including all of the virtues; Genealogy of ¹¹⁵ Flügel gives al-Anbarī, which is an error. The Beatty MS has a correction on the margin.

¹¹⁶ This perhaps means adulterers who were Pre-Islāmic noblemen or chiefs. The word "adulterers" (al-zunāh) might be "affluence" (al-raḥāh).

¹¹⁷ This quarter is better known as al-Ruṣāfah; see n. 86. In the following sentence, the phrase "for whom be peace" is not in the Beatty MS.

¹¹⁸ Legendary tribes of Arabia. See "Ṭasm," Enc. Islam, IV, 691.

¹¹⁹ The pious clause and the similar phrase after Abraham are not in the Beatty MS.

¹²⁰ The Anṣār were citizens of al-Madīnah who gave their support to the Prophet.

Ismā'īl ibn Ibrāhīm (Ishmael Son of Abraham), for Whom Be Peace, which includes a section with traditions and stories.

Account of al-Madā'inī

Al-Hārith ibn Abī Usāmah related, saying, "Al-Madā'inī was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Sayf al-Madā'inī, a protégé of Samurah ibn Jundhab, or some say of Samurah ibn Ḥabīb ibn 'Abd Shams ibn 'Abd Manaf."¹²¹ According to what Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā quoted from al-Husayn ibn Fahm as coming from him [al-Madā'inī], he said, "I was born during the year one hundred and thirty-five [A.D. 752/53]." He died during the year two hundred and fifteen [A.D. 830/31].

I have read what was written in the handwriting of Abū Bakr ibn al-Ikhshīd: "Al-Madā'inī was a theologian, one of the young men of Mu'ammār ibn al-Ash'ath." He also said, "Ḥafṣ al-Fard, Mu'ammār, Abū Shimr, Abū al-Ḥasan al-Madā'inī, Abū Bakr al-Aṣamm, Abū 'Amīr, and 'Abd al-Karīm ibn Rūḥ—these six were apprentices (ghilmān) of Mu'ammār ibn al-Ash'ath."

It has been said, and I have also read it written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī, that al-Madā'inī died during the year two hundred and twenty-five [A.D. 839/40], when he was ninety-three years old, at the house of Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm al-Mawṣilī, to whom he was attached. His books as I recall them, according to what was written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥasan ibn al-Kūfī, were as follows:

His Books about the Historical Traditions of the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him

Women Ancestors (Mothers) of the Prophet;¹²² Description (Quality) of the Prophet; Historical Traditions of the Hypocrites;¹²³ Treaties of the Prophet; Naming of the Hypocrites about Whom There Was a Revelation in the Qur'ān, and Others besides Them; Naming of Those Who Molested the Prophet and Also Naming of the Mockers, Who Called the Qur'ān Falsehoods;¹²⁴ Emissaries (Missives) of the Prophet, for Whom Be Peace; Letters of the Prophet to the Kings;¹²⁵ Verses of the Prophet, for Whom Be Peace; Land Allotments of the Prophet; Invasions of the Prophet, for Whom Be Peace; Peace of the Prophet;¹²⁶ Sermons of the Prophet;¹²⁷ Other Treaties of the Prophet; The Raids [wars of early Islām]—Abū al-Ḥasan ibn al-Kūfī asserted that he had a copy on eight pieces of parchment, written in the handwriting of 'Abbās al-Yābis.¹²⁸ He also stated that below this text there was another in two sections, composed by Aḥmad ibn al-Hārith al-Khazzāz.

¹²¹ For these tribal names as given in the Beatty MS, see Durayd, Geneal., pp. 50, 172.

Military Units of the Prophet; The Deputations, which included the deputations (envoys) of the Yamān, the deputations of Muḍar, and the deputations of Rabī'ah; Invocation of the Prophet; News (Awareness) of the Untrue; Wives of the Prophet; The Military Units; The Prophet's Agents for Alms; What the Prophet Forbade; The Pilgrimage (Hajjah) of Abū Bakr;¹²⁹ Sermons of the Prophet; Historical Traditions of the Prophet; The Seal and the Missives; Those for Whom the Prophet Wrote Letters and Safe Conducts (Trusts); The Properties of the Prophet, His Scribes, and Who among the Arabs Refused Alms from Him.

Accounts (Traditions) of the Quraysh

Genealogy and Historical Traditions of the Quraysh; Al-'Abbās ibn 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib; Account of Abū Ṭālib and His Sons; Sermons of 'Alī, for Whom May There Be Peace; 'Abd Allāh ibn al-'Abbās; 'Alī

¹²³ The word translated as "hypocrites" is al-munāfiqīn, which means persons who pretended to side with the Prophet, but plotted against him. See Ishāq, Life of Muhammad, pp. 247–70.

¹²⁵ See Ishāq, Life of Muhammad, p. 652.

¹²⁶ Ibid., p. 504.

¹²⁷ Instead of "sermons," this word may be "business" or "calamity."

ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn al-'Abbās; The Family of Abū al-'Āṣ; The Family of Abū al-'Īṣ; Information about al-Ḥakam ibn Abī al-'Āṣ; 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Samurah; Ibn Abī 'Atīq; 'Amr ibn al-Zubayr; The Virtues of Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥanafiyah; The Virtues of Ja'far ibn Abī Ṭālib; The Virtues of al-Ḥārith ibn 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib; The Virtues of 'Abd Allāh ibn Ja'far; Mu'āwiyah ibn 'Abd Allāh; 'Abd Allāh ibn Mu'āwiyah; The Affair of Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abbās; Al-'Āṣ ibn Umayyah; 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Āmir ibn Kurayz; Bishr ibn Marwān ibn al-Ḥakam; 'Umar ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ma'mar; Satire of Ḥassān¹³⁰ about the Quraysh; Virtues of the Quraysh; 'Amr ibn Sa'īd ibn al-'Āṣ; Yahyā ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Ḥārith; The Names of the Members of the Family of Abū Ṭālib Who Were Killed; Account of Ziyād ibn Abīh; Marriages of Ziyād and His Sons and Adopted Sons;¹³¹ Replies—it includes replies of the Quraysh, replies of Muḍar, replies of Rabī'ah, replies of the protégés, and replies of al-Yaman.¹³²

His [al-Madā'ini's] Books containing Traditions concerning the Marriages of the Nobility and Traditions concerning Women

The Dowry; Banquets; Marriages; Married Women and Refractory Wives;¹³³ Uncircumcised Girls (Al-Mu'barāt); Dressers of Brides;¹³⁴ Those Riding behind [Their Husbands] (Al-Mutaradifāt) among the Quraysh; He Who Has Intercourse with Two Sisters, He Who Marries His Wife's Daughter, He Who Weds More than Four, He Who Marries a Magian (Zoroastrian); He Who Abhorred His Marriage; She Whose Husband Finishes with Her; She Who Was Prohibited from Marrying a Man, but Married Him; Who among the Nobles Married in the Kalb Tribe.

She Whom Her Husband Ridiculed (Lampooned); She Who Accused Her Husband and He Accused Her; Contradictions (Oppositions) of the Poets and Traditions about Women; Who among the Quraysh Married [Women of the] Thaḳīf Tribe; The Fāṭimahs; He Who Described a ¹³⁰ Probably the poet, Ḥassān ibn Thābit.

¹³¹ "Adopted sons" very likely refers to the sons of concubines.

¹³² For Muḍar, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 20; for Rabī'ah, see Hitti, Arabs, p. 93; for both tribes, see Hitti, Arabs, pp. 280, 502 n. 1.

¹³³ The Beatty MS omits "and refractory wives."

¹³⁴ The Beatty MS has Dressers of Brides ("Al-Muḳayyīnāt") whereas Flügel gives Singing Girls ("Al-Mughanniyāt"). Other titles differ in the various versions; the translation follows the Beatty MS.

Woman and Flattered Her; Women of the Kalb Tribe; Women Colored by Cosmetics;¹³⁵ The Marriages of al-Farazdaq; The Virgin (First-Born); Which of the Women of the Caliphs Married.

His Books about Historical Traditions of the Caliphs

Naming of the Caliphs, Their Surnames,¹³⁶ and Their Lives; History of the Lives of the Caliphs; History of the Caliphs; Adornment (Distinguishing Attributes) of the Caliphs; the large book, Historical Traditions of the Caliphs, which included accounts of Abū Bakr, 'Umar, 'Uthmān, 'Alī,¹³⁷ Mu'āwiyah, Yazīd, Mu'āwiyah [II], Ibn al-Zubayr, Marwān ibn al-Ḥakam, 'Abd al-Malik [ibn Marwān], al-Walīd, Sulaymān, 'Umar [II], Yazīd ibn 'Abd al-Malik, Hishām ibn 'Abd al-Malik, al-Walīd [II] ibn Yazīd, Yazīd ibn al-Walīd, Marwān [II], al-Saffāh, al-Manṣūr, al-Mahdī, al-Hādī, al-Rashīd, al-Amīn, with his civil war, al-Ma'mūn, al-Mu'taṣim;¹³⁸ Traditions of al-Saffāh; Training of the Sultan.

His Books about Historical Events

The Slaying of 'Uthmān ibn 'Affān, with Whom May Allāh Be Well Pleased;¹³⁹ The Apostasy; The Camel; The Raids; Al-Naharwān; Al-Khawārij; Dābī' ibn al-Ḥārith al-Burjūmī; Tawbah ibn Muḍarras; Banū Nājiyah, al-Mudabbār ibn Rāshid, and Maṣqalah ibn Hubayrah;¹⁴⁰ abridgment of "Al-Khawārij"; The Sermons of 'Alī and His Letters to His Governors; 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Āmir al-Ḥaḍramī; Ismā'il ibn Habbār.

'Amr ibn al-Zubayr; Marj Rāhiṭ;¹⁴¹ Al-Rabadhah and the Slaying of Khunays; Account of al-Ḥajjāj and His Death; 'Abbād ibn al-Ḥusayn;

¹³⁶ The Beatty MS has al-kuttāb ("secretaries") instead of surnames.

¹³⁷ The Flügel version adds, "may there be peace for them."

¹³⁸ See Hitti, Arabs, pp. 139, 193, 279, 297, for lists and dates for these names.

¹³⁹ This title is omitted in the Beatty MS.

¹⁴⁰ Al-Mudabbār ibn Rāshid is not clear enough in the different versions to be included in the Biog. Index. For this book, see Iṣbahānī, Aghānī, Part IX, p. 105.

Ḥarrat Wāqim;¹⁴² Ibn al-Jārūd at Rūstuqbādh (Rūshtuqbādh); The Slaying of 'Amr ibn Sa'id ibn al-'Āṣ; Ziyād ibn 'Amr ibn al-Ashraf ibn al-'Atki; The Dissention and Slaying of 'Abd al-Jabbār al-Azdi; Salm ibn Qutaybah and Rūḥ ibn Hātim; Al-Musawwar ibn 'Umar ibn 'Abbād al-Ḥabṭi and 'Amr ibn Sahl; The Slaying of Yazid ibn 'Umar ibn Hubayrah; Battle (Yawm) of Sanbil.¹⁴³

His Books about the Invasions

The Invasion of al-Shām,¹⁴⁴ [during] the Time (Ayyām) of Abū Bakr:

¹⁴³ An encounter in a village of Khuzistān. See Yāqūt, Geog., III, 157; Ṭabarī, Annales, Part I, p. 818; Part III, p. 2203.

¹⁴⁴ Al-Shām seems to refer to Syria, rather than Damascus. In the same paragraph, Marj al-Ṣuffar is a plain 20 miles south of Damascus, and Buṣrā Eskī Shām is still further south. Al-Wāqūṣah is the valley where the defeated soldiers who fled from the Yarmūk, the decisive battle against the Byzantines, were overtaken. The Beatty MS gives al-Bāqūṣah, which is evidently a mistake; see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 893. Fiḥl (Pella) was in Jordan. Al-Yarmūk is the battle referred to above. Ḥīyā' is Aelia Capitolina, the name given to Jerusalem by Hadrian. For accounts of the conquest of Palestine and Syria in English, see Hitti, Arabs, Chap. XII, and Balādhurī, Origins, pp. 165–265.

¹⁴⁵ The names which are not indicated by italics as those of men are the names of places where engagements took place during the Muslim invasions. These names can be found in Yāqūt, Geog. For the history, see Hitti, Arabs, pp. 157–59; Balādhurī, Origins, pp. 403–20, 469–93.

¹⁴⁶ As this name cannot be identified, it may be meant for Qaryat 'Abd Allāh near Wāsiṭ; see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 85.

¹⁴⁷ It may be more correct to spell this place-name without the second i. For this location, see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 745 l. 8.

¹⁴⁸ Flügel suggests al-Bustān, whereas the Beatty MS has al-Shīyān. See Yāqūt, Geog., I, 611; III, 345.

¹⁴⁹ These were Persian horsemen who accepted Islām. The best-known group connected with al-Baṣrah, but there were others from Daylam. See Balādhurī, Origins, p. 441. Flügel gives this title incorrectly.

¹⁵¹ A town near al-Baṣrah; see Hitti, Arabs, pp. 154 map, 468.

¹⁵² For Zabulistān, see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 31 l. 9, and Browne, Literary History of Persia, I, 116. The Beatty MS gives this name clearly.

¹⁵³ Al-Jazīrah was probably northern 'Irāq. In the next title, Flügel omits this name and it is not written clearly in the Beatty MS, and so it is impossible to identify. Perhaps it is meant to be al-Bāmqrā in al-Jazīrah; see Muqaddasī, Aḥsan al-Taqāsim, p. 149 l. 9.

¹⁵⁴ Omitted by the Beatty MS.

¹⁵⁵ A place near Iṣṭakhr invaded A.D. 643; see Ṭabarī, Annales, Part I, p. 2697.

¹⁵⁶ Instead of Nubia, the word may be al-nawbah, a "crowd or circle of men."

His Books about Historical Traditions of the Arabs

Aristocratic Families; The Animals;¹⁵⁷ Nobles of the 'Abd al-Qays Tribe;¹⁵⁸ Historical Traditions of al-Thaqif; He Who Was Named for His Mother; He among the Arabs Who Was Called by His Father's Name; Horses and Betting on Races; Building of the Ka'bah; The Defense of al-Madinah, Its Mountains and Valleys.

His Books with Historical Traditions of the Poets and Others besides Them

Historical Traditions (Account) of the Poets; Which One of the Poets Was Named for His Mother; The Great Tribes; The Chiefs (Elders); Litigants; Who Suspended Hostilities or Raided; Who among the Arabs Borrowed from an Anthology, but Regretted It and Recited [His Own] Poetry; Makers of Similes (Word Pictures); He Who Described His Illness with Poetic Simile (He Who in His Sickness Illustrated with Poetry); Verses Which Had a Word as Reply (Verses Which Had in Reply Speech); Al-Najāshī;¹⁵⁹ He Who Stood at a Tomb and Made a Simile with Poetry; He Who Learned of the Death of a Man and Illustrated It with Poetry of Speech; Who among the Women Resembled Men; He Who Preferred Nomadic Ways of Speaking to Those of the Townsmen.

Those Who Recited Poetry Extemporaneously; Those Who Recited Poetry about Calamities (Those Who Recited Poetry about Timorous Beasts); Seeking Aid against the Poets; He Who Recited Poetry and Was Named for It; Who among the Poets Spoke in the Government; Preference of the Poets, One over the Other; Who Repented for (Regretted) Praise and Who Repented for (Regretted) Satire; Who Recited Poetry and Was Answered by Speech; Abū al-Aswad al-Du'ālī; Khālīd ibn Ṣafwān; The Lampooning of 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Ḥassān by al-Najāshī [Qays ibn 'Amr]; The Poem of Khālīd ibn Yazīd about Kings and Events; Account of al-Farazdaq; Poem of 'Abd Allāh ibn Ishāq ibn al-Faḍl ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān; Report of 'Imrān ibn Ḥiṭṭān al-Khārījī;¹⁶⁰ Calamity.

¹⁵⁷ The Beatty MS has a word which seems to be al-ḥayawān ("animals"), although Flügel gives al-ḥirān ("obstinate").

¹⁵⁸ For the tribes, see "'Abd al-Qays," Enc. Islam, I, 45; "Thaqif," IV, 734.

¹⁵⁹ This probably refers to the poet Qays ibn 'Amr, rather than to the Emperor of Ethiopia, whose title was al-Najāshī.

¹⁶⁰ The word "al-Khārījī" and the two titles which follow are omitted by the Beatty MS.

Among His Composed Books

The Ancients; The Enslaved (Those Conquered by Love); Condoling; Competitions for Honor; Blaming One Who Is Absent (The Meal);¹⁶¹ The Travelers; Tracking, Divination by Flight of Birds, Augury; Who among the Nobles Was of Unsound Mind;¹⁶² Al-Marwah (Abundantly Watered) [also, the name of a mountain at Makkah]; Fools; Foolish (Al-Ṭaraṭūn); The Jewels; Singers (Al-Mughannīyūn) (or Muftīs [al-Muftīyūn]); The Poisoned (Al-Masmūmūn); He Used to Say; The Reproach of Envy; He Who Endows a Tomb (He Who Is Acquainted with a Tomb); The Horses (The Generation); He Whose Case Is Granted; Judges of the People of al-Madinah; Judges of the People of al-Baṣrah.

Account of Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥārith al-Khazzāz, a Friend of al-Madā'inī

I have read what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī saying:

¹⁶¹ In the Flügel edition this title is in the preceding paragraph.

¹⁶² The word given by Flügel is almost certainly incorrect. In the Beatty MS it is not clearly written, but it seems to be kharif ("of unsound mind").

¹⁶³ See Qur'an 18:9-26. There is a note on the margin of the Beatty MS but it is not legible.

¹⁶⁴ This might be al-najl ("offspring"), al-nakhl ("palm tree"), al-bukhl ("stinginess"), or several other choices.

¹⁶⁵ The words given in the Flügel version seem to be wrong. The translation follows the Beatty MS.

¹⁶⁶ The first word may be al-'aqabah (see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 692) and the second al-bardah ("captive slave"), as translated. Or they may be al-'uqbah ("the substitute") and al-burzah (see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 564). This title and the ones which follow in this translation are not found in the Beatty MS.

Abū Ja'far Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥārith ibn al-Mubārak was a protégé of [the Caliph] al-Manṣūr, an inhabitant of Baghdād, with a large head, a long full beard, handsome features, and a large mouth. He was a stammerer, and the year before his death used red dye [on his hair]. When he was questioned about this he said, "It has reached me that when Munkar and Nakir come to a dead person whom they see has dyed hair, Munkar says to Nakir, 'Turn away from him.'" ¹⁶⁷

From a source other than what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī, "He quoted al-Madā'ini and al-Attābī. His grandfather was named Ḥassān and was one of the boys of al-Yamāmah [brought as] captives to al-Manṣūr to work among the doorkeepers." ¹⁶⁸

Aḥmad [ibn al-Ḥārith] was a poet. Among his poems there was:

I am a person who would not be seen knocking at the door,
If the doorkeeper should be ill-tempered;
Though I do not blame one wishing noble patronage,
I do not seek the friendship of the disdainful and haughty. ¹⁶⁹

Most of his poetry was reproach of the chamberlain.

Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥārith died during Dhū al-Ḥijjah [the last month of the Muslim year], during the year two hundred and fifty-eight [A.D. 871/72]. His house was at the Kūfah Gate and he was buried in the cemetery there. ¹⁷⁰ Some say that he died during the year fifty-six [A.D. 869/70]. Among the books which he composed there were:

Roadways and Kingdoms; The Names of the Caliphs and Their Secretaries and the Companions; Marine Wars during the Rule of the Banū Hāshim and Mention of Abū Ḥafṣ, the Master of Crete; The Tribes; Nobility; What the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace (Ṣal'am), ¹⁷¹ Prohibited; Sons of the Concubines; Rare Forms of Poetry;

¹⁶⁷ When these angels, Munkar and Nakir, came to a grave, they cross-examined the dead. As Aḥmad stuttered, he wished to avoid this embarrassment. See "Munkar wa-Nakir," Enc. Islam, III, 724.

¹⁶⁹ Compare with the longer quotation, Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (1), 408.

¹⁷⁰ On the south side of Baghdād.

¹⁷¹ The Beatty MS lacks this pious phrase. The Flügel text adds it here and four titles following, after mention of the Prophet.

Abridgment of "Tribal People" (Kitāb al-Buṭūn); ¹⁷² The Raids of the Prophet, May Allah Bless Him and Give Him Peace, His Army Ranks, and Mention of His Wives; The Eminent among the Sons of al-Ḥārith ibn Ka'b and Historical Traditions about Them during Pre-Islamic Times; ¹⁷³ Historical Traditions about Abū al-'Abbās; Accounts and Rare Forms (Historical Traditions and Rare Anecdotes); Constitution of the Postal Service; ¹⁷⁴ Love Poetry (High in Rank); Milk Camels and Pledges.

Abū Khālid al-Ghanawī

Among his books there was Historical Traditions and Genealogies of the Ghani. ¹⁷⁵

Account of Ibn 'Abdah

He was Muḥammad ibn 'Abdah ibn Sulaymān ibn Ḥājib al-'Abdī. The [real] name of 'Abdah was 'Abd al-Raḥmān, 'Abdah being a nickname. 'Abdah was surnamed Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān. His son Muḥammad was surnamed Abū Bakr.

He was one of the genealogists who were accurate, with excellent knowledge of the heroic deeds, historical traditions, and chronicles (ayyām) of the Arabs. He was in the continual service of the sultan. He died ——. Among his books there was the large book, Genealogy, which contained genealogies of the tribes, according to the example of the book of Hishām al-Kalbī. In addition to this he also wrote:

Abridgment of the Names of the Tribes; Sufficiency, about genealogy; Marriages of the Family of al-Muhallab; Genealogy of the Sons of Abū Ṣufrah and of al-Muhallab and His Sons; Ma'add ibn 'Adnān and Qaḥṭān; ¹⁷⁶ Virtues of the Quraysh; Genealogy of the Banū Faq'as ibn ¹⁷² In the Flügel and Yāqūt [Irshād, VI (1), 407] accounts these are two separate books, Abridgment and Tribal People. In the title which follows, the Beatty MS lacks the pious phrase.

¹⁷³ The Flügel edition lacks this title.

¹⁷⁴ This follows the translation in Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (1), 407, and is different from Flügel. The final title in this list is not in the Beatty MS.

¹⁷⁵ For Ghani, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 164. The paragraph which follows is taken from the Beatty MS, which is more specific than the Flügel text.

Account of 'Allān al-Shu'ūbī

He was 'Allān ibn — al-Shu'ūbī, whose origin was Persian. He was a quoter of traditions, who had a knowledge of genealogies, disputes, and competitions for honor. He was attached to the Barāmakah and also transcribed in the Bayt al-Ḥikmah for al-Rashīd and al-Ma'mūn. For the Barāmakah he wrote Kitāb al-Maydān, about the faults by which the Arabs were dishonored and the most apparent of their vices.¹⁸⁰ He also wrote a book, which he did not finish, entitled Adornment (Al-Ḥalyah), all trace of which is lost. I have read about this from what was written in the handwriting of Ibn Shāhīn the historian. Among his books there was Al-Maydān, about the faults of the Quraysh, the industries of the Quraysh, and their forms of trade. It also included the faults of:¹⁸¹

¹⁷⁷ For the Banū Faq'as, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 111; Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 32.

¹⁷⁸ See "Kināna" (Kinānah), Enc. Islam, II, 1017.

¹⁷⁹ See "Bakr," Enc. Islam, I, 60, and for Taghlib, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 202.

¹⁸⁰ 'Allān was of Persian origin and belonged to the party of the Shu'ūbiyah, which opposed Arab supremacy. It was natural, therefore, for the viziers of the family of Barmak, who were of Persian origin and anxious to gain as much power as possible, to employ him to write about the faults and vices of the Arabs. In spite of this, however, the Arab caliphs, Hārūn al-Rashīd and his son, al-Ma'mūn, employed him to transcribe manuscripts in the royal research institute, Bayt al-Ḥikmah.

¹⁸⁴ Although Flügel and the Beatty MS give Ghassān, this word is perhaps meant to be the name of the last great chief of the Khuzā'ah Tribe. He was called Abū Ghabshān, and was known for selling the custodianship of the holy shrine at Makkah. Other heroes were also called by the name Ghabshān; see Durayd, Geneal., p. 282; "Khuzā'a," Enc. Islam, II, 984.

Account of Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb

He was Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb ibn Umayyah ibn 'Amr. It is written in the handwriting of al-Sukkari:

Abū al-Qāsim al-Ḥijāzī, author of The History Supplement (Al-Tārikh al-Mulḥaq) said, "Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik told me that Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd al-'Aziz ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥāshimī stated, 'Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb was a protégé of ours. He was of the descendants of al-'Abbās ibn Muḥammad, the mother of Ḥabīb being our protégé also. Although the father of Ḥabīb was not known, his mother was.'"

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: He [Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb] was one of the scholars of Baghdād dealing with genealogy, historical traditions, language, poetry, and the tribes. He edited a portion of the poems of the Arabs and quoted Ibn al-'Arabi, Qutrub, Abū 'Ubaydah, Abū al-Yaqzān, and others. He was highly cultured; his books were accurate. He died ———. Among his books there were:

The Elegant Book of Examples Based on Af'ala;¹⁸⁵ Genealogy; Good Fortune and Support; Subtribes and Families, about genealogy;¹⁸⁶ Double-Rhymed Poetry (Al-Muwashshahah); The Diverse and Harmonious in Genealogy; The Informant (Giver of News); The Possessed (The Possessor); The Strange in the Ḥadīth; Al-Anwā'; The Wooded (Planted with Trees); He Who Grants His Petition (He Who Answers

¹⁸⁶ "About genealogy" is omitted in the Beatty MS. In the second title following, "in genealogy" is also omitted by the Beatty MS.

His Prayer),¹⁸⁷ written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī; The School of Thought (Al-Madhhab), with traditions of the poets and their generations (categories); Embellishment (Al-Dibāj); Contradictions of Jarir and 'Umar ibn Lajā';¹⁸⁸ Contradictions of Jarir and al-Farazdaq; The Variegated (Al-Mufawwaf); History of the Caliphs; He Who Was Named for the Verse He Recited.

Adversaries of the Horsemen;¹⁸⁹ Nicknames of the Poets; Surnaming of the Poets; Intelligence; The Marks; Female Ancestors (Mothers) of the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace;¹⁹⁰ Battles (Ayyām) of Jarir, Mentioned in His Poetry;¹⁹¹ The Mothers of the Leading Men among the Sons of 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib; The Seeker after Knowledge; Horses, copied in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī; Mothers of the Seven (al-Sab'ah) of the Quraysh;¹⁹² Plants;¹⁹³ The Blood Relationship between the Apostle of Allāh, for Whom May There Be Peace, and His Companions, Disregarding Relations on the Male Side; Nicknames of the Yaman, Rabī'ah, and Muḍar;¹⁹⁴ Nicknames, which comprised the nicknames of the tribes.

The large book, The Tribes and Their Battles (Ayyām), which he compiled for al-Faṭḥ ibn Khāqān. I saw the authentic manuscript at the house of Abū al-Qāsim ibn Abī al-Khaṭṭāb ibn al-Farrāt, made of paper and with more than twenty sections. As it was incomplete, it seemed as though there must have been originally about forty sections, with over two hundred leaves in each section. This manuscript also had a table of contents comprising the tribes and battles, written in the handwriting of

¹⁸⁹ Flügel gives muqātil ("adversaries," "combatants"), but the word might be muqābil ("opposite," "in front of").

¹⁹⁰ The Beatty MS omits the pious phrase given by Flügel after the Prophet.

¹⁹¹ The word "battles" is omitted by Flügel.

¹⁹² "The seven" may refer to generations, or to Mu'āwiyah and his six ancestors, or to the first seven Umayyad caliphs. Flügel gives al-Shi'ah (the Shi'ites), but the Beatty MS gives al-sab'ah.

¹⁹³ Omitted by the Beatty MS.

¹⁹⁴ Flügel gives the Namir instead of the Yaman. For the Yaman, see Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 49; "al-Yaman," Enc. Islam, IV, 1155. See Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 46, for Namir; Durayd, Geneal., p. 42, for Rabī'ah; and Khaldūn, Muqaddimah (Rosen-thal), I, 298-99, for Muḍar.

al-Sandī ibn 'Alī al-Warrāq, on ṭalḥī,¹⁹⁵ about fifteen leaves, with a Turkish script. I shall mention the main points about this matter, but not the details, if Allāh so will.

Khallād ibn Yazīd al-Bāhili

He was one of those who quoted the historical traditions and poems of the tribes. There are no books of his that we know of.

'Umar ibn Bukayr

He was an associate of al-Hasan ibn Sahl, a scholar of historical traditions, a quoter of information, and a genealogist. It was for him that al-Farrā' wrote the book Meaning of the Qur'ān.¹⁹⁶ Among his own books there were:

Battle of the Ghawl; Battle of Zahr; Battle of Armān; Battle of al-Kūfah; Raiding of the Banū Sa'd ibn Zayd Manāh; Battle of Manābiḍ.¹⁹⁷

Ibn Abī Uways

He was one of the scholars who quoted information about language, genealogies, and heroic deeds. He met with the Arabian masters of literary style and quoted what Abū Sahl Sa'd ibn Sa'id passed on from the book of al-Ḥadramī about the strange forms.¹⁹⁸

Ibn al-Naṭṭāḥ

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ṣāliḥ ibn al-Naṭṭāḥ, who quoted al-Hasan ibn Maymūn. This man was the first person to write a book about the government, with its historical traditions. Ibn al-Naṭṭāḥ passed on information from Ibrāhīm ibn Zadān ibn Sinān al-Baṣrī. Ibn al-Naṭṭāḥ was also a scholar of historical traditions and genealogy, as well as a quoter of traditions about the biographies. Among his books there were:

¹⁹⁵ Ṭalḥī probably refers to a kind of paper. This is the word given by Flügel. The Beatty MS gives "Turkish."

¹⁹⁶ See the account of al-Farrā' in Chap. II, sect. 2, near n. 16.

¹⁹⁷ For these battles, see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 211; III, 582, 826; IV, 322. For the Banū Sa'd, see Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 37.

¹⁹⁸ Strange Forms in the Ḥadīth ("Kitāb Gharīb al-Ḥadīth") by 'Ya'qūb ibn Ishāq al-Ḥadramī.

Ancestral Nobilities (Amjād) of the Arabs (or Subtribes [Afkhādh] of the Arabs); Aristocratic Families; Refutation of Abū 'Ubaydah, in connection with his book "Embellishment" (Al-Dibāj); Genealogies of Azd 'Umān;¹⁹⁹ The Slaying of Zayd ibn 'Alī, May There Be Peace for Both of Them [father and son].²⁰⁰

Salmuwayh ibn Ṣāliḥ al-Laythi

He was a quoter of historical traditions and genealogies, among whose books there was The Government, in which he quoted several [authorities].

Al-Sukkari

His name was al-Hasan ibn Sa'id and he was one of the genealogists. Among his books there was Genealogies of the Sons of 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib, a large work.

*Abū al-Faḍl Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd al-Kātib*²⁰¹

He was one of the biographers, among whose books there was Historical Traditions of the Banū al-'Abbās Caliphs, a large [book].

Ibn Abī Thābit al-Zuhri

His name was 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn 'Amrān al-Zuhri, among whose books there was Treaties (Covenants).

'Uyaynah ibn al-Minhāl

He was surnamed Abū al-Minhāl and was one of those who quoted historical traditions, proverbs, and genealogies. Among his books there were:

Nomad Tents; Al-Mubāyanāt (Separations, Points of Difference, Intercedings); Similes (Proverbs); The Mirage.²⁰²

¹⁹⁹ See "al-Azd," Enc. Islam, I, 529.

²⁰⁰ This pious phrase is not found in the Beatty MS.

²⁰¹ The title and short account which follows are given according to the Beatty MS. Flügel gives, as the title, "Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd al-Kātib." "Al-Kātib" probably signifies that he was a government secretary.

²⁰² Omitted by the Beatty MS.

Al-Rāwandī

This man compiled a book, making corrections in it, about the historical traditions of the government. I saw a small part of the manuscript. He used to meet with members of the Rāwandīyah,²⁰³ who were his pupils, [the pupils] obtaining from him information about the government. Among his books was The Government, which contained about two thousand leaves.

Ibn Shabīb

He was surnamed Abū Saʿīd and was ʿAbd Allāh ibn Shabīb al-Rabīʿī of al-Baṣrah. He was a historian, among whose books there was Historical Traditions and Traces. Thaʿlab quoted him.

Al-Ghallābī

He was Abū ʿAbd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Zakarīyāʾ ibn Dīnār al-Ghallābī, one of the scholars who quoted biographies, stories, accounts of raids, and other things. He was both accurate and trustworthy. Among his books there were:

The Slaying of al-Ḥusayn ibn ʿAlī, for Whom May There Be Peace; The Battle of Šiffīn; [The Battle of] the Camel; Al-Ḥarrah;²⁰⁴ The Assassination of the Commander of the Faithful ʿAlī, for Whom Be Peace; The Calamity (Al-Bawās) and ʿAyn al-Wardah;²⁰⁵ The Generous; The Miserly.

A Group about Whom We Have Been Informed by What Is Written in the Handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī

We mention them in what follows; they were:

²⁰⁴ The volcanic plain east of al-Madīnah where ʿAbd Allāh ibn al-Zubayr was defeated A.D. 683; see Hitti, Arabs, p. 191.

²⁰⁵ This title is not clear in the Flügel version, but is well written in the Beatty MS. For Raʾs al-ʿAyn, which is the popular name for ʿAyn al-Wardah, and the calamity which occurred there, see Yāqūt, Geog., II, 731; III, 764; Masʿūdī, V, 216–21. The battle took place in A.D. 685/86.

Khīrāsh ibn Ismāʿīl al-Shaybānī al-ʿIjlī

He was surnamed Abū Waʿr, and was one of the genealogists. Muḥammad ibn Sāʿib al-Kalbī learned from him. Among his books there was The Historical Traditions of the Rabīʿah Tribe and Its Genealogy.

*Ibn Zabālah*²⁰⁶

He was a historian and genealogist, among whose books there were:

Al-Madīnah and Its Historical Traditions; The Poets; Nicknames.

ʿUbayd Allāh ibn Abī Saʿīd al-Warrāq

He was a historian, genealogist, and quoter of poetry. Among his books there were:

Arabic; Faith, Supplication, and Calamities.

Al-Naṣrī

He was al-Ḥasan ibn Maymūn of the Banū Naṣr ibn Quʿayn Tribe, who was quoted by Muḥammad ibn al-Naṭṭāh. Among his books there were:

The Government; Heroic Deeds.

Khālīd ibn Khidāsh ibn ʿAjlān, surnamed Abū al-Haythim

He was a protégé of the family of al-Muḥallab ibn Abī Ṣufrāh. He died during the year two hundred and twenty-three [A.D. 837/38]. Among his books there were:

Al-Azāriqah and the Wars of al-Muḥallab; Historical Traditions of the Family of al-Muḥallab.

Ibn ʿAbid

Nothing more is known about him than this [his name]. Among his books there was The Kings and Historical Traditions of the Nations.

²⁰⁶ The translation follows the Beatty MS for this paragraph. Flügel has the single title Historical Traditions of al-Madīnah instead of the three titles given. Flügel places these three titles in the list of books assigned to ʿUbayd Allāh, in the following paragraph. The Beatty MS omits the paragraph about ʿUbayd Allāh.

Mughīrah

He was Ibn Muḥammad al-Muhallabī, among whose books there was The Marriages of the Family of al-Muhallab.

Ibn 'Ashām al-Kilābī

His name was Ibn ———. He was a contemporary of Ibn Kunāsah at al-Kūfah, sharing with him a knowledge of historical traditions. Among his books there were:

Al-Nasīb (Genealogy, The Relative); Salt (Giving Suck [to form foster relationship]).

Abū al-Mungham

His name was ———. Among his books there was Generations (Categories) of Poets.

Al-Khath'amī

His name was Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh or 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad. Among his books there was Poetry and the Poets.

Manjūf al-Sadūsī

Among his books there was Dismissed (Al-'Azl) (or Al-Ghazl) [a form of poetry].

Among His Descendants [the descendants of Manjūf]

Ghuyūbah al-Sadūsī, whose name was 'Ubayd Allāh ibn al-Faḍl ibn Sufyān ibn Manjūf, surnamed Abū Muḥammad. He was a scholar of historical traditions, who quoted Abū 'Ubaydah, dying some time after the year two hundred [A.D. 815/16]. Among his books there was Heroic Deeds, Genealogies, and Battles (Ayyām).

Al-Walīd ibn Muslim

He was a scholar of biography and historical traditions, among whose books there was The Raids [early wars of Islām].

Al-Fākihi

He was ———. Among his books there was Makkah and Its Historical Traditions during the Pre-Islāmic Period and Islām.

Yazīd ibn Muḥammad al-Muhallabī

He was a poet, mention of whom will be made.²⁰⁷ Among his books there was Al-Muhallab, Traditions about Him and His Offspring.

Abū Ishāq

He was Ismā'il ibn 'Isā al-'Attār of Baghdād, one of the biographers. He was quoted by al-Ḥasan ibn 'Ulwīyah al-Qaṭṭān. Among his books there were:

The Subject [in grammar] (The Beginning); The Zamzam Well; Apostasy; The Invasions; [The Battle of] the Camel; [The Battle of] Šiffīn; Banners (Government Districts); Seditions.

Ibn Abī Ṭayfūr

His name was Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad al-Jurjānī and he was from among the people of Jurjān. Among his books there was Doors of the Caliphs, dealing with the persons whom the caliphs favor, whose counsel they seek, whose intelligence they respect, and upon whom they depend for help.

Ibn Tammām al-Dihqān

He was Abū al-Ḥusayn Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn al-Faḍl ibn Tammām al-Dihqān, who was by origin from al-Kūfah. Among his books there was The Excellencies of al-Kūfah.

Abū al-Ḥassān al-Ziyādī

He was Abū al-Ḥassān al-Ḥasan ibn 'Uthmān al-Ziyādī, who quoted al-Ḥaytham ibn 'Adī and other scholars. He was a virtuous and honest judge, as well as a capable and high-minded genealogist. He himself wrote books and they were also compiled for him. He had an excellent and extensive library, and acquired material from the people. Both he and al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī ibn al-Ja'd died at the same time during the year two hundred and forty-three [A.D. 857/58], when he was eighty-nine years and some months of age. Among his books there were:

The Raids of 'Urwah ibn al-Zubayr; Generations (Categories) of Poets; Nicknames of the Poets; Fathers and Mothers.

²⁰⁷ The name is mentioned in the second paragraph of Chap. III, sect. 3.

Muṣ'ab ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Zubayrī

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muṣ'ab [ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Muṣ'ab] ibn Thābit ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Zubayr ibn al-'Awwām al-Ḥijāzī. He lived at Baghdād. He was reliable in quoting and was a narrator of events. He was a paternal uncle of al-Zubayr ibn Abī Bakr. He was also a poet. His father, 'Abd Allāh, was one of the wickedest of men, as he maligned the descendants of 'Alī, for whom be peace. Records of his ['Abd Allāh] and of Yaḥyā ibn 'Abd Allāh are well known.

Muṣ'ab ibn 'Abd Allāh died on Wednesday, the second of Shawwāl [the tenth Muslim month] during the year two hundred and thirty-three [A.D. 847/48]. He was seventy-six years of age, according to what was recorded by Ibn Abī Khaythamah. Among his books there were:

The Large Genealogy; Genealogy of the Quraysh.

Account of al-Zubayr ibn Bakkār

Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Zubayr ibn Abī Bakr Bakkār ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Muṣ'ab ibn Thābit ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Zubayr ibn al-'Awwām was one of the people of al-Madīnah. He was a scholar of historical traditions, a genealogist, and a poet, who quoted accurately and was endowed with ability. He was the judge of Makkah, but went to Baghdād on numerous occasions, the last time being in the year two hundred and fifty-three [A.D. 867]. Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd said, "He was youthful in his composing of poetry, his virility, courage, and temperance, in spite of old age." The following is a selection of his poetry:²⁰⁸

He is innocent in youth, graced with patience,
Expecting favorable fortunes from fate.
His ideals serve as a basis for his peace of mind,
Insofar as they calm the passion in his breast.
When a thought comes to him,
Bidding him to betray his ideal, he wards it off,
Because his conscience accuses his inclinations
Toward what he felt from that [evil] thought.

²⁰⁸ Both this quotation and the poem which follows are translated freely, so as to make them understandable in English.

While he was serving as the judge of Makkah, al-Zubayr died. He was buried there Sunday evening, nine days before the end of Dhū al-Qa'dah [the eleventh Muslim month] during the year two hundred and fifty-six [A.D. 869/70]. He reached the age of eighty-four. The reason for his death was a fall from his roof, which broke his collar bone and hip. His son Muṣ'ab led the [funeral] prayer, and Muḥammad ibn 'Isā ibn al-Manṣūr attended the funeral. He was buried alongside the tomb of 'Alī ibn 'Isā al-Ḥāshimī in the cemetery of al-Ḥajūn.²⁰⁹ Among his books there were:

The Genealogy and Traditions of the Quraysh; The Unusual in Traditions of Genealogy; Disagreements; Al-Muwaffaqiyyāt, about historical traditions, which he wrote for al-Muwaffaq;²¹⁰ The Disposition of the Prophet, for Whom May There Be Peace; Rarities (Unusual Anecdotes) of the People of al-Madīnah; The Bees; Al-'Aqīq²¹¹ and Its Traditions; Historical Traditions of al-Aws and al-Khazraj;²¹² The Deputation of al-Nu'mān to Chosroes [al-Kisrā];²¹³ Attack of Kuthayyir on the Poets; Historical Traditions of the Arabs and Their Wars;²¹⁴ Historical Traditions of Ibn Mayyādah.

²¹⁰ Al-Muwaffaq was the brother of three caliphs, so that it was not surprising for a book to be named for him. This title and a number of others which follow have been translated according to the Beatty MS and Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (4), 219, as they seem to be more accurate than the Flügel edition.

²¹¹ Probably referring to the watered valley near al-Madīnah, described in Yāqūt, Geog., III, 700.

See Iṣbahānī, Aghānī, Part XX, p. 134; Rawlinson, Seventh Great Oriental Monarchy, pp. 493-505.

²¹⁴ This title and the one following it are lacking in the Beatty MS, but are included in the Flügel version.

Naming of the Persons Who Were Quoted by al-Zubayr, Taken from What Was Written in the Handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī²¹⁹

He quoted his uncle Muṣ'ab ibn 'Abd Allāh [al-Zubayr], Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan al-Makhlūmī, Muḥammad ibn al-Ḍaḥḥāk ibn 'Uthmān, Muslim ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Muslim ibn Jundab, Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mundhir, Yaḥyā ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Thawbān, 'Abd al-Malik ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz, Ya'qūb ibn Ishāq al-Rabā'i, 'Uthmān ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān, Bakkār ibn Rabāh, Maslamah ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Hishām al-Makhlūmī,²²⁰ 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn 'Abd Allāh al——, Muḥammad ibn Ismā'īl ibn Ibrāhīm ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd, Ḥumayd ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Zuhri, 'Abd al-Jabbār ibn Sa'īd ibn Sulaymān ibn Nawfal ibn Musāhiq, Mu'min ibn 'Umar ibn Aflah, 'Alī ibn al-Mughīrah [al-Athram], 'Abd Allāh ibn Nāfa' ibn Thābit.

Account of al-Jahmī

Abū 'Abd Allāh Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Ḥumayd ibn Sulaymān ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Jahm ibn Ḥudhayfah al-'Adawī was a member of the Banū 'Adī ibn Ka'b Tribe. He was called al-Jahmī because of his descent from his ancestor Abū al-Jahm ibn Ḥudhayfah. He lived in al-Ḥijāz but came to al-'Irāq, where he studied. He was cultured, a quoter [of other authorities], a poet, and a singer.²²¹ He recorded genealogy and [tribal] faults, gaining the respect of the public and writing books about these things.

Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd said:

Sawwār ibn Abī Sharā'ah related, "When there was ill feeling between him [al-Jahmī] and groups of the 'Umar and 'Uthmān factions, he recalled

²¹⁷ Two famous poets who were lovers.

²¹⁸ The Flügel text adds the name Ash'ath, probably ibn Qays. For al-Majnūn, see Qays ibn al-Mulawwah. It has not been possible to identify which al-Qārī this is.

²¹⁹ In the Arabic original the names are separated by the word "and."

²²⁰ This name and that of Muḥammad ibn Ismā'īl, the second name following, are corrected by marginal notes in the Beatty MS.

²²¹ This follows the Beatty MS in giving "singer" (mughannī). Flügel and Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (2), 30, give variations which do not seem accurate.

most infamous things about their ancestors. Then when some of the family of Hāshim spoke to him about this matter, he mentioned al-'Abbās with great severity. When [this] information about him was brought to [the Caliph] al-Mutawakkil, he ordered him beaten with a hundred strokes.²²² Ibrāhīm ibn Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm gave him the strokes. When the beating was ended he [al-Jahmī] said about it:

Wounds heal and hair springs up,
And for every misfortune there is recovery from calamity.
But baseness is on the robes of one who casts down his slave,
For as long as there are leaves on a tree."²²³

Among his books there were:

Genealogies and Historical Traditions of the Quraysh; Those Free from Faults; Faults; Observations on the Refutation of the Shu'ūbiyah; The Virtues of Muḍar.

Al-Azraqī

His name was Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Walid ibn 'Uqbah ibn al-Azraq. [His ancestor, al-Azraq] was named 'Uthmān ibn al-Ḥārith ibn Abī Shimr ibn 'Umar ibn 'Awf ibn al-Ḥārith ibn Rabi'ah ibn Ḥārithah ibn al-Ḥārith ibn Tha'labah al-'Anqā' ibn Ḥiqbah ibn 'Amr ibn 'Āmir Muzayqiyā'. This has been taken from what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī.

He was one of the authorities for historical traditions and biography. Among his books there was Makkah, Its Historical Traditions, Mountains, and Valleys, a large book.

²²² To understand this anecdote, it is necessary to know something about the history. Al-Mutawakkil was a caliph of the 'Abbāsid dynasty, who ruled A.D. 847-861. Members of his dynasty, who belonged to the Sunnī party, honored 'Umar and 'Uthmān, the second and third caliphs. They also based their right to rule on their descent from the Prophet's uncle, al-'Abbās, and his great-grandfather, Hāshim; see Hitti, Arabs, pp. 189, 289. The 'Abbāsid caliphs were threatened by the members of the opposition or Shī'ī party, who felt that the caliphs of the 'Abbāsid dynasty were illegal impostors and that only direct descendants of the Prophet's son-in-law, 'Alī, had the divine right to be the caliph. In view of these facts it is easy to understand why al-Mutawakkil felt that al-Jahmī was disloyal to the ruling caliphs when he denounced 'Umar, 'Uthmān, Hāshim, and al-'Abbās.

²²³ This is translated very freely, so as to make sense. The Arabic word translated as "casts down" is munbaṭṭih.

Account of 'Umar ibn Shabbah

The names of the persons who were quoted by 'Umar: He quoted Abū 'Āṣim al-Nabīl, Muḥammad ibn Sallām al-Jumāhī, Hārūn ibn 'Abd Allāh, and Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mundhir.²²⁴

He was Abū Zayd 'Umar ibn Shabbah ibn 'Ubayd ibn Rayṭah. The name of Shabbah was Zayd, but he was surnamed Abū Mu'adh. 'Umar related that he was called "Ay Shabbah" because his mother used to bounce him up and down, saying,

O ay, growing boy (shabb), he lives to creep;
Aged man, he ambles along.²²⁵

'Umar was from al-Baṣrah, a protégé of the Banū Numayr Tribe, a poet, and an authority for historical traditions and the law. He was accurate in his speech; he did not allow error to enter into what he quoted. There is from his poetry:

She was saying, "No lord (sayyid) remains among the people."
But I replied "Nay, for there is 'Abd al-Raḥīm ibn Ja'far."²²⁶

His son was Abū Ṭāhir Aḥmad ibn 'Umar ibn Shabbah, who was a poet, clever and eloquent, and also a quoter [of other authorities]. He died some ten years after his father did. From the poetry of Abū Ṭāhir there is:

I looked but beheld not among the soldiers
Misfortunes such as mine and Abū Ja'far's.
People go early to the feast,
Adorned more beautifully than the light.
But we go empty-handed,
Often from a home of misery,
To sit in misfortune and seclusion from the people,
Looking into a book.²²⁷

²²⁴ These names are inserted in the Beatty MS. As these scholars were a generation older than 'Umar, they were probably his teachers.

²²⁵ The Beatty MS starts the quotation with yā' yāy wa-shabba(n) wa-'ash, whereas Flügel gives bābā wa-shabba(n) wa-'asha(n). See also Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (6), 48.

²²⁶ This name is not included in the Biog. Index; it is perhaps that of a hero of tribal poetry who cannot be identified.

'Umar ibn Shabbah died at Samarrā on Monday, six days before the end of Jumādā al-Ākhirah [the sixth month of the Muslim year] during the year two hundred and sixty-two [A.D. 876], after reaching the age of ninety. His books went to Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Yaḥyā, who purchased them from Abū Ṭāhir [Aḥmad] ibn 'Umar ibn Shabbah. Among his books there were:

Al-Kūfah; Al-Baṣrah; Al-Madīnah; Makkah; Chiefs (Governors, Umarā') of al-Kūfah; Chiefs of al-Baṣrah; Chiefs of al-Madīnah; Chiefs of Makkah; The Sultan; Assassination of 'Uthmān [the third caliph]; Secretaries (Scribes); Poetry and the Poets; Songs; History; Traditions about [the Caliph] al-Manṣūr; Muḥammad and Ibrāhīm, the Two Sons of 'Abd Allāh ibn Ḥasan; Poems of the Shurāt (Shurāh); Genealogy; Historical Traditions of the Banū Numayr Tribe;²²⁸ What People Find Difficult to Understand in the Qur'ān; Obtaining Help from Poetry and What Comes in Languages (Vernaculars); Admiration of Grammar—Who among the Grammarians Made Errors.

Al-Balādhurī

He was Abū Ja'far Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā ibn Jābir al-Balādhurī, said to have been surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan. He was one of the people of Baghdād, but his grandfather Jābir was the secretary of al-Khaṣīb, the master of Egypt. He was a poet and a quoter [of authorities]. As he deteriorated at the end of his life, he was placed in the Bīmāristān,²²⁹ where he died. The reason for his deterioration²³⁰ was that he unwittingly drank the juice of the cashew nut,²³¹ so that there befell him what befell him.

He used to write a great deal of satire, and once he picked on Wahb ibn Sulaymān when he broke wind. The breaking wind was in the presence of 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Yaḥyā ibn Khāqān, so he made fun of him, the following being part of what he said about it:

Oh wind, thou wert thought to be his thunder.
Fastidious was his effort to conceal it.

²²⁸ For the Banū Numayr, see "Numair," Enc. Islam, III, 951.

²²⁹ From the Persian bīmār ("sick") and stān ("place"). This was the name of the medieval Arab hospital.

²³⁰ This might be sūs or sawas, terms used to describe the deterioration caused by certain parasites and poisons.

²³¹ The cashew nut, called balādhur in Arabic, has a juice which has evil effects on the body.

For thou, Wahb, first passed it out,
 After which the brother of Sa'īd prayed.
 But Allāh disclosed what they concealed,
 For so is it with all who feed the anus.

Among his books there were:

The small book, Countries;²³² the large book, Countries, which he did not finish; Historical Traditions and Genealogies;²³³ The Testament of Ardashīr, which he translated as poetry, for he was one of the translators from Persian into the Arabic tongue.²³⁴

Al-Talhī

He was Abū Ishāq Ṭalḥah ibn 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Ismā'īl ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad ibn Ṭalḥah ibn 'Ubayd Allāh al-Taymī, one of the people of al-Baṣrah and a court companion of [the Prince] al-Muwaffaq. He was a quoter [of authorities] and a scholar of historical traditions, who died Sunday evening, in the middle of Dhū al-Ḥijjah [the last month of the Muslim year] during the year two hundred and seventy-one [A.D. 884/85]. Among his books there were:

The Enslaved (Those Conquered by Love); Jewels of Historical Tradition.

Ibn al-Azhar

Ja'far ibn Abī Muḥammad ibn al-Azhar ibn 'Isā, the historian, was one of the scholars of historical traditions. His birth was during the year two hundred [A.D. 815/16] and he died during the year two hundred and seventy-nine [A.D. 892/93] at the age of seventy-nine.

He attended the lectures of Ibn al-A'rābī and other scholars. Among his books there was History, one of the good books.

Muḥammad ibn Sallām

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Sallām al-Jumāḥī was one of the historical traditionalists and quoters [of authorities]. Among his books there were:

²³² Today he is known for this book, Futūḥ al-Buldān; see Bibliography.

²³⁴ Firdawsi, Shahnama, IV, 286, contains this testament in the form of Persian poetry.

The Excellent, about the success of historical traditions and poems; Aristocratic Families of the Arabs; The Generations (Categories) of the Poets of the Pre-Islāmic Period; The Generations (Categories) of Islāmic Poets; Milkers (or Dealers [Al-Jallāb] or Deceivers [Al-Khallāb]) and the Hire of Horses.

Abū Khalīfah al-Faḍl

Abū Khalīfah al-Faḍl ibn al-Ḥubāb ibn Muḥammad ibn Shu'ayb ibn Ṣakhr al-Jumāḥī of al-Baṣrah, from the Banū Jumāḥ Tribe, was blind, but served as the judge of al-Baṣrah. His quotations dealt with historical traditions, poetry, and genealogy. He quoted Muḥammad ibn Sallām al-Jumāḥī. I have seen what was written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī [stating] that Abū Khalīfah died the night of Sunday, the thirteenth night of the month of Rabī' al-Awwal [the third Muslim month] during the year three hundred and five [A.D. 917/18]. He was buried at his home on Sunday. Among his books there were:

Generations (Categories) of the Poets of the Pre-Islāmic Period; The Horsemen.²³⁵

Among the Scholars of Historical Traditions

Abū al-'Abbās 'Abd Allāh ibn Ishāq ibn Sallām al-Makārī was an authority for the strange forms in the law, past traditions, and poetry. He was a reliable scholar and a poet, from whose poetry there is the following [example]:

Oh, vengeance of Allāh, wreaked in the palace of a king,
 Who betters neither the Faith nor the world by a carat's weight,
 No affair being carried out among his subjects,
 Until he consults the daughter of Buqrāt.²³⁶

²³⁵ These two titles are omitted in the Beatty MS, but included by the Flügel text.

²³⁶ This translation follows the Beatty MS, which is more correct and complete than the Flügel edition. A qirāt ("carat") was a weight equal to four grains of the carob tree. The daughter of Buqrāt, Qabīḥah, was a favorite of al-Mutawakkil (caliph A.D. 847-61). Her father was a Greek, therefore his name was very likely Hippocrates (Buqrāt). For accounts of this famous concubine, see Ishbahānī, Aghānī, Part XIX, p. 132 bottom; Mas 'ūdī, VII, 270-71; Ṭabarī, Annales, Part III, pp. 1395, 1456, 1919; Taghrī-Birdī, Part III, pp. 22-25, 38 l. 12; Kaḥḥālāh, A'lām al-Nisā', Part IV, p. 184.

The reference is to Qabīlah, the mother of al-Mu'tazz. Among his books there was Historical Traditions, Genealogies, and Biography. I have seen part of it, but I have not seen a complete copy.

Ibn al-Ash'ath

He was 'Azīz ibn al-Faḍl ibn Fuḍālah ibn Mikhrāq ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Mikhrāq. Among his books there was Description of the Mountains and Valleys at Makkah, with Their Names and What Is behind Them.²³⁷

Ibn Abī Shaykh

His name was Sulaymān ———, his surname being Abū Ayyūb. He was a historian and quoter [of authorities], who came in touch with important people. The students of historical traditions derived information from him. Among his books there was Historical Traditions That Are Reported, which I have seen.

Wakī' al-Qāḍī (the Judge)

He was Abū Muḥammad ibn Khalaf ibn Ḥayyān ibn Ṣadaqah, known as Wakī' al-Qāḍī. He was keen about all forms of literary pursuits and served as judge in several districts. To start with, however, he was secretary to Abū 'Umar²³⁸ Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf ibn Ya'qūb the judge. Among his books there were:

Accounts of the Judges, Their History, and Their Judgments; The Noble (Al-Sharīf), which followed the flow of thought of "Al-Ma'ārīf" by Ibn Qutaybah; Al-Anwā'; Raiding and Historical Traditions;²³⁹ The Traveler; The Way, also known as The Regions, which included accounts of the countries and the routes of the roads—he did not finish it; Exchange, Cash, and Coinage; Investigation.

²³⁷ The Flügel text gives a different title, but this translation of the Beatty MS seems to be correct.

²³⁸ Different authorities also call him Abū 'Amr; Flügel places Abū 'Umar after Ya'qūb.

Abū al-Ḥasan al-Nassābah

His name is Muḥammad ibn al-Qāsim al-Tamīmī and he is one of the people of al-Baṣrah. He is a genealogist, still living in our own time. Among his books there are:

The Historical Traditions and Genealogies of Persia; Genealogies and Historical Traditions; History of the Courses of the Nations;²⁴⁰ Disputes between the Tribes and Chiefs and the Clans, with the Judgments of the Rulers in Connection with Them.

Al-Ushnānī, the Judge

He was Abū al-Ḥusayn 'Umar ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Mālik al-Ushnānī. Among his books there were:

The Slaying of Zayd ibn 'Alī, for Both of Whom [father and son] May There Be Peace; Horses; The Virtues of the Commander of the Faithful, 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib;²⁴¹ The Slaying of al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī, for Both of Whom [father and son] May There Be Peace.

Abū al-Ḥusayn ibn Abī 'Umar Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf

Among his books there were:

The Strange in the Ḥadīth, which he did not finish;²⁴² Relief after Adversity.

Abū al-Faraj al-Iṣbahānī²⁴³

He was 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Haytham al-Qurashī, a descendant of Hishām ibn 'Abd al-Malik, as well as a poet, author, and man of letters. He quoted some authorities, and most of his productions were compositions based on books written in well-known handwritings and on works from other reliable sources. He died some time after the year three hundred and sixty [A.D. 970/71]. Among his books there were:

²⁴⁰ This title is lacking in the Flügel text and the one following is not found in the Beatty MS.

²⁴¹ This and the following title are not in the Beatty MS.

²⁴² The Flügel text adds the notation, "a large [book]."

²⁴³ The Beatty MS calls him ibn al-Iṣbahānī. In the Bibliography his books are listed under Iṣbahānī, although he is known by Arabic scholars as Abū al-Faraj.

Al-Aghānī (Songs), a large book about five thousand leaves in length;²⁴⁴ Summary of "Al-Aghānī"; Poems of the Handmaids and Slave Girls; Men and Women Dealing with Drink;²⁴⁵ Places of Abode; Description of Hārūn;²⁴⁶ Assassinations of Members of the Family of Abū Ṭālib;²⁴⁷ Exalting Dhū al-Ḥijjah [the last Muslim month and time of the pilgrimage]; Historical Traditions and Rare Anecdotes; The Etiquette of Listening; Accounts of Uninvited Guests; The Culture of Foreigners Who Are Well Bred and Refined; Compendium of Reminiscences and Historical Traditions; Difference and Measures (Al-Farq wa-al-Mi'yār), which is an epistle in connection with Hārūn ibn ['Alī ibn] al-Munajjim about al-awghār and al-aḥrār;²⁴⁸ The Genealogy of the Banū 'Abd Shams;²⁴⁹ The Slaves.

Al-Jalūdi

He was Abū Aḥmad 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Yaḥyā al-Jalūdi, one of the people of al-Baṣrah. He was a scholar of historical traditions and biography, also quoting [other authorities]. He died some time after three hundred and thirty [A.D. 941/42]. Among his books there were:

Account of Khālīd ibn Saḥwān; Account of al-'Ajjāj and Ru'bah ibn al-'Ajjāj; Compendium of the [Qur'anic] Readings of the Commander of the Faithful, 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib.²⁵⁰

²⁴⁵ For this and following titles, cf. Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (5), 151-52.

²⁴⁶ Almost certainly Hārūn al-Rashīd.

²⁵⁰ This title is not found in the Beatty MS.

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate, for nought befalls me apart from Allāh comprising accounts of the kings, secretaries, preachers, letter writers, tax administrators, and public recorders,¹ with the names of their books.

The Second Section of the Third Chapter

Account of Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mahdī

Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mahdī ibn al-Manṣūr ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abbās ibn 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib was the first genius among the Banū al-'Abbās and the children of the caliphs to become prominent. He wrote correspondence and poetry, also composing books. His mother, Shiklah, originated from Ṭabaristān and was said to have been the daughter of the king of Ṭabaristān.

He was a Negro, blackest² of blacks, with a large body and lofty character. Never before him was there seen a more eloquent stylist or greater poet among the sons of the caliphs. He also had a talent for singing, in which he surpassed everyone else, so that Iṣḥāq [al-Mawṣilī] and Ibrāhīm [al-Mawṣilī] after him used to learn from him and summon before him the singers, to be judged for their performances.³ His birth was ———. Among his books there were:

² The Beatty MS gives ḥanīk, which must be an error, meant to be ḥālik ("very black").

The Training of Ibrāhīm; Cooked Food; Perfume (Al-Ṭīb) (or Pleasant [Al-Ṭayyib]); Singing.⁴

Al-Ma'mūn

He was 'Abd Allāh ibn Hārūn ibn al-Mahdī ibn al-Manṣūr ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn al-'Abbās ibn 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib, the greatest authority among the caliphs⁵ for the law and theology. He [also] was as good as⁶ his brother Muḥammad ibn Zubaydah [al-Amīn] in eloquence of literary style. We are too rich in famed traditions concerning him to go into detail when mentioning him. Among his books there were:

Answers to the Questions of the King of the Burghar⁷ Addressed to Him [al-Ma'mūn] about Islām and the Unity (Theology); his epistle, Proofs of the Virtues of the Caliphs, since the Time of the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace; his epistle, Signs of Prophethood.⁸

Ibn al-Mu'tazz

He was 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Mu'tazz ibn al-Mutawakkil ibn al-Mu'taṣim ibn al-Rashīd ibn al-Mahdī, one of the men of letters and poets of his period. He emulated the Arabian stylists, learning from them. He met grammarians and historical traditionalists. He heard much and was prolific in making quotations. His life also is too well known to require details. He wrote many books, among which there were:

Al-Badī' (The Discoverer) [also, a kind of rhetoric]; Flowers and Gardens; Beasts of Prey and Hunting; Plagiarisms; Poems of the Kings; Literary Pursuits; Adornments (Distinguishing Features) of Historical Traditions; Correspondence of the Brothers about Poetry (in Poetry);⁹ Generations (Categories) of Poets; The Collection, about singing; his poem in the rajaz meter about the evil of drinking in the morning.

⁴ Omitted in the Beatty MS. The Ibrāhīm referred to in the first title was probably al-Mawṣilī, but it might also have been Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mahdī.

⁵ The Beatty MS has "jurists," which may be more correct than Flügel's word, "caliphs."

⁶ "As good as" (dūn) can also have the meaning "worse than."

⁷ The Burghar were probably the Bulgarians; see Mas'ūdī, II, 14; Yāqūt, Geog., I, 568.

⁸ Omitted in the Beatty MS. An epistle might be a letter or essay.

⁹ This title and the three which follow are not in the Beatty MS.

Abū Dulaf

Abū Dulaf al-Qāsim ibn 'Isā ibn Ma'qil ibn Idrīs al-'Ijlī was a lord and emir¹⁰ of his people, one of the illustrious men of letters and brilliant poets, who also composed songs. His life is famous. Among his books there were:

Falcons and Hunting; Purity of Soul (Al-Nazh) (or Amusements [Al-Nuzah]); Weapons;¹¹ Policies of the Kings.

Al-Faṭḥ ibn Khāqān

He was al-Faṭḥ ibn Khāqān ibn Aḥmad, the most extremely brilliant, intelligent, and cultured person among the sons of the kings. [The Caliph] Al-Mutawakkil adopted him as a brother, preferring him to all of his children and relatives. He had a library which 'Alī ibn Yahyā the astrologer collected for him and which was as great in quantity and quality as any other ever seen. The masters of literary style among the Arabians and the scholars of al-Kūfah and al-Baṣrah used to frequent his house.

Abū Hifṣān said:

I have never seen or heard of anyone who loved books and studies more than three men: al-Jāḥiẓ, al-Faṭḥ ibn Khāqān, and Ismā'il ibn Ishāq, the judge. Whenever a book came into the hand of al-Jāḥiẓ he read through it, wherever he happened to be. He even used to rent the shops of al-warrāqūn, remaining in them for study. As for al-Faṭḥ ibn Khāqān, he used to attend the audiences of al-Mutawakkil, but if for any reason he wished to leave the audience, he used to take out a book from his sleeve or shoe and read it away from the audience of al-Mutawakkil, so that this became a habit, even in the latrine.¹² Then with regards to Ismā'il ibn Ishāq, I never visited him without seeing him looking into a book, or rummaging through books, or dusting them.

Al-Faṭḥ died during the evening when al-Mutawakkil was assassinated, being killed with swords along with him. Among his books there were:

¹⁰ He was a man of noble lineage, a general, and a governor.

¹¹ This title and the one which follows are not in the Beatty MS.

The Garden, which was attributed to him, though the man who really wrote it for him was a person known as Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Rabbih, with the nickname of "Mule's Head"; The Hunt and the Prey; The Disagreement of Kings;¹³ The Garden and the Flowers.

The Family of Ṭāhir

'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir

He was a poet, writer of epistles, and master of literary style, as was his father, Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn, also. Both of them were authors of collections of letters. The correspondence of Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn with al-Ma'mūn, at the time of his [Ṭāhir's] entry into Baghdād, is famous and of an excellent quality.¹⁴

Manṣūr ibn Ṭalhah ibn Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn

[His uncle] 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir called him the savant of the Ṭāhir family, admiring him for all his wonderful traits. He was the governor of Marw (Merv), Āmul, Zamm, and Khwārizm.¹⁵ He also wrote some famous books on philosophy, among which there was The Agreeable in Music, after reading which al-Kindī said, "It is as agreeable as its author named it." There were also among his books:

Manifest (Al-Ibānah), about the actions of the heavens; Existence; his epistle, Numbers and the Reckoned; Guidance and Deduction.

'Ubayd Allāh ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir

He was a poet, writer of epistles, and governor, who succeeded Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir¹⁶ as chief of the guard at ¹³ This title and the one following are not in the Beatty MS.

¹⁵ For these districts, see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 68; II, 480-946; IV, 507. The Flügel edition omits Zamm.

¹⁶ The translation follows Flügel. The Beatty MS has Muḥammad ibn Ṭāhir ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir. In the sentence which follows, sayyid refers to his position as chief of the Kudā' Tribe; see Khallikān, II, 79-80; Durayd, Geneal., p. 244; "Ṭāhirids," Enc. Islam, IV, 614.

Baghdād. He was also a chief (sayyid), with whom ended the supremacy of his family, for he was the last of them to die as a chief. Among his books there were:

The Guide, about the selection of poetry; his epistle about the policies of the kings; his missives to 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Mu'tazz; Elegance and Eloquence [of literary style].

The Secretaries and the Sons of Their Kind

Naming of the secretaries who wrote missives and of each one of them who compiled a book as an anthology of his epistles.¹⁷

'Abd al-Ḥamīd ibn Yahyā

He was the secretary of [the Caliph] Marwān ibn Muḥammad, but before that he was an instructor of boys, moving about among the towns. The writers of correspondence learned from him, adhering to his method. It was he who facilitated the use of literary style for correspondence. He was unique in his time, one of the people of Syria from the city of ———. There is a collection of about a thousand leaves from his epistles.

Ghaylān Abū Marwān

His name was ———. I deal with him in the discourse about the theologians in the passage about al-Murjī'ah.¹⁸ There is a collection of about two thousand leaves of his epistles.

Sālim

He was surnamed Abū al-'Alā' and was the secretary of [the Caliph] Hishām ibn 'Abd al-Malik. He was related to 'Abd al-Ḥamīd by marriage and was also one of the masters of literary style and eloquence. He made a translation from the Epistle of Aristotle to Alexander, or else it was translated for him and he made corrections.¹⁹ There is a collection of about one hundred leaves of his epistles.

¹⁷ The word kātib (pl. kuttāb) is usually translated "scribe," but here evidently refers to a government secretary. The secretary was as a rule trained in the use of flowery language in a government department. The viziers were often chosen from among the secretaries. See Flügel, in ZDMG, XIII (1859), 587; "Kātib," Enc. Islam, II, 819; also Grunebaum, Islam: Essays, p. 69. Qalqashāndī, Ṣubḥ al-A'shā, Part I, deals with the technical knowledge required by a secretary. Part II deals with the rhetoric and literary perfection required, and the other parts give examples of letters. See also Rifā'i, Asr al-Ma'mūn. For a good description of the government departments in which the secretaries worked, and for the development of prose, see Mez, Renaissance of Islam, pp. 76-81, 242-54.

¹⁸ Ghaylān does not seem to be mentioned again in connection with al-Murjī'ah.

‘Abd al-Wahhāb ibn ‘Alī

He served as secretary to Bilāl ibn Abī Burdah ibn Abī Mūsā al-Ash‘arī and was one of the masters of eloquence and style, though his correspondence was not extensive.

Khālīd ibn Rabī‘ah al-Ifriqī

He was a writer of official letters, who had an eloquent literary style, and was connected with both dynasties [Umayyad and ‘Abbāsīd]. His collection of epistles was about two hundred leaves in length.

Yahyā and Muḥammad, the Two Sons of Ziyād, [Who Were Called] Hārithīs

They were descendants of al-Hārith ibn Ka‘b. Both of them were poets, writers of official letters, and masters of eloquent literary style. The epistles of both of them are in collections.

Jabal ibn Yazīd

He was the secretary of ‘Umarah ibn Ḥamzah and he translated some of the works of eloquent and skilled writers.

‘Umarah ibn Ḥamzah

He was the secretary of [the Caliph] Abū Ja‘far al-Manṣūr and also his protégé. He was proud, vain, generous, eloquent, and a master of literary style, though blind in one eye. Abū Ja‘far [al-Manṣūr] and al-Mahdī advanced him, overlooking his character, because of his excellence, his eloquent literary style, and his obligation to duty. Thus he administered important affairs for both of them. There is a collection of his correspondence, which includes the epistle on the army (al-khamīs) drawn up for the Banū al-‘Abbās [the ‘Abbāsīds].

¹⁹ The Epistle of Aristotle evidently refers to either an entire composition ascribed to Aristotle and entitled Rhetoric of Alexander, or else to the dedicatory epistle to Alexander the Great at the beginning of this composition; see “Aristotle,” Enc. Brit., II, 515.

Muḥammad ibn Ḥujr ibn Sulaymān

Ḥujr was one of the people of Ḥarrān. He [Muḥammad] was a master of literary style. He wrote to the governors of Armenia and Syria in a personal way.²⁰ He also wrote well-known books.

He was the secretary of al-‘Abbās ibn Muḥammad ibn ‘Alī ibn ‘Abd Allāh, and was a master of eloquent literary style and a writer of official correspondence. He came from al-Anbār, and his letters form a collection.²¹

Account of ‘Abd Allāh ibn al-Muqaffa’

His name in Persian was Ruzbah,²² but he was called ‘Abd Allāh ibn al-Muqaffa’, though before he became a Muslim he was nicknamed Abū ‘Amr. When he embraced Islām he was surnamed Abū Muḥammad. Al-Muqaffa’ ibn Mubārak was shriveled (muqaffa’) because al-Hajjāj ibn Yūsuf dealt him such a hard blow that his hand shriveled up. This was at al-Baṣrah, [and was brought about] because of the properties which he took from the belongings of the sultan.²³

His origin was from Ḥawz,²⁴ a city of the regions of Persia. At first he was secretary to Dā‘ūd ibn ‘Umar ibn Hubayrah, later serving ‘Isā ibn ‘Alī at Karmān. He was most accomplished as a master of literary style and eloquence, as well as being an author, poet, and stylist. It was he who composed the conditions addressed to [the Caliph] al-Manṣūr on behalf of ‘Abd Allāh ibn ‘Alī, making them so harsh and aggressive that Abū Ja‘far [al-Manṣūr] did not forget them. So when Sufyān ibn Mu‘āwiyah killed him by burning him in a fire, al-Manṣūr approved the action, not demanding revenge or blood compensation.

²⁰ This probably means either that he carried on a personal correspondence with these governors, independently of the government secretariat, or else that he served in a personal capacity as the secretary of these governors.

²¹ Flügel ascribes this last paragraph to an unnamed person. The Beatty MS, followed here, includes it with the account of Muḥammad ibn Ḥujr. Ṭabarī, Annales, Part III, pp. 125, 280, mentions that al-‘Abbās ibn Muḥammad was in Armenia and Syria.

²² This seems to be from the Persian, roz bih (“happy days”).

²³ These accounts of al-Muqaffa’ and his son should be compared with the interesting article in Khallikān, I, 431.

²⁴ For this city, see Yāqūt, Geog., II, 359.

He was one of those who translated from the Persian tongue into Arabic, as he was skilled and eloquent in both languages. He translated a number of Persian books, among which there were:

Book of Kings (Khudāy Nāmah), about biography;²⁵ Ayīn Nāmah, about al-ayīn (ordinances, customs);²⁶ Kalilah wa-Dimnah; Mazdak;²⁷ The Crown, about the life of Anūshirwān [Chosroes I]; the large book, Literary Pursuits;²⁸ the small book, Literary Pursuits; Al-Yatimah, about the epistles;²⁹ his epistles; Compendium of "Kalilah wa-Dimnah"; his epistles about al-Ṣaḥābah.³⁰

Account of Abān al-Lāhiqī

He was Abān ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd ibn Lāhiq ibn 'Ufayr al-Raqāshī, who along with a group of his people wrote poetry. He himself had a special position in the group, because he translated prose books into poetic couplets (muzdawaj). Among the books which he translated there were:

Kalilah wa-Dimnah; The Biography of Ardashīr; The Biography of Anūshirwān; Bilawhar wa-Būdāsāf;³¹ Epistles;³² Clemency of India (Ḥilm al-Hind) (or Dream of India [Ḥulm al-Hind]).

Qudāmah ibn Yazīd

He was the secretary of 'Abd al-Malik ibn Ṣālih, an eloquent writer and a master of literary style. He served 'Abd al-Malik until the time of [Hārūn] al-Rashīd, when he was killed by the blow of an ax which struck his neck. Among his books there was Epistles.

²⁵ See Hajjī Khalīfah, Part IV, p. 13; Browne, Literary History of Persia, I, 107, 123.

²⁶ This could be "Athīn Nāmah ("The Book of Aristocracy"), about those with noble lineage." See Glossary for this famous book.

²⁷ Mazdak was the reform prophet killed by Chosroes I, A.D. 531.

²⁹ Here al-yatimah probably means "the unique."

³⁰ The last two titles are not in the Flügel text. Al-Ṣaḥābah probably refers to the Prophet's Companions, but perhaps to something in Persian history.

³¹ See Glossary for this famous book.

³² This title and that following are not in the Beatty MS.

Al-Ḥarīr ibn al-Ṣarīḥ

He was the secretary of *Thumāmah*³³ and was surnamed Abū Ḥāshim. He was one of the people of Ḥādir Tayy. He was a master of literary style and writer of correspondence. He wrote Epistles, which I have seen, and which contains about one hundred leaves.

Account of 'Alī ibn 'Ubaydah al-Rayḥānī

He was a master of elegant writing and style, attached in a special way to [the Caliph] al-Ma'mūn. In his literary works and compositions he followed the method of philosophy (al-hikmah), and was accused of unbelief. He was a distinguished secretary. About him and about al-Ma'mūn anecdotes were told.

One of them was that one time, while he was with al-Ma'mūn, one of the pages scratched a second one. When al-Ma'mūn saw them, he desired to know whether or not 'Alī had also observed them. So he said to him, "Did you see?" while he made a gesture to 'Alī with his hand, separating his fingers so as to indicate five, for "five" (khamisah) can be changed to "he scratched him" (khamashaha). There were other anecdotes about brightness and wit in addition to this one. 'Alī ibn 'Ubaydah died ———. Among his books there were:

The Preserved (Protected); Al-Barzakh;³⁴ Searching for Love; The Party Addressed [second person in grammar]; New (Acquired) Property (Al-Tārif);³⁵ Al-Ḥāshimī;³⁶ Meaning;³⁷ Al-Khisāl (Properties, Customs); Al-Nāsi [one who defers the pilgrimage];³⁸ The Acrostic (Al-Muwashshah); Union and Alliance; The Ancestor (Al-Jadd) (or Zeal

³³ The Flügel text has Qumāmah, but Thumāmah, in the Beatty MS, seems to be correct. Ḥādir Tayy, in the next sentence, was a place near to Damascus; see Yāqūt, Geog., II, 186, l. 15; III, 863 l. 7.

³⁶ This title might refer to one of the several al-Ḥāshimī's listed in the Biog. Index.

³⁷ This title is used for commentaries on poetry and the Qur'ān.

³⁸ This may be a proper name; see Biog. Index.

[Al-Jidd]); The Halter; The Free (Al-Mutakhallī); Patience; Brightness and Splendor; Cleverness of the Maiden (Muhr Azād) of Gustasb;³⁹ Kai Luhrāsp the King;⁴⁰ Surfaces of the Earth; The Brothers; Rūshanā Yadak;⁴¹ Description of Heaven; Categories; Al-Washij (The Ash Tree, Intermixture of Relationship); Cords and Ropes; The Training of Juwashtar;⁴² Explanation of Love and Description of Brotherhood; The Peacock; The Grieving;⁴³ The Disposition of Hārūn.

Categories; The Preacher (Al-Khaṭīb); The Rising Star (Al-Nājīm); Description of Persia; Structure (Al-Binyah);⁴⁴ The Confused (Difficult to Solve); The Virtues of Ishāq; Description of Death; Hearing and Sight; Despondency and Hope; Description of the 'Ulamā' [legal and religious authorities]; The Son of the King; The Hoped For and Feared; Wurūd and Wadūd, the Dog Trainers (al-Mukallibayn);⁴⁵ Description of the Ant and the Gnat; Punishments;⁴⁶ Praise of Wine; The Camel; Pulpit Sermons; Marriage; Species; Qualities; The Testing of Providence; The Bountiful; The Sessions.⁴⁷

Account of Sahl ibn Hārūn

He was Sahl ibn Hārūn ibn Raḥyūnī of Dastumīsān,⁴⁸ who after going to al-Baṣrah became dedicated to the service of [the Caliph] al-Ma'mūn. He was director of Khizānat al-Ḥikmah [the royal library], as well as a scholar, a master of literary style, and a poet. He was Persian by origin, one of the Shu'ūbiyah, strong in his partisanship against the Arabs, and the author of many books and epistles.

⁴⁰ He was a legendary king of Persia; see Biog. Index.

⁴¹ The Flügel text is not clear. The Beatty MS has a title which might be Rūshanā, followed by yadak ("horse"), or badhl ("munificence"). Rūshanā was Roxana, the wife of Alexander the Great.

⁴² Juwashtar is perhaps meant to be Zoroaster.

⁴³ This may be, as translated, al-mashjī ("the grieving"), or meant to be al-mashjar or al-mushjir ("planted with trees"), or a proper name which cannot be identified. In the following title, the man referred to is probably Hārūn al-Rashīd.

⁴⁴ The Beatty MS repeats this title later in the list.

⁴⁵ Wurūd (Roses) and Wadūd (Lovers) were evidently characters in a story.

⁴⁶ The Arabic, al-mu'āqabāt, has other meanings.

⁴⁸ A town near al-Awwāz, northeast of al-Baṣrah. See Yāqūt, Geog., II, 574.

As he was extremely concerned with miserliness, he wrote a letter to al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl [the vizier], in which he praised miserliness, inspiring him with a desire for it, but at the same time asking him for a gift. Then al-Ḥasan wrote a reply to him on the back of his letter: "Your letter has arrived and we are following your advice and have made on the back [of the page] a receipt and acknowledgment for you with salaams." So nothing came to him as a result.

Abū 'Uthmān al-Jāhīz showed him favor, ranking high his eloquence and literary style and quoting him in his books. Among the books of Sahl ibn Hārūn there were:

Collection of Epistles;⁴⁹ Tha'lah wa-Afrā', similar to Kalilah wa-Dimnah;⁵⁰ The Tree of Intelligence; The Leopard and the Fox; The Maid of Hudhayl and the Youth of Makhzūm;⁵¹ The Lover and the Virgin; Wurūd wa-Wadūd;⁵² The Two Wives [of the same husband]; Aspius on the Taking of Brothers; The Two Gazelles; The Culture of Ashak ibn Ashak, addressed to 'Īsā ibn Abān about judgment; The Administration of the Kingdom and Policy.⁵³

Sa'id ibn Huraym⁵⁴ al-Kātib (the Secretary)

He was an associate of Sahl ibn Hārūn in the Bayt al-Ḥikmah. He was eloquent, a master of literary style and a writer of correspondence who was quoted by al-Jāhīz. Among his books there was Learning and Its Benefits. He also had a collection of epistles.

Salm

He was the director of the Bayt al-Ḥikmah with Sahl ibn Hārūn, who made translations from Persian into Arabic.

⁴⁹ Not found in the Beatty MS.

⁵¹ For these two tribes, see "Hudhail," Enc. Islam, II, 329; "Makhzūm," III, 171.

⁵² This title may be the book of fables translated by 'Alī ibn 'Ubaydah (see n. 45). Flügel gives Nudūd wa-Wadūd wa-Ladūd. The Beatty MS has Nudūd wa-Dudūd. The form given is probably the correct one.

⁵³ Not found in the Beatty MS.

‘Alī ibn Dā’ūd

He was the secretary of Umm Ja‘far Zubaydah, and one of the masters of eloquent literary style. In his composition [of official letters] he used the method of Sahl ibn Hārūn. Among his books there were:

Using a Loud Voice (Al-Jarhiyah), a book of singing;⁵⁵ The Freeborn and the Populace; The Beautiful.

Muḥammad ibn al-Layth al-Khaṭīb (the Preacher)

He was surnamed Abū al-Rabī‘, and served as secretary to Yahyā ibn Khālīd [the vizier]. He was a protégé of the Banū Umayyah and was known for his legal skill. He had an eloquent literary style and was a writer of correspondence, a secretary, legal authority, and theologian, distinguished and frugal. It is said that he was the ugliest of the creations of Allāh, but the Barmak family advanced him, favoring him although he was accused of heresy.⁵⁶ Among his books there were:

The Elliptic, about comparative computation; Refutation of Heretics (al-Zanādiqah); Constantine’s Reply from al-Rashīd;⁵⁷ Penmanship and the Pen; The Admonition (Preaching) of Hārūn al-Rashīd, addressed to Yahyā ibn Khālīd about literary pursuits.

Another account about him was written in the handwriting of Ibn Hafṣ: “Muḥammad ibn al-Layth of the Banū Ḥiṣn Tribe⁵⁸ was gifted in language. He was among the protégés of the Banū Umayyah, with a dislike for Persia, for which the Barmak family hated him. He was a preacher through the agency of his letters.”

⁵⁵ The translation is taken from the Beatty MS. Flügel is probably incorrect.

⁵⁷ Constantine VI was the boy emperor at Constantinople, A.D. 780–97. During his reign Hārūn al-Rashīd extracted tribute from the Byzantines.

⁵⁸ For this tribe, see Qutaybah, Ma‘ārif, p. 48 top.

I read what was written in the handwriting of Ibn Thawābah: “He was Muḥammad ibn al-Layth, the preacher and master (ṣāhib) of correspondence. He was a descendant of Adhabb (Azabb) Bād ibn Fīrūz ibn Shāhīn ibn Adhar Hurmuz ibn Hurmuz ibn Sarūshān ibn Bahman ibn Afrandār, reaching back in his lineage to Dārā ibn Dārā the King.” He had an anthology of epistles.

Al-‘Attābī

He was Abū ‘Amr Kulthūm ibn ‘Amr ibn Ayyūb al-Tha‘labī al-‘Attābī, a Syrian living at Qinnasrīn,⁵⁹ who was a poet, secretary, and accomplished letter writer. He became associated with members of the Barmak family, devoting himself to them. Then, later, he served Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn and ‘Alī ibn Hishām.

It is related that when [the Caliph] al-Rashīd met him after the execution of Ja‘far ibn Yahyā and the waning of the Barmak fortunes, he [al-Rashīd] said to him, “What have you produced for me so far, oh, ‘Attābī?”⁶⁰ Then he [al-‘Attābī] composed extemporaneously some verses with excellent significance, among which there were:

Doth it please thee that there should befall me
What was accorded to Ja‘far of wealth and to Yahyā ibn Khālīd?
That the Commander of the Faithful should choke me
With their choking, with things exceeding cold.
Call me, leave me alone, tranquil, that my fate might come slowly,
Not afflicted with the horror of these happenings.
For confused are the events bound together
In the caverns of darkness.⁶¹

He was the best of the people, preeminent in his epistles and poetry, following the way of genius.⁶² Al-‘Attābī died ———. Among his books there were:

⁵⁹ For Qinnasrīn, see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 184.

⁶⁰ For a brief history of the Barmak family, see Hitti, Arabs, pp. 294–96, an account which helps to explain this incident and the poem which follows.

⁶¹ Flügel, the Beatty MS, and Iṣbahānī, Aghānī, Part 12, p. 9, give different versions of this verse. The translation follows in general the Beatty MS.

⁶² The word translated as “preeminent” is i‘tizāz in Arabic, although it is written, probably inaccurately, as i‘tidād in Flügel and i‘tidhār in the Beatty MS. The Arabic word for “genius” is al-nābighah. This was the name of a famous poet, and may refer to him.

Literary Pursuits; The Arts of Government; The Delightful Book of the Horse; Pronunciations, which Abū 'Umar al-Zāhid quoted as passed down by al-Mubarrad and which was eloquent; Logic;⁶³ Things Beautiful.

Al-'Utbi

He was 'Abd al-Rahmān Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Amr ibn Mu'āwiyah ibn 'Amr ibn 'Utbah ibn Abi Sufyān of al-Baṣrah. Abū al-'Aynā said that 'Amr ibn 'Utbah was of distinguished lineage.

He was one of the most eloquent of men, both al-'Utbi and his father being persons of a superior type, men of letters and masters of literary style. Al-'Utbi was also a poet, though this was not true of his father.⁶⁴

It is said that al-'Utbi stood at the doorway of Ismā'il ibn Ja'far ibn Sulaymān, asking for permission to enter, but the servant said that he [Ismā'il] was in the bath. Then he [al-'Utbi] recited:

When I desire a meal from the emir
And his servant (ghilmān) says that he has gone to the bath,
Then my answer to the porter (hājib) is
That I sought nothing but greetings
And will not come to you at any time,
Except on each day that we are fasting.

Al-'Utbi died during the year two hundred and twenty-eight [A.D. 842/43]. Among his books there were:

Horses; Poetry of the Nomads and Poetry of Women Who Were Loved and Then Hated; The Slaughtered [for Sacrifice];⁶⁵ Characters (Morals).

The Names of Writers of Correspondence Whose Epistles Were Collected as Anthologies

Al-Qāsim ibn Ṣabiḥ, a small amount;⁶⁶ Yaḥyā ibn Khālīd, a small amount; his son al-Faḍl (ibn Yaḥyā), a small amount; his son Ja'far (ibn Yaḥyā), a small amount; al-Fayḍ ibn Abi Ṣāliḥ, a large amount; Yūsuf ibn al-Qāsim, a small amount; Ya'qūb ibn

⁶³ This title and the one following are not in the Beatty MS.

⁶⁴ This paragraph follows the Beatty MS; Flügel differs.

⁶⁵ This title is omitted by Flügel.

⁶⁶ The words "a small amount" and "a large amount" are taken from the Beatty MS, as they are not given perfectly by Flügel.

Nūḥ, a small amount; Yūsuf Laqwah, a small amount; al-Faḍl ibn Sahl, a small amount; al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl, a small amount; Muḥammad ibn Bakr, a small amount; Aḥmad ibn al-Najm, a large amount; Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf the secretary of al-Ma'mūn and a vizier, a large amount.

Ibrāhīm⁶⁷ ibn al-'Abbās ibn Muḥammad ibn Ṣul, the Secretary

He was one of the eloquent writers and poets who were masters of literary style, and he was in charge of the correspondence during the regimes of a number of caliphs, being a man both cultured and gifted. Abū Tammām said, "If Ibrāhīm had not turned his interests to the service of the sultan, he would not have left bread to a single poet, because of the excellency of his poetry." Among his books there were:

Epistles; The Government, a large book; Cooking; Perfume.

Al-Ḥasan ibn Wahb ibn Sa'id ibn 'Amr ibn Ḥuṣayn ibn Qays ibn Qanān ibn Mattā

Qanān served as secretary to Yazīd ibn Abi Sufyān while he was administering Syria, and later to Mu'āwiyah. Mu'āwiyah passed him on to his son, Yazīd, during whose reign as caliph he [Qanān] died. Then Yazīd appointed his [Qanān's] son, Qays, to be his secretary. Qays later served as secretary to Marwān, 'Abd al-Malik, and Hishām, during whose [Hishām's] reign he died.

Hishām made his [Qays's] son, al-Ḥuṣayn, his secretary. Marwān [II] later employed him as a secretary. He went to Egypt, and when Marwān was killed he became attached to Ibn Hubayrah. When Ibn Hubayrah went over to Abū Ja'far [al-Manṣūr], he won safe conduct for al-Ḥuṣayn, who served al-Manṣūr and al-Mahdī, until his death occurred on the road to al-Rayy.

Then al-Mahdī appointed his [Ḥuṣayn's] son 'Amr as a secretary and he served as secretary to Khālīd ibn Barmak. When he died, his son Sa'id was his successor, remaining in the service of the Barmak family and being followed by his own son Wahb, who first acted as secretary to Ja'far ibn Yaḥyā and later in the entourage of Dhū al-Ri'āsitayn [al-Faḍl ibn Sahl]. Dhū al-Ri'āsitayn said about him, "In view of his associates, I have wondered how Wahb refrained from self-seeking."⁶⁸

After that al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl made him [Wahb] his secretary, appointing him governor of Kirmān and Fars, in which provinces he made improvements. When he sent him on a mission to al-Ma'mūn via Fam al-Šilḥ,⁶⁹ he was drowned on the way to Baghdād from Fam al-Šilḥ. His son Sulaymān, when he was a boy fourteen years old, did secretarial work for al-Ma'mūn. Later he served as secretary to Itākh and Ashmās. After that he was head of the vizierate of al-Mu'tamid. This Sulaymān ibn Wahb had a book, a collection of his epistles.

The brother of Sulaymān, al-Ḥasan ibn Wahb, served as secretary to Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Zayyāt, also presiding over the bureau of correspondence. He was a poet, an eloquent writer, a composer of correspondence, a master of literary style, and one of the most excellent of the secretaries. His book was a collection of epistles.

Ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Zayyāt Was Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik ibn Abān al-Zayyāt

Abān was one of the inhabitants of a village of al-Jabal called al-Daskarah, from which region he transported oil to Baghdād. [Muḥammad] was a poet and master of literary style, who served as vizier to three caliphs: al-Mu'tasim, al-Wāthiq, and al-Mutawakkil. Forty days after appointing him as vizier, al-Mutawakkil humiliated him, killing him in his affliction. We give a detailed account of him elsewhere.⁷⁰ He died during the year two hundred and thirty-three [A.D. 847/48]. He had an anthology of epistles.

Al-Qāsim ibn Yūsuf

He was the brother of Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf. He was a poet and writer of correspondence. He had a book of epistles.

⁶⁸ For the caliphs mentioned, see Hitti, Arabs, pp. 193, 279, 297.

⁶⁹ This locality was on the Šilḥ River above al-Wāsiṭ; see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 917.

⁷⁰ Perhaps the author of Al-Fihrist expected to mention Muḥammad in further detail in connection with the poets, but actually his name is only mentioned briefly.

'Amr ibn Mas'adah ibn Sa'id ibn ———

He was the vizier of al-Ma'mūn, and was a master of literary style, a poet, and writer of correspondence. There is a large book of his epistles.

Sa'id ibn Wahb

He was a secretary, but not from the family of Wahb ibn Sa'id, for his origin was Persian. He wrote:

Epistles; a collection of his poems.⁷¹

Al-Ḥarrānī

He was Abū al-Ṭayyib 'Abd al-Raḥīm ibn Aḥmad al-Ḥarrānī, a poet, writer of correspondence, and master of literary style, who wrote:

Epistles; about eloquent literary style.⁷²

Abū 'Alī al-Baṣīr

He was a poet, master of literary style, and writer of correspondence. Between him and Abū al-'Aynā' there were exchanges of satires and excellent compositions, including a number of poems. He wrote:

Epistles; a collection of his poems.⁷³

Al-Yūsufī

He was Abū al-Ṭayyib Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh, one of the descendants of Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf al-Kātib, the secretary of al-Ma'mūn.⁷⁴ He was a writer of correspondence and a master of literary style. He wrote:

The Distinguished (Al-Faḍūl), referring to his selected epistles; epistles about his personal affairs.

⁷¹ This second title not found in the Beatty MS.

⁷² This title is not found in the Beatty MS.

⁷³ Omitted in the Beatty MS.

The Banū al-Mudabbir⁷⁵

Aḥmad, Muḥammad, and Ibrāhīm, all of whom were poets, writers of correspondence, and masters of literary style. Aḥmad wrote the book Sessions and Conference.

Hārūn ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Zayyāt

He was surnamed Abū Mūsā, and was one of the persons who collected historical anecdotes and quoted traditions. Among his books there were:

Historical Traditions of Dhū al-Rummah; his epistles.⁷⁶

Sa'id ibn Ḥumayd

He was surnamed Abū 'Uthmān and was a secretary, poet, and writer of correspondence, delightful in expression, preeminent in his work, but given to plagiarism and much [literary] plundering. If it should be said to the words and poetry of Sa'id, "Return to your true authors (ahlik)," there would be nothing of his own left. This was the expression of Aḥmad ibn Abī Ṭāhir.

He claimed that he was descended from the offspring of the kings of Persia. Among his books there were:

Persia's Receiving Justice from the Arabs, also known as Equality; a collection of his epistles; an anthology of his poems. In connection with [his] quashing of Aḥmad and Ibrāhīm, a book of epistles was [addressed] to each of them.⁷⁷

Ibrāhīm ibn Ismā'il ibn Dā'ūd, the Secretary

He excelled in eloquence and literary style. He wrote Epistles.

Sa'id ibn Ḥumayd ibn al-Bakhtakān

He was surnamed Abū 'Uthmān and was a man of understanding, a theologian, and a master of literary style. Coming from ancient ancestry in Persia, he was strong in partisanship against the Arabs. Among his books there were:

⁷⁶ Omitted by the Beatty MS.

⁷⁷ Probably Aḥmad ibn Abī Ṭāhir and Ibrāhīm ibn Ismā'il.

The Persians' Superiority⁷⁸ over the Arabs, and Their Excellence; his epistles; about theology, which I mention in the proper place in this volume.

Ḥamd ibn Mihrān, the Secretary

He was from Iṣbahān and served as secretary to the members of the Barmak family while they were still alive.⁷⁹ He wrote Epistles.

Ibn Yazdād

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Yazdād ibn Suwayd was the vizier of [the Caliph] al-Ma'mūn, a master of literary style, a writer of correspondence, and a poet.⁸⁰ Among his books there were:

Epistles; an anthology of his poems.

Muḥammad ibn Mukram

He was a secretary who was a master of literary style and a writer of correspondence. He wrote Epistles.

Abū Ṣāliḥ 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Yazdād ibn Suwayd

He was one of the secretaries who were masters of literary style. His son was Abū Aḥmad ibn⁸¹ 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Yazdād, who completed the book of history which his father was writing, to the year three hundred [A.D. 912/13]. Among his [Abū Aḥmad's] books there were:

History; his epistles.

Maymun ibn Ibrāhīm, the Secretary

He had special charge of the correspondence during the days of al-Mutawakkil. He was eloquent, a master of literary style and a writer of correspondence. He wrote Epistles.

⁷⁸ The Beatty MS omits "superiority," which omission is evidently an error.

⁷⁹ The reference to the Barmak family is omitted in the Beatty MS.

⁸⁰ The phrase "and a poet" and the second book title are not found in the Beatty MS.

Mūsā ibn 'Abd al-Malik

He had charge of the Bureau of al-Sawād and other matters during the days of al-Mutawakkil and was also a writer of correspondence. I have seen a few of his letters.

Ibn Sa'd⁸² al-Qutrabbullī

He was Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn Sa'd ibn Mas'ūd al-Qutrabbullī, one of the secretaries who were learned and preeminent. Among his books there were:

History, which he wrote up to his own lifetime; Fiḡar (Rhymed Phrases, Rhymed Clauses) of the Masters of Literary Style;⁸³ Logic.

Naṭṭāḥ Abū 'Alī Aḥmad ibn Ismā'il ibn al-Khaṣīb al-Anbārī

He was the secretary of 'Ubayd Allāh ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir, who turned him over to Muḥammad ibn Ṭāhir.⁸⁴ He was a master of literary style, a correspondence writer, a poet, and a man of letters, preeminent in eloquent composition. He usually wrote in a personal way to his brothers, but there were also letters and replies exchanged between him and Abū al-'Abbās ['Abd Allāh] ibn al-Mu'tazz. He composed a collection (diwān) of letters, about a thousand leaves in length, comprising all of the good [passages] from different kinds of letters.

Cooked Food; Generations (Categories) of Secretaries; and also what he entitled the Compendium Copied from Notes, which included what he heard from the scholars and what was testified to in connection with anecdotes about important people; Description (Attributes) of the Soul; his letters to his brothers.⁸⁵

⁸² The Flügel text gives Ibn Sa'id. In the sentence below, Flügel gives Abū al-Ḥasan as part of his name; the Beatty MS omits it.

⁸³ This title and that following are omitted by the Beatty MS.

⁸⁴ The translation follows the Beatty MS, which seems to be correct. Muḥammad was the brother of 'Ubayd Allāh, so that it was natural for the secretary to go from one to the other. The Flügel version says that Muḥammad ibn Ṭāhir killed Naṭṭāḥ, evidently an error.

⁸⁵ Lacking in the Beatty MS.

Ibn Fuḡayl al-Kātib

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn Fuḡayl ibn Marwān, and was of Persian origin. Among his books there was Idols and What the Arabs and Persians Used to Worship instead of Allāh, Blessed Be His Name.

Abū al-'Aynā' Muḥammad ibn al-Qāsim ibn Khillād⁸⁶

He was a master of literary style and eloquence, with a ready answer and a quick repartee. He was also a poet. During the latter part of his life he was blind. Letters and satires were exchanged between him and Abū 'Alī al-Baṣīr and also Abū Hifḡān.⁸⁷

The people of al-'Askar⁸⁸ used to fear his tongue. He quoted al-Aṣma'i and other scholars. Abū al-'Aynā' died some time after the year two hundred and eighty [A.D. 893/94].⁸⁹ Among his books there were:

Accounts of Abū al-'Aynā', which was written by [Aḥmad] ibn Abi Ṭāhir; Poems of Abū al-'Aynā', about thirty leaves in length.

I have read something written in the handwriting of [Muḥammad ibn 'Alī] ibn Muqlah [surnamed] Abū 'Alī, of which this is a transcription. I am presenting it with its order and wording, as this book requires.

Names of the Preachers (Orators)

The Commander of the Faithful, 'Alī, for whom may there be peace; Ṭalḡah ibn 'Ubayd Allāh; 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Zubayr; 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abbās ibn 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib; Khālīd and Ismā'il, the two sons of 'Abd Allāh al-Qasrī; Yazīd ibn Khālīd ibn 'Abd Allāh and Jarīr ibn Yazīd ibn Khālīd; 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Aḡtam; Khālīd ibn Safwān; Ibn al-Qirīyah;⁹⁰ Ṣa'sa'ah ibn Ṣūḡhān; Muḥammad ibn Qays al-Khaṭīb; Ziyād ibn Abi Sufyān; Qaṭarī ibn al-Fujā'ah; al-Walīd ibn Yazīd; Abū Ja'far al-Manṣūr; al-Ma'mūn; Shabīb ibn

⁸⁶ "Ibn Khillād" is omitted by the Beatty MS.

⁸⁷ See Mas'ūdī, VII, 328, for mention of Abū 'Alī al-Baṣīr and Abū al-'Aynā'.

⁸⁸ Al-'askar may refer to the army, but probably refers to the quarter of Baghdad known as "Askar al-Mahdī" and often called "al-Askar." See Coke, Baghdad, p. 40.

⁸⁹ The Beatty MS leaves a gap in place of the date following "Abū al-'Aynā' died."

⁹⁰ The Beatty MS gives "al-Qisrīyah," which seems to be an error.

Shaybah; al-'Abbās ibn al-Ḥasan al-'Alawī and his son 'Abd Allāh; Muḥammad ibn Khālid ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Qasrī; Shabbah ibn 'Iqāl.

The Names of Those Who Were Eloquent⁹¹

Abū Marwān Ghaylān; Sālīm, the secretary of Hishām ibn 'Abd al-Malik and a kinsman of 'Abd al-Ḥamīd; 'Abd al-Ḥamīd ibn Yahyā, the secretary of Marwān [II]; Khalid ibn Rabī'ah al-Ifriqī;⁹² 'Abd al-Wahhāb ibn 'Alī, who lived at the time of Bilāl ibn Abī Burdah; 'Umārah ibn Ḥamzah; Yahyā and Muḥammad, the sons of Ziyād, the two Ḥārithī descendants of al-Ḥārith ibn Ka'b; Ḥujr ibn Sulaymān, from Ḥarrān; Muḥammad ibn Ḥujr, the secretary of al-'Abbās ibn Muḥammad; Jabal ibn Yazīd, the secretary of 'Umārah ibn Ḥamzah; Mas'adah ibn 'Amr;⁹³ 'Abd al-Jabbār ibn 'Adī and Mas'adah ibn Khālid, the two secretaries of al-Mansūr; Yūnus ibn Abī Farwah, who served as the secretary of 'Isā ibn Mūsā; Sahl ibn Hārūn, director of the Bayt al-Ḥikmah of al-Ma'mūn; Sa'id ibn Huraym, the associate of Sahl ibn Hārūn at the Bayt al-Ḥikmah; 'Abd Allāh ibn Khāqān;⁹⁴ Ja'far ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Ash'ath; 'Ubayd Allāh⁹⁵ ibn 'Amrān, who served as a secretary to a number of persons, the last of whom was al-Faḍl ibn Yahyā; Ibn Adham, the secretary of Abū Nujūm.

Abū al-Rabī' Muḥammad ibn al-Layth; Ghassān ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd al-Madīnī;⁹⁶ al-Khaṭṭāb mawlā Sulaymān ibn Abī Ja'far and his protégé;⁹⁷ Ibn A'yān, a secretary; Abū — al-Shāmī, the

⁹² For the last element of this name, Flügel gives "al-Sharqī" and the Beatty MS is garbled, but probably "al-Ifriqī" is the correct form.

⁹³ The Arabic text gives Abū 'Amr, but most sources give his name as ibn 'Amr. Perhaps he was both Abū 'Amr and ibn 'Amr.

⁹⁴ It is possible that the word for "secretary of" has been omitted between 'Abd Allāh ibn Khāqān and Ja'far ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Ash'ath.

⁹⁵ The name Allāh is given by Flügel but not by the Beatty MS.

⁹⁶ Flügel adds, "who served as secretary to Ja'far ibn Sulaymān at al-Madīnah."

secretary of al-Walid ibn Mu'āwiyah; Khaṭṭāb ibn Abī Khaṭṭāb, one of the Ahl al-Ḍa'wah⁹⁸ who wrote on his own behalf; 'Ubayd ibn Khirāsh, one of the people of al-Shām and a secretary; Kulthūm ibn 'Amr al-'Attābī, a man of letters who wrote on his own behalf [and for] Abū Muslim al-Shāmī; Qumāmah, the secretary of 'Abd al-Malik ibn Ṣāliḥ; Ishāq ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, the secretary of Qumāmah ibn Yazīd; al-Ḥarīr ibn al-Ṣarīḥ, the secretary of 'Abd al-Malik ibn Ṣāliḥ; Abū Rawḥ, the secretary of 'Alī ibn 'Isā, following Yūsuf ibn Sulaymān; Ibn al-'Abādīyah;⁹⁹ Muḥammad ibn Ḥarb, who served as secretary to al-Makhlū'.¹⁰⁰

Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf; Maslamah, the secretary of Khuzaymah ibn Khāzim; Ismā'il ibn Ṣabīḥ; Abū 'Ubayd Allāh, the secretary of al-Mahdī; Muḥammad ibn Sa'id, a contemporary of al-Ma'mūn; Bakr ibn Fayd ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd al-Tamīmī, a contemporary of Bilāl ibn Abī Burdah; al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad, also a contemporary of Bilāl; Bishr ibn Abī Bishārah; Abū al-Najm Ḥabīb ibn al-Najm, contemporary with al-Mahdī; Muṭarrāf ibn Abī Muṭarrāf al-Laythī; Ibrāhīm ibn Ismā'il, the teacher of Muḥammad ibn Mukram; Yūsuf ibn Sulaymān, the secretary of 'Alī;¹⁰¹ Abū Ḥawt, the secretary of al-Ḥarīr ibn Ṣarīḥ; Ḥamzah ibn 'Afīf ibn al-Ḥasan, a secretary of Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn; Muslim ibn Ṣadaqah, a Syrian; Abū Ḥāshim al-Ḥarrānī.

Ten Masters of Literary Style¹⁰²

'Abd Allāh ibn al-Muqaffā'; 'Umārah ibn Ḥamzah; Jabal ibn Yazīd; Ḥujr ibn Muḥammad; Muḥammad ibn Ḥujr — Anas ibn Abī Shaykh, who was relied upon by Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf the secretary; Sālīm; Mas'adah; al-Ḥarīr ibn Ṣarīḥ; 'Abd al-Jabbār ibn 'Adī; Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf.

⁹⁸ This is the name by which the Ismā'īliyah designated their own members. It can be translated as "People of the Summons."

⁹⁹ The Flügel text gives Yūsuf ibn Sulaymān ibn al-'Abādīyah as one name. The Beatty MS is probably correct in breaking it into two.

¹⁰⁰ Al-Makhlū' ("the Rejected") was the nickname of al-Amīn, son of Hārūn al-Rashīd.

¹⁰¹ Probably 'Alī ibn 'Isā, the famous vizier.

¹⁰² In this paragraph, the Flügel text omits Jabal ibn Yazīd, though the Beatty MS includes it. Flügel gives Anas ibn Abī Shaykh as a separate name. In the Beatty MS, the text is garbled following Muḥammad ibn Ḥujr, but evidently Anas was connected in some way with this man, and was not among the masters of literary style.

Recent Masters of Literary Style

Ibrāhīm ibn 'Abbās al-Ṣūlī; al-Ḥasan ibn Wahb; Sa'id ibn 'Abd al-Malik.

Books Mentioned Together because of Their Excellence

The Testament of Ardashīr;¹⁰³ Kalilah wa-Dimnah; the epistle of 'Umārah ibn Ḥamzah; Al-Māhānīyah;¹⁰⁴ Al-Yatīmāh, by Ibn al-Muqaffā';¹⁰⁵ the epistle Al-Khamīs, by Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf al-Khaṭīb.¹⁰⁶

Various Subjects about Which Things Were Written¹⁰⁷

About the common people, about raids [early wars of Islām], about defeats (routs), about security, about submission, about laws, about recompense, about provinces, about treaties, about counsel, about partisanship, about rain, about earthquake, about acknowledgment of a ruler, about peace, about reviling, about necessities, about satisfaction, about love (affection), about reproaches, about apologies, about trusts, about congratulations, about gifts, about judicial jurisdiction, about condolence, about holy war, about season of the pilgrimage (harvest), about feasts, about passionate desires.

Responses of the raids (correspondence of the early wars of Islām): what was written by (from) the kings to the kings about the outlying regions, about the weak (impotent), about the conflagration, about war, about praying for rain, about union (friendly relations), about security (peace), about breaking through (pouring forth) of waters.¹⁰⁸

¹⁰³ The charge given by the dying king Ardashīr to his son Shāpūr; see Firdawsī, Shahnama, VI, 286; Rawlinson, Seventh Great Oriental Monarchy, p. 63.

¹⁰⁴ This may have been written by Ibrāhīm al-Mawṣilī or Ishāq al-Mawṣilī about their ancestor Māhān; see Huart, History of Arabic Literature, p. 77.

¹⁰⁵ Al-yatīmāh means "the rare" or "the unique." Flügel, p. 118 bottom line, gives the phrase "about epistles" following this title.

¹⁰⁶ The title Al-Khamīs is taken from the Beatty MS, as Flügel has Al-Ḥasan, evidently an error.

¹⁰⁷ In the second paragraph, the text follows the Beatty MS, in which the phrase "Responses of the raids" seems to introduce the group of subjects which follows. There is a variation in the Flügel edition.

¹⁰⁸ The subject "breaking through of waters" is taken from the Beatty MS, as Flügel gives "passionate devotion," which is a mistake.

Also What Occurs in Action

Seeing the new moon, festivals, about amatory poetry (conversation),¹⁰⁹ demand for necessities, cassation in justice.

Here ends what was written in the handwriting of Abū 'Alī ibn Muqlah [Muḥammad ibn 'Alī].

Ghassān ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd¹¹⁰

He served as secretary to Ja'far ibn Sulaymān ibn 'Alī. He was eloquent, using beautiful diction and refinement of meaning. Among his books there were:

Selected writings; a book of his epistles.

Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ḥarb

He served as secretary to al-Ḥasan ibn Qaḥṭabah in Armenia. Then he was the secretary of Yazīd ibn Usayd and later of al-Faḍl ibn Yahyā. He wrote Epistles.

Bakr ibn Ṣurad

He was the secretary of Yazīd ibn Mazyad and a man with an excellent literary style, who was the author of several famous books. It was he who composed for (about) Yazīd ibn Mazyad his letter to al-Rashīd at the time of the death of Yazīd.¹¹¹ He wrote:

Epistles; The Epistle about Mazyad to al-Rashīd.

Abū al-Wizīr 'Umar ibn Muṭarraf¹¹²

He was a secretary belonging to the 'Abd al-Qays Tribe and was one of the people of Marw (Merv). He directed the bureau of the eastern provinces for al-Mahdī, al-Hādī, and al-Rashīd. He served as secretary to al-Manṣūr and al-Mahdī, during whose reign it is said that he died, but the truth is that¹¹³ he died during the days of al-Rashīd, who mourned for him. He was trustworthy, preeminent in ¹⁰⁹ The Arabic word is al-ghazal, which can be used for a kind of popular ode.

¹¹⁰ Instead of Ghassān, the Beatty MS has 'Isān, which must be wrong.

¹¹¹ Flügel has Barmak, but the Beatty MS must be right in giving Yazīd.

¹¹² The Beatty MS lacks "'Umar ibn Muṭarraf" in this heading. For the tribe which follows, see "'Abd al-Qays" ('Abd al-Qays), Enc. Islam, I, 45.

¹¹³ The Beatty MS lacks the phrase "during whose reign . . . truth is that."

his profession, eloquent, and a quoter of traditions. Among his books there were:

Habitations of the Arabs, Their Frontiers, the Place Where Each Tribe Was Located, and the Place to Which It Migrated from There; The Epistles of Abū al-Wizir; The Glorious Deeds of the Arabs and the Competitions of Their Tribes in Connection with Genealogy.¹¹⁴

When al-Rashīd prayed for him [at his funeral] he said, "May Allāh show mercy to thee. For verily has not Allāh offered thee two alternatives, one for Allāh and one for thyself? And hast thou not sought what was for Allāh rather than for thyself?"

Al-Faḍl ibn Marwān ibn Māsarjis, the Christian

He was from a village known as Sullā on the shores of the River Būq,¹¹⁵ and he lived to the age of ninety-three. He served al-Ma'mūn and al-Mu'taṣim, acting as vizier. After these two, he also served several other caliphs. Although he had little grasp of learning, he showed great intelligence in the service of the caliphs. Among his books there were:

Things Observed and Traditions Known by Eye Witnesses, Seen and Quoted; his letters.¹¹⁶

*Al-Jahshiyārī*¹¹⁷

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn 'Abdūs, a secretary, student of historical traditions, and writer of correspondence, among whose books there were:

The Viziers and the Secretaries; The Meter of Poetry and a Compendium of the Types of Prosody.

¹¹⁴ This title is lacking in the Beatty MS.

¹¹⁵ For the River Būq, see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 836. Cf. ibid., III, 129, for Sullā, although this name may be incorrect.

¹¹⁶ "His letters" is lacking in the Beatty MS.

¹¹⁷ This whole paragraph is omitted by the Beatty MS, but a space is left, evidently with hopes that it could be filled in later.

A Group¹¹⁸

Shaylamah

He was Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl the secretary, Shaylamah being a nickname.¹¹⁹ At first he was with al-'Alawī¹²⁰ at al-Baṣrah, but later he went to Baghdād and became loyal [to the government]. Then he became involved in working with some of the Khawārij, so that al-Mu'taḍid burned him fastened to a tent pole.¹²¹ Among his books there were:

Account of the Chief of the Zanj and His Battles; his epistles.¹²²

Ibn Abī Aṣbagh

He was Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad, among whose books there were:

Learning and Nobility of Writing, about fifty leaves; Epistles, not many of them.¹²³

Ibn Abī al-Sarj

He was Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad ibn Abī al-Sarj, the secretary, among whose books there were:

The Pen (Penmanship) and What Accompanies It; Epistles.¹²⁴

*Ishāq ibn Salamah*¹²⁵

He was a Persian secretary. Among his books there were:

Superiority of the Persians over the Arabs; Epistles.

¹¹⁸ The usual Arabic spelling for the word translated as "group" is tā'ifah, but the Beatty MS here gives tā'yifah.

¹¹⁹ Shaylam means either "a cruel-looking man" or "tares" which are known as darnel grass (Lolium temulentum), an herb which causes mild physical reaction.

¹²⁰ This almost certainly refers to 'Alī ibn Muḥammad, called Ṣāhib al-Zanj.

¹²¹ The translation follows the Beatty MS. The word given as "fastened" cannot be identified with certainty. It could be ka-zadanj, "like sheep's intestines." In other words, as the intestines, a popular form of food, are cooked on a spit, so the caliph burned his victim on a tent pole over a fire. See Tanūkhī, Nishwār, pp. 73, 74; Tabarī, Annales, Part III, pp. 2135-36, for differently worded accounts of this incident.

¹²² "His epistles" lacking in the Beatty MS.

¹²³ Second title lacking in the Beatty MS.

¹²⁴ Second title lacking in the Beatty MS.

¹²⁵ The name in the Beatty MS appears to be Ishāq ibn Sulmah. The second title is lacking in the Beatty MS.

Mūsā ibn 'Isā al-Kisrāwī¹²⁶

Among his books there were:

Love of Fatherlands; The Contradictions of He Who Claims that Judges Are Not Obligated to Imitate the Imams and Caliphs in Connection with Their Food.

Yazdijird ibn Mihindādh al-Kisrāwī

He lived at the time of [the Caliph] al-Mu'taḍid. Among his books there were:

The Excellencies of Baghdād and Its Characteristics; Guides to the Oneness [of God] from the Words of the Philosophers and Others besides Them, a large book which I have glanced through.

Another Group

Dā'ūd ibn al-Jarrāh

He was the grandfather of Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā and served as the secretary of al-Musta'in.¹²⁷ Among his books there were:

The History and Historical Traditions of the Secretaries; Epistles.

Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd ibn al-Jarrāh

He was surnamed Abū 'Abd Allāh. No one appeared during his time who was more illustrious than he. He served as vizier to 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Mu'tazz during the time when he was caliph. He was a learned man, who mingled with people, learning from scholars, masters of literary style, and poets. In his own handwriting he wrote more than can be computed, and he both read over and corrected whatever was written with his penmanship.

After the uprising of ['Abd Allāh] ibn al-Mu'tazz, he [Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd] was made known to Mu'nis al-Khādim, who had early knowledge of his situation, but as Abū al-Ḥasan ibn al-Furāt feared him, he [Mu'nis] counseled his execution. Accordingly, he was ¹²⁶ Al-Kisrāwī indicates connection with the royal family of Persia and descent from Chosroes. The Beatty MS spells the name al-Kasrāwī. The second title among his books has been obscured in the Beatty MS.

¹²⁷ Both the name al-Musta'in and the title Epistles are omitted by the Beatty MS.

killed. [His body] was taken out and cast into a canal by the gate at al-Ma'mūniyah and later carried to his home.¹²⁸

Among his books there were:

The Leaf, about historical traditions of the poets;¹²⁹ the delightful book, Poetry and the Poets; Who among the Poets Was Named 'Umar during the Pre-Islāmic and Islāmic Periods;¹³⁰ The Four, modeled after the book of Abū Hifḥān; The Viziers.

Alī ibn 'Isā ibn Dā'ūd ibn al-Jarrāh

He was in a position of leadership, having power and rank, but he was especially famous and conspicuous for his professional skill and virtue.¹³¹ Three times he served as the vizier of al-Muqtadir. He traced his lineage back to al-Ḥasan.¹³²

He died on the day during the morning of which Mu'izz al-Dawlah crossed over, which was the day of the conflict in the middle of the night, during Dhū al-Ḥijjah [the twelfth Muslim month], in the year three hundred and thirty-four [A.D. 946]. He was buried in his house.¹³³ Among his books there were:

¹²⁹ Flügel adds, "which he wrote for Ibn al-Munajjim," probably either Hārūn ibn 'Alī the authority on poetry, or Abū Aḥmad Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī, the court favorite.

¹³⁰ Flügel has 'Amr instead of 'Umar. Flügel also adds the clause "during the Pre-Islāmic and Islāmic Periods." The last title is not found in the Beatty MS.

¹³¹ The Flügel edition has "law" instead of "virtue."

¹³² At this point there is a space left in the Beatty MS, evidently meant to be filled in later with data about genealogy.

¹³³ The translation follows the Beatty MS. Flügel gives, "He died on the day in which Mu'izz al-Dawlah crossed over, which was Friday, at midnight during the month of Dhū al-Ḥijjah, in the year three hundred and thirty-four [A.D. 946]." Aḥmad ibn Buwayh, known as Mu'izz al-Dawlah, came from al-Ahwāz to Baghdād, and after a period of negotiations he deposed and blinded the Caliph al-Mustakfī, early A.D. 946. See "Mu'izz al-Dawlah," Enc. Islam, III, 705; Miskawayh, V, 87 (84); 88 (85); Hitti, Arabs, p. 470.

Collection of Invocations; The Meaning and Explanation of the Qur'ān, with which work Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Khazzāz and Abū Bakr ibn Mujaḥhid helped him; The Secretaries, the Politics of the Kingdom, and a Record of the Caliphs.

His Son, Abū al-Qāsim 'Isā ibn 'Alī

He devoted his time to logic and the ancient sciences. His birth was ———. Among his books there was a book about the Persian language.

Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd ibn al-Jarrāḥ¹³⁴

He was known as the son of Asmā, who was a sister of 'Alī ibn 'Isā. He was an excellent secretary and a writer of correspondence, among whose books there were:

The Benefit, about history; The Explanation and Correction of Speech (Tongue).

'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn 'Isā

He was a brother of Abū al-Ḥasan ['Alī ibn 'Isā], and an excellent man. He was a secretary who served as vizier to al-Muttaqī with the counsel of his brother. For the one who directed him and supervised his affairs was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā. Among his books there were:

Record of the Family of al-Jarrāḥ—Traditions about Them and Their Genealogies, Both in Ancient and Modern Times;¹³⁵ History, from the year two hundred and seventy [A.D. 883/84] to his own day; large book about land tax (al-kharāj), which he did not finish.

Ibn al-'Aramram Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd Allāh

He held high positions¹³⁶ in the lowlands near 'Umrān. Among his books there was The Land Tax (Al-Kharāj), which he named ¹³⁴ This paragraph is lacking in the Beatty MS.

¹³⁵ The translation follows the Beatty MS, which gives āl al-Jarrāḥ ("the family of al-Jarrāḥ"). Flügel has ahl al-kharāj ("people of the land tax"), which seems to be a mistake.

¹³⁶ The translation "held high positions" is taken from the Beatty MS. Flügel gives wa-māt ("and he died").

Al-Muṭawwaq 'Alī ibn al-Faṭḥ

He was surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan. Among his books there was The Viziers, supplementing the book of Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd ibn al-Jarrāḥ and brought up to the time of Abū al-Qāsim al-Kalwādhānī.

Ibn al-Ḥarūn¹³⁷

Among his books there were:

The Excellency of the Arrangement of the Qur'ān; Epistles.

Al-Marṭhādī

Abū Aḥmad ibn Bishr al-Marṭhādī the Elder was the man to whom Ibn al-Rūmī wrote verses about fish, for there was a joke between them. He served as the secretary of al-Muwaffaq in connection with his confidential affairs. Among his books there were:

Al-Anwā', a large and exceedingly good book; Poems of the Quraysh, upon which al-Ṣūlī depended for "Al-Awrāq," for he plagiarized him—I saw a copy written in the handwriting of al-Marṭhādī; Collection of Letters.¹³⁸

Mention of the Family of Thawābah ibn Yūnus

Their origin was Christian. It is said that Yūnus was known as Lubābah and that he was a cupper (barber-surgeon). It is also said that Lubābah was their maternal ancestor. Abū Sa'īd Waḥb ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Tāzādī said to me:¹³⁹

There was once a dispute between 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn and Abū al-'Abbās ibn Thawābah about an estate.¹⁴⁰ They met at the hearing of some high official; I think he was 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Sulaymān. 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn delegated this case with Abū al-'Abbās to his brother, Abū al-Qāsim

¹³⁷ The account of Ibn al-Ḥarūn is not found in the Beatty MS.

¹³⁸ This title lacking in the Beatty MS.

¹³⁹ The versions of the following passage show numerous variations in Flügel, the Beatty MS, and Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (2), 36.

¹⁴⁰ The Flügel text gives Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Thawābah. This man and the wife of 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn were both descendants of Thawābah ibn Yūnus, the cupper, and for that reason claimed the right to inheritance of the same piece of property. When 'Alī proved his intimate relationship with the cupper, his opponent gave up the case.

Ja'far¹⁴¹ ibn al-Ḥusayn, who was a match for (became the rival of) Abū al-'Abbās. Abū al-'Abbās began accusing him of falsifying and mocking him. Finally, in summing up his remarks he said to him, "Who are you that you have so roughly twisted the truth?"

Then he [Wahb ibn Ibrāhīm] went on to say:

'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn turned to a boy accompanying him, as though he were the world to come, and took him by his hand, standing up in his place. Then he uncovered his head, saying with his loudest voice, "Oh, group of scribes, you have known me. This is my son, by so-in-so, the daughter of so-in-so. She shall be divorced from me by the divorce of invalidation and precedent (al-jarah wa-al-sunnah) according to the usage of the law codes, if this cupping scar on the vein of my neck is not the scarification of his [the boy's] grandfather, so-in-so the cupper,¹⁴² and if he is not surnamed for a grandfather Ibn Thawābah."

He [Wahb ibn Ibrāhīm] continued, "Abū al-'Abbās gave up, neither answering [questions] nor making any remarks about the estate after that, capitulating without dispute or argument, so that the persons present respected this [outcome]."

Abū al-'Abbās was troublesome and spiteful. Words of his, which are recorded, are both shameful and overbearing. It is for me to wash the words of this cupper from my mouth with rose water. From him we have, "When the people saw the Commander of the Faithful, they became chiefs, they trimmed their pens, they advanced and became viziers, with hobbled jumps."¹⁴³ He died during the year two hundred and seventy-seven [A.D. 890/91]. Among his books there were:

Collected Epistles; Epistle on Writing and Script (Penmanship).

¹⁴¹ The Beatty MS leaves a blank, but Flügel fills in the name Ja'far.

¹⁴² The Flügel text has al-Bahrayn, an obvious error. The Beatty MS gives al-muzayyin ("cupper" or "barber").

¹⁴³ In this sentence, the Beatty MS and Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (2), 36, place t d before each verb. This may be meant to show the heavy speech of Abū al-'Abbās. Probably, however, Flügel is correct in giving, instead of t d, qad, an Arabic expression of emphasis. Flügel omits the last word of the Arabic quotation, and Yāqūt does not make it clear. In the Beatty MS the letters look like b r s f n. As the long a is often omitted, the word may be, as translated, bi-rasafan ("with hobbled jumps"), which means with jumps like those of a fettered camel, a good description of the advances of upstarts, always bound by the caliph's whims.

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Thawābah

He was a writer of correspondence, who had an excellent literary style and served as the secretary of al-Mu'taḍid.¹⁴⁴ He wrote a book of recorded letters.

Abū al-Ḥusayn ibn Thawābah

He was the last one of the distinguished and learned men among those [descendants of Ibn Thawābah] whom we have seen. He wrote the book Epistles.

Qudāmah ibn Ja'far

He was Qudāmah ibn Ja'far ibn Qudāmah, whose grandfather was a Christian. He became a Muslim under the auspices of al-Muktafi bi-Allāh.¹⁴⁵ Qudāmah was one of the masters of literary style, one of the polished writers, and one of the distinguished philosophers. He was noted in connection with the science of logic, although his father Ja'far was one of those who were neither interested in nor had any knowledge of it. Among his books there were:¹⁴⁶

The Land Tax (Al-Kharāj), eight stages, to which he added a ninth;¹⁴⁷ Criticism of Poetry; The Cleanser¹⁴⁸ of Sorrow; Dismissal of Anxiety; his epistle about Abū 'Alī ibn Muqlah [Muḥammad ibn 'Alī],¹⁴⁹ known as The Brilliant Star; Withstanding (Making Clear) Grief; Wines of Thought;¹⁵⁰ Politics;¹⁵¹ Refutation of Ibn al-Mu'tazz; The Pleasure of Hearts and the Provision of the Traveler.

¹⁴⁴ The name of the Caliph al-Mu'taḍid is not in the Beatty MS.

¹⁴⁵ In the Beatty MS a space is left here; the name al-Muktafi bi-Allāh is lacking. The Beatty MS implies that the grandfather became a Muslim.

¹⁴⁶ The scribe who copied the Beatty MS made careless mistakes in this list of titles. Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (6), 203-5 quotes Al-Fihrist giving a more accurate list.

¹⁴⁷ On the margin of the Beatty MS there is the note, perhaps a correction, "seven stages to which he added the eighth." This line is followed by a longer explanation which has not been included in the translation, as it is evidently not part of the original.

¹⁴⁸ "Cleanser" is ṣābūn, the modern word for "soap."

¹⁴⁹ The Beatty MS omits Abū, evidently mistakenly.

¹⁵⁰ The Beatty MS is garbled, but both Flügel and Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (2), 36, give daryāq ("wines"). It can also mean "antidotes."

¹⁵¹ This title and those following are not in the Beatty MS.

Ibn Ḥammādah

He was Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Ḥammādah the secretary. He was highly cultured and one of the most illustrious of the secretaries. He wrote books and met with men of letters. Among his books there were:

Examination of the Secretaries and a Collection of the Works of Men of Understanding;¹⁵² The Epistles.

Al-Kalwādhānī

He was Abū al-Qāsim ‘Ubayd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn ‘Abd Allāh ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn Abī al-Ḥasan ibn Khusraw Pirūz (Fīrūz) ibn Hurmuz (Urmī) ibn Bahrām (al-Mihrāwān) from the lineage of Ardashīr ibn Pāpak (Bābak) and [known as] al-Kalwādhānī.¹⁵³ He was the director of the Bureau of al-Sawād succeeding Abū al-Ḥasan ‘Alī ibn ‘Isā, and he was head of the group of secretaries. Then he served as a nominal vizier, gaining increased authority in the bureau of Ibn al-Furāt. His birth was¹⁵⁴ ——— and he died ———. Among his books there was Land Tax (Al-Kharāj), two manuscripts, the first of which he wrote during the year twenty-six [A.D. 937/38] and the second during the year three hundred and thirty-six [A.D. 947/48].

Abū al-Ḥusayn Ishāq ibn Surayj, the Christian Secretary¹⁵⁵

Among his books there were:

Land Tax (Al-Kharāj), a thousand leaves; The Designated Land Tax (Al-Kharāj al-Ma’rūf), about two hundred leaves; his small book about the land tax, about one hundred leaves.

¹⁵² “And a collection of the works of men of understanding” and the title following are not in the Beatty MS.

¹⁵³ The names in parentheses are those given in the Beatty MS. The names preceding these are Persian, taken from Firdawsī, Shahnama, VII, 150–69, and VI, 254 ff. Instead of Hurmuz ibn Bahrām, Firdawsī gives Hurmuz ibn Yazdigird ibn Bahrām. For the town of al-Kalwādhān near Baghdād, see Yāqūt, Geog., V, 28.

¹⁵⁴ The Flügel text includes “before three hundred” (A.D. 912).

¹⁵⁵ This paragraph is not in the Flügel edition, but is in the Beatty MS.

Ibrāhīm ibn ‘Isā, the Christian

He was one of the secretaries with eloquent literary style and refined training. Among his books there were:

Account of al-Ḥawārī;¹⁵⁶ Epistles.

Abū Sa‘īd Wahb ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Ṭāzādh, the Secretary of al-Muṭī¹⁵⁷

He was one of the scholars whom we have known. He was distinguished, cultured, a writer of correspondence, a collector of valuable books, and a man who was spiritually good. He and Abū al-Ḥasan Ṭāzādh ibn ‘Isā were the last of the secretaries whom we saw in the service of Abū Ja‘far ibn Shirzād. Abū Sa‘īd died ———. Among his books there were:

Amplifications, about the book which his father Ibrāhīm wrote; a book in which he collected accounts of the group [of secretaries]; Epistles, [selected] from his elegant compositions.

Ibn *Naṣr*¹⁵⁸

He was Abū al-Ḥasan ‘Alī ibn Naṣr the Christian, son of a physician, who died a few months ago and was one of the men of letters who were distinguished and were authors. He told me about a number of his books, but I imagine that he never finished most of them. Among his books there were:

Amalgamation of Qualities, about fifteen hundred leaves—he wrote it in his handwriting and formed it to include both government and belles lettres;¹⁵⁹ Training of the Sultan, more than one thousand leaves.

¹⁵⁷ The Beatty MS leaves a blank space where Flügel includes the name Ṭāzādh in the title of this account. The Beatty MS has a small note of no importance on the margin at the end of the paragraph. Flügel gives some variations, which do not seem to be accurate.

Ibn al-Bāzyār¹⁶⁰

He was Abū 'Alī Aḥmad ibn Naṣr ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Bāzyār, a court companion of Sayf al-Dawlah. His father, Naṣr ibn al-Ḥusayn, was one of the people who moved up to Sāmarrā. He lived at the time of al-Mu'taḍid, whom he served and amused. His origin was from Khurāsān and he adopted the sport [of hunting] with birds of prey, various kinds being given to him by al-Mu'taḍid.

Abū 'Alī died at Aleppo during the lifetime of Sayf al-Dawlah, during the year three hundred and fifty-two [A.D. 963]. Among his books there were:

Formation of Elegant Literary Style; Speech.¹⁶¹

Ibn Zanjī, the Secretary¹⁶²

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ismā'il ibn Zanjī. He was distinguished for beauty of penmanship. Among his books there were:

His epistles; The Secretaries and the Profession.

Al-Marzubānī

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn 'Imrān ibn Mūsā ibn Sa'īd ibn 'Abd Allāh.¹⁶³ His origin was in Khurāsān and he was the last of the writers about historical traditions and composers of books whom I saw. He was a quoter of traditions, with a truthful tongue

¹⁵⁹ This first book listed is not in the Flügel edition, but Flügel adds a title, Distinction ("Al-Barā'ah"), which the Beatty MS lacks. Flügel omits mention of the number of leaves given by the Beatty MS with the second title. The Beatty MS gives the second title as Training of the Sultan, whereas Flügel gives Association of (with) the Sultan.

¹⁶¹ This last title is not in the Beatty MS.

¹⁶² The Beatty MS lacks this paragraph except for the words "Ibn Zanjī, the Secretary."

¹⁶³ The last two elements may be 'Ubayd Allāh instead of 'Abd Allāh.

and a broad knowledge of traditional authorities. He had also heard a great deal. His birth was during Jumādā al-Ākhirah [the sixth Muslim month] in the year two hundred and ninety-seven [A.D. 909/10], and he is still living in our time, which is the year three hundred and seventy-seven [A.D. 987/88], so we pray that Allāh, through His bounty and beneficence, may give him health and long life.¹⁶⁴ Among his books there are:¹⁶⁵

Pleasing (Kitāb al-Mu'niq), with accounts of the famous Pre-Islāmic poets, beginning with Imru' al-Qays and the members of his generation (category), and with a thorough investigation of the traditions about them. Then [he discusses the poets] who started before Islām and lived into the Islāmic period, with the Muslims following them and their generations. He deals with Jarīr and al-Farazdaq, with their generations (categories) among the early Muslims, citing the best of the traditions about them, until the beginning of the 'Abbāsīd regime, may Allāh strengthen, support, prolong, and extend it. He mentions Ibn Harmah and al-Ḥusayn ibn Muṭayr, together with those who made their poetry known. The number of leaves [in this book] is over five thousand.

Illuminating (Kitāb al-Mustanir), in which there are accounts of the recent poets who were famous and prosperous, with a selection of their poems according to their ages and periods. The first of them is Bashshār ibn Burd, the last one is Abū al-'Abbās 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Mu'tazz bi-Allāh, with both of whom may Allāh be well pleased. The number of leaves is six thousand, written in the handwriting of al-Marzubānī in sixty Sulaymānīyah volumes.¹⁶⁶

Profitable (Kitāb al-Mufīd), in which there are a number of sections. The first of these sections contains accounts of the Pre-Islāmic and Islāmic poets who were given surnames, with traditions as to which one of them

¹⁶⁵ The translation follows the sequence of titles as given in the Beatty MS. It is so different from the sequence in the Flügel edition that the transliteration of the Arabic is given to help identify the titles. The different editions have variations in the number of leaves given for each book.

¹⁶⁶ Evidently there was a leather cover for each volume (mujallad) of one hundred paper leaves. Sulaymānīyah most likely refers to the kind of paper used.

was identified with a surname and whether he was noted for his father's surname, or known in connection with his mother or the lineage of his grandfather, or related to his patrons, and also how these relationships were similar or were connected with the group as a whole.¹⁶⁷

In the second section there are mentioned the things quoted about the characteristics of the poets, together with the defects of their bodies and appearances, such as being Negroid, one-eyed, blind, weak-sighted, or leprous. There are also mentioned the things leaving traces on the body, from the hair of the head to the two feet, limb for limb. The third section is about the religious categories of the poets, such as the Shī'ah, the theologians, the Khawārij, al-muthimūn, the Jews, and the Christians, and those who followed their rites.¹⁶⁸

The last section mentions everyone who put aside the recitation of the poetry of Pre-Islāmic times so as to increase in importance and in Islām to become pious; also each one who left eulogy¹⁶⁹ so as to rise to a higher standard, or [put aside] satire to be complimentary, and [put aside] love poetry to be virtuous; also each one who devoted his poetry to some one subject, as did the Sayyid ibn Muḥammad al-Ḥimyārī and al-'Abbās ibn al-Aḥnaf, and those who followed their precedent.¹⁷⁰ It is a book of five thousand leaves.

The Alphabetical Book (Kitāb al-Mu'jam),¹⁷¹ in which are mentioned the poets alphabetically, starting with the ones whose names begin with alif (a), then those beginning with bā (b), to the end of the alphabet. It contains about five thousand names [of poets], with some poetry of each, a number of stanzas selected from his [each poet's] famous verse. It exceeds one thousand leaves.

The Acrostic (Kitāb al-Muwashshah), in which there is a description of the points which have caused the authorities (al-'ulamā') to disapprove

¹⁶⁷ This is a free translation. The last phrase is literally, "or entered in its aggregate."

¹⁶⁹ "Eulogy" (al-madīḥ) may be instead "indecent" (al-mudabbaj).

¹⁷¹ Sometimes this word has a different significance, but here it obviously means "alphabetical."

of some of the poets in connection with their poems [such as use of] kasrah [the vowel sign i], errors of pronunciation, inconsistent use of vowel signs in verses, repetition of the last syllable of a verse, irregular rhyming, changes, ambiguity, loose weaving of the composition, and other errors of poetry. It exceeds three hundred leaves.

Poetry (Kitāb al-Shi'r),¹⁷² a compendium of its excellencies, with a description of its benefits, its injuries and defects; also a description of its kinds and forms, measures, prosody, essential points, and selections; also the training of its composers and reciters, proof of its plagiarism and robbery, with other points about its varieties and forms. It exceeds two thousand leaves.

Poems of Women (Kitāb Ash'ār al-Nisā'), about five hundred leaves.¹⁷³ Poems of the Caliphs (Kitāb Ash'ār al-Khulafā'), with more than two hundred leaves. Things Quoted (Kitāb al-Muqtabas), with traditions about the grammarians of al-Baṣrah, mentioning the first person to speak about grammar and he who first compiled it, with traditions about al-Farrā' and the scholars of al-Baṣrah and al-Kūfah, who quoted from others, and who among them lived in the City of Peace [Baghdād]; about three thousand leaves.

Guide to the Right Way (Kitāb al-Murshid). In it are traditions about al-mutakallimūn and the People of Justice and Oneness [the Mu'tazilah], with something about their meetings and doctrines; about one thousand leaves. Poems Attributed to the Jinn (Kitāb Ash'ār Tunsab ilā al-Jinn),¹⁷⁴ about one hundred leaves.

Gardens (Kitāb al-Riyād),¹⁷⁵ in which are accounts of persons obsessed, arranged in categories. In it is a statement about [passionate] love and what results from it, with mention of its start and finish, together with the terminology and varieties connected with it, as recorded by the language scholars. [It also mentions] the derivations of these terms, with examples from the poems of Pre-Islām and of men who converted to Islām, as well as of Muslims, including the more recent ones; more than three thousand leaves.

¹⁷² The versions show variations; the translation follows the Beatty MS.

¹⁷³ In the Beatty MS the word for "book" (kitāb) is carelessly omitted in this title and the one following it.

¹⁷⁴ Flügel gives this title as follows: "Poems of Those Imitating the Jinn—in it he mentions whoever made an imitation in poetry; more than one hundred leaves."

¹⁷⁵ The translation follows the Beatty MS in which the sequence and order of sentences is different from what is in the Flügel edition.

The Clear (Kitāb al-Rā'iq).¹⁷⁶ In it there is a description of the characteristics of song, of its qualities, forms, and methods, together with traditions about the male and female singers among the freeborn, the handmaids, and the slaves; more than one thousand six hundred leaves.

The Seasons (Kitāb al-Azminah), in which there are the characteristics of the four seasons: summer, winter, and the two temperate ones; and also a description of heat and cold, clouds and lightning, winds and rain, seeking for fresh pasturage,¹⁷⁷ prayer for rain, and other things included in general descriptions of the spring and autumn. Then there are mentioned the beauties¹⁷⁸ of the celestial sphere, the stations of the zodiac, the sun, and the moon with its stations, and also the characteristics ascribed to them by the Arabs and their poems about them.¹⁷⁹ Also mentioned are the planets and fixed stars, the characteristics of night and day, the Arab and Persian days, the months and years, periods and eras, together with what appears in every one of the sections of this book in connection with language, historical traditions, and poems, giving explanations. It is about two thousand leaves.

Flowers and Fruits (Kitāb al-Anwār wa-al-Thimār). In it are some of the things said about the rose, the narcissus, and the other flowers in poetry, with what is said about them in the records and traditions. Then there are the fruits and mention of palms and all the fruits in general, with what there is for them of praise in poetry and prose; about five hundred leaves.

Traditions of the Barmak Family (Kitāb Akhbār al-Barāmakah),¹⁸⁰ in which there is a description [of the period] from their beginnings until the downfall of the regime, ending with their disgrace; about five hundred leaves.

¹⁷⁶ Flügel gives the title Kitāb al-Wāthiq, followed by the paragraph as given here. The Beatty MS gives the title used in the translation, but lacks part of the paragraph.

¹⁷⁷ In the Beatty MS "fresh pasturage" (al-rawwād) is clearly written, but it is given incorrectly by Flügel.

¹⁷⁹ This is a very free translation but seems to give the meaning implied in the Arabic text. The sentence which follows is clearer in the Beatty MS than in the Flügel version.

¹⁸⁰ In the Flügel text this paragraph is much shorter than it is in the Beatty MS, which is translated here.

Distinguished for Excellence (Kitāb al-Mufaḍḍal or al-Mifḍal),¹⁸¹ about clear speaking, Arabic, and writing; about seven hundred leaves. Congratulations (Kitāb al-Tahānī); about five hundred leaves. Submission and Pilgrimage (Kitāb al-Taslim wa-al-Ziyārah); four hundred leaves. Visiting (Kitāb al-'Iyādah);¹⁸² four hundred leaves. Consolations (Kitāb al-Ta'āzī);¹⁸³ about three hundred leaves.

Elegies (Kitāb al-Marāthī); five hundred leaves. The Exalted Book (Kitāb al-Mu'allā), about the excellencies of the Qur'ān; two hundred leaves.¹⁸⁴ Fertilization of Minds (Kitāb Talqīḥ al-'Uqūl),¹⁸⁵ with more than one hundred sections, the first of them being about the mind, culture, learning, and similar things. It has more than three thousand leaves.

The Noble Book (Kitāb al-Mushrif), about the rule of the Prophet, may Allāh bless him and give him peace, his culture, his preaching, his Companions, with whom may Allāh be well pleased, and others, as well as about the testaments and the rule of the Arabs and Persians; one thousand five hundred leaves.¹⁸⁶ Traditions about Those Who Make Metaphors in Poems (Kitāb Akhbār man Tamaththal bi-al-Ash'ār); over one hundred leaves. Youth and Old Age (Kitāb al-Shabāb wa-al-Shayb); three hundred leaves. Crowned (Kitāb al-Mutawwaj), about justice and good living; over one hundred leaves. Brocaded (Adorned) (Kitāb al-Mudabbaj),¹⁸⁷ about banquets, invitations, and drink. Relief (Kitāb al-Faraj);¹⁸⁸ nearly one hundred leaves.

Gifts (Kitāb al-Hadāyā); about three hundred leaves. Gifts¹⁸⁹ (Kitāb al-Hadāyā), another manuscript in his own handwriting. Ornamented (Kitāb al-Muzakhraf), about the brothers (ikhwān) and companions (aṣḥāb); three hundred leaves. Traditions of Abū Muslim al-Khurāsānī, Giver of the Summons (Akhbār Abī Muslim al-Khurāsānī, Ṣāḥib

¹⁸¹ Flügel gives "Kitāb al-Mufaṣṣal, about clear speaking and eloquence."

¹⁸² The Flügel text gives Worship ("Kitāb al-'Ibādah").

¹⁸³ Flügel gives Raids ("Kitāb al-Maghāzī").

¹⁸⁴ This book is omitted in the Flügel version.

¹⁸⁵ The translation follows the Beatty MS; Flügel differs.

¹⁸⁶ The translation follows the Beatty MS; the number of pages and other details differ from Flügel.

¹⁸⁷ Flügel gives Praise ("Kitāb al-Madiḥ").

¹⁸⁸ The Arabic could also be Al-Furaj or Al-Farj. Flügel gives The Young ("Kitāb al-Farkh").

¹⁸⁹ This extra manuscript is mentioned in the Flügel text but omitted by the Beatty MS.

al-Da'wah);¹⁹⁰ one hundred leaves. Supplication (Invocation) (Kitāb al-Du'ā'); about two hundred leaves.

The Ancients (Kitāb al-Awā'il),¹⁹¹ in which are accounts of the ancient Persians and of the People of Justice and Oneness [the Mu'tazilah], with something about their sessions and point of view; about one thousand leaves. The Newly Acquired (Kitāb al-Mustatraf), about the foolish and unusual; over three hundred leaves. Traditions of the Children, the Wives, and the Family (Kitāb Akhbār al-Awlad wa-al-Zawjāt wa-al-Ahl), with praise and blame;¹⁹² two hundred leaves. Renunciation and Traditions of the Ascetics (Kitāb al-Zuhd wa-Akhbār al-Zuhhād); over two hundred leaves.¹⁹³ Blame of the World (Kitāb Dhamm al-Dunyā); over one hundred leaves.¹⁹⁴ The Shining (Kitāb al-Munir), about repentance, good work, piety, abstention from the illegal, and similar things; over three hundred leaves. Warnings and Mention of Death (Kitāb al-Mawā'iz wa-Dhikr al-Mawt); over five hundred leaves.¹⁹⁵

Traditions about Those Near Death (Kitāb Akhbār al-Muṭṭaḍirīn); one hundred leaves.¹⁹⁶ The Chamberlains (Kitāb al-Ḥujjāb);¹⁹⁷ one hundred leaves. Al-Ḥātim (Kitāb al-Ḥātim).¹⁹⁸ Abū Ḥanīfah and His Associates (Kitāb Abi Ḥanīfah wa-Aṣḥābiḥi).¹⁹⁹ Traditions of 'Abd al-Ṣamad ibn al-Mu'adhdhal (Kitāb Akhbār 'Abd al-Ṣamad ibn al-Mu'adhdhal); about two hundred leaves.²⁰⁰ Traditions of Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ḥamzah al-'Alawī (Kitāb Akhbār Abi 'Abd Allāh

¹⁹⁰ Abū Muṣṭān was called Giver of the Summons because he sounded the call to overthrow the Umayyad caliphs and to establish the 'Abbāsīd regime, A.D. 750.

¹⁹¹ For this book, the Beatty MS gives only the title and the words "about one hundred and fifty leaves."

¹⁹² Flügel adds a few words to this clause, but without changing the meaning.

¹⁹³ Flügel omits the number of leaves, but adds "in his own handwriting."

¹⁹⁴ As differences in the texts for this and a number of titles which follow are unimportant, they are not described in detail. The translation follows the Beatty MS.

¹⁹⁵ Flügel omits this title.

¹⁹⁶ This title is not clear in the Beatty MS; it may also be Traditions about Settled People ("Kitāb Akhbār al-Muṭṭaḍirīn").

¹⁹⁷ Instead of "chamberlains" (al-ḥujjāb), this word might be "curtain" (al-ḥijāb). Flügel gives Chiding the Chamberlains ("Kitāb Dhamr al-Ḥujjāb").

¹⁹⁸ The Flügel version has "The Poetry of Ḥātim al-Ta'i" ("Kitāb Shi'r Ḥātim al-Ta'i"); about one hundred leaves." See Ḥātim, chief of the Tayy Tribe, in the Biog. Index.

¹⁹⁹ Flügel has "Traditions of Abū Ḥanīfah al-Nu'mān ibn Thābit" ("Kitāb Akhbār Abū Ḥanīfah al-Nu'mān ibn Thābit"); about five hundred leaves."

²⁰⁰ This title and the ones which follow are in the Flügel version, but not in the Beatty MS.

Muḥammad ibn Ḥamzah al-'Alawī); about one hundred leaves. Traditions of the Kings of Kindah (Kitāb Akhbār Mulūk Kindah); about two hundred leaves. Traditions of Abū Tammām (Kitāb Akhbār Abi Tammām) by itself; about one hundred leaves. Traditions of Shu'bah ibn al-Ḥajjāj (Kitāb Akhbār Shu'bah ibn al-Ḥajjāj); about one hundred leaves. Cancellation of Contracts (Kitāb Naskh al-'Uḥūd); about two hundred leaves, addressed to the judges.

He had many books about the *sawād*²⁰¹ which he started to write and among which there were:

Essences of Poetry (Kitāb An'ān al-Shi'r), about praise and satire, glory and generosity.²⁰² Traditions about the Generous (Kitāb Akhbār al-Ajwād). Descriptions (Qualities) (Kitāb al-Awṣāf). Metaphors (Allegories) (Kitāb al-Tashbihāt).

From the sources written in his own handwriting there have come down to us more than twenty thousand leaves.

Ibn al-Tustarī²⁰³

He was Sa'īd ibn Ibrāhīm ibn al-Tustarī, surnamed Abū al-Ḥusayn, a Christian living near the present timé. Both he and his father worked for the Banū al-Furāt.²⁰⁴ He adhered to rhymed prose in his writings. Among his books there were:

The Shortened and the Lengthened, according to alphabetical sequence; Masculine and Feminine, according to the same sequence; Epistles, about the invasions, according to this sequence; his collected epistles about each skill of his workmanship.

Ibn Ḥājib al-Nu'mān

He was Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Nu'mān ibn 'Abd Allāh, the secretary.²⁰⁵ Abū al-Ḥusayn was one of the unique men of the period for virtue, ²⁰¹ Although the word sawād as a rule referred to central and southern 'Irāq, here it may mean "the populace" or "environs." This paragraph is not found in the Flügel edition.

²⁰² In the original the word kitāb is omitted before some of the titles, but it is understood.

²⁰³ The Beatty MS gives al-Tushtarī, which is evidently an error. Yāqūt, Geog., I, 847, includes Tustar, but does not mention Tushtar.

²⁰⁴ The Banū al-Furāt were members of the family of the famous vizier Ibn al-Furāt.

²⁰⁵ A marginal note in the Beatty MS has Abū al-Ḥājib. Flügel has "'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Ibrāhīm, whose father was Ḥājib al-Nu'mān Abū 'Abd Allāh."

genius, and knowledge of writing in government offices. During the days of Mu'izz al-Dawlah he was in charge of the Bureau of al-Sawād. No library of books has been seen that was better than his collection, for it contained every book, either by itself or in a compilation, each one written in the handwriting of the scholar concerned. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Poems of the Secretaries; Traditions of Women, known as the book of Ibn al-Dukkānī; Intoxication of Daytime (Odor of the Day), about neighborhood traditions;²⁰⁶ Youth; Negligence (Hazard) and Gathering of Flowers; The Courtesy of Superiors, in Office and Retired.

Al-Ṣābi Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Hilāl ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Hārūn

He was a writer of correspondence, a master of literary style, a poet, a scholar of geometry, and a man engrossed in developing writing, literary style, and poetry. His birth was after the year three hundred and twenty [A.D. 932] and he died before three hundred and eighty [A.D. 990].²⁰⁷ He wrote:

Anthology of Epistles, written as late as this our own time—about a thousand pages; traditions of his family and the children of his father, which he wrote for some of his children; The Government of the Banū Buwayh, Traditions of the Daylam, and the Beginning of Their Rule, known as “Al-Tājī” and “Al-ʿAḍudī”;²⁰⁸ Missives of al-Sharīf al-Raḍī Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Mūsawī, [surnamed] Abū al-Ḥasan; Anthology of Poetry.

Al-Muḥallabī Abū Muḥammad al-Ḥasan ibn Muḥammad

He was the vizier of Mu'izz al-Dawlah,²⁰⁹ a poet, a master of literary style, the best of the period during his time. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Epistles and Edicts; a collection of his poems, which were only a few.

²⁰⁶ This title and the one which follows are lacking in the Beatty MS.

²⁰⁷ This sentence is not in the Beatty MS, which must have been copied before A.D. 990, or based on the original written before that time.

²⁰⁸ For Buwayh and Daylam, see Hitti, Arabs, p. 470. Al-tājī signifies “the crowned” and the second title honors the chief ʿAḍud al-Dawlah. The two titles following are not found in the Beatty MS. Al-Sharīf al-Raḍī died A.D. 998/99, after the death of al-Naḍīm.

²⁰⁹ The name Mu'izz al-Dawlah and the mention of a collection of poems are in the Flügel edition, but not the Beatty MS.

Ibn al-ʿAmīd

He was Abū al-Faḍl. He wrote:

Collection of Epistles; The Method, about eloquent literary styles.²¹⁰

Al-Ṣāhib Abū al-Qāsim ibn ʿAbbād

He was unique in his time, singled out during his period for eloquence of literary style, clarity, and poetry. Among his books there were:²¹¹

Collection of Epistles; Sufficiency, about epistles; Al-Zaydiyah; Feasts and the Excellencies of al-Nawrūz (New Year's).

Another Group

Ḥaṣṣuwayh

His name was ——— and he was the grandfather of ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz al-ʿAsjadī al-Marūzī the poet. From what his mother said he used to quote “——— as if you were from the womb of a mixed breed (dispersed), except for the mother of Father Adam.”²¹² He was one of the excellent tax officials, superior in his profession and the first to compose a book about the land tax. Among his books there were: Land Tax (Al-Kharāj); Epistles.

Ibn ʿAbd al-Karīm

His name was Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn ʿAbd al-Karīm ibn Abī Sahl al-Aḥwal, surnamed Abū al-ʿAbbās. He was one of the outstanding and excellent men among the secretaries, well informed about the administration of the land tax and more capable in connection with that type of work than the other men of his time. He died during the year two hundred and seventy [A.D. 883/84]. Among his books there was Land Tax (Al-Kharāj).

²¹⁰ This title is not in the Beatty MS.

²¹¹ This sentence and the list of books are in Flügel, but not the Beatty MS.

²¹² The quotation is not in Flügel and a note on the margin of the Beatty MS says that this account is not in the penmanship of the author. The quotation lacks some words and is a joke, impossible to translate with certainty. The Beatty MS lacks the title Epistles.

Ibn al-Māshitah

He was Abū al-Ḥasan ‘Alī ibn al-Ḥasan, nicknamed Ibn al-Māshitah by the persons whom he treated harshly.²¹³ He lived near our own time and was skillful and outstanding in connection with finances and the administration of the land tax. Among his books there were:

Answer of the Stubborn; The Excellent Book about the Land Tax (al-Kharāj); Instruction about Certain Consultations, which I have seen, written in his own handwriting.

Ibn Bashshār

Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Sulaymān ibn Bashshār was the secretary and teacher of Abū ‘Abd Allāh al-Kūfī, the vizier. He was one of the secretaries who excelled in eloquent literary style and professional skill. Among his books there were:

The large book, Land Tax (Al-Kharāj), a rough copy of which I saw written in his own handwriting—about one thousand leaves; Drink (Wine) and Court Companionship, written in his own handwriting.

‘Abd Allāh ibn Ḥammād ibn Marwān, the Secretary

I know nothing more about his life. Among his books there was The Meaning of White Hair, Its Refinements, the Excellency of Its Hues, the Arrangement of Its Front Parts, What Is Said about It in Prose and Poetry, and the Dyes.

Another Secretary

He was known as Ya‘qūb ibn Muḥammad ibn ‘Alī. Among his books there was Dyes, the Reproach of White Hair, and Praise of Youth.

Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn ‘Alī ibn Khiyār, the Secretary

Among his books there was Land Tax (Al-Kharāj).

²¹³ This nickname meant “son of the woman hairdresser.” He was not as cruel as other officials, but evidently used harsh methods of collecting taxes, as the title of his book Answer of the Stubborn suggests.

Ibn Surayj²¹⁴

He is of our time, living in this our age. His name is Ishāq ibn Yaḥyā ibn Surayj the Christian, surnamed Abū al-Ḥusayn. He has an excellent knowledge of the government departments, supervision of public works, and the administration of the land tax. He is also preeminent and knowledgeable in the study of the stars.²¹⁵ His birth was during the year three hundred [A.D. 912/13], during Sha‘bān [the eighth Muslim month]. Among his books there are:

The large book, The Land Tax (Al-Kharāj), which he divided into two sections and six stages; the small book, The Technique of the Land Tax; The Work of Consultation in an Audience [presence of a high official]; Interpretation of the Ordinances about Births, about one hundred pages; Gatherings Together of History, which he collected.

Bāḥ

He was Abū ‘Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn ‘Abd Allāh ibn Ghālib al-Iṣbahānī, whose nickname was Bāḥ. He was a master of literary style, a writer of correspondence, and a secretary, who was called “Bāḥ” because he said in one of his verses: “He revealed (bāḥ) what was in the soul, making it known.”

He came to Baghdād, where he stayed with al-Nighyānī, the secretary, for whose children he composed his book about epistles. Among his books there were:

Collection of Epistles, in eight sections. He wrote an additional ninth, which he called The Book of Correlating Prose and Poetry; Al-Tawsīkh wa-al-Tarshīh, about some of the dualists among the Shu‘ūbiyah;²¹⁶ Oratory and Eloquence; Poverty (Al-Faqr).

²¹⁴ This man should be compared with Abū al-Ḥusayn Ishāq ibn Surayj. As his son’s name was al-Ḥusayn, the family must have become converted to Islām.

²¹⁵ The Flügel version has “grammar” (al-naḥw), but the Beatty MS clearly gives the word for “stars” (al-nujum).

²¹⁶ This title is given as it is written in the Beatty MS, perhaps meaning, “Fouling and Administering Well.” But the first word is perhaps meant to be al-tawshīh (“arranging verses”) or al-tawshīj (“binding together”), while the last word may mean “rearing” or “educating.” The word “dualists” is taken from the Beatty MS, which differs from the Flügel text. The term seems to be logical, as there were many Manichaeans and Zoroastrians among the Shu‘ūbiyah, or non-Arabs. The Beatty MS gives Al-Fiqr for the last title, which is very likely an error.

Abū Muslim

He was Muḥammad ibn Muslim ibn Baḥr al-Iṣbahānī, a secretary, writer of correspondence, master of literary style, theologian, and debator. Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā used to have connections with him, and desired his company. Among his books there were:

A Collection of Explanations for the Interpretation of the Revelation According to the School of Thought of the Mu'tazilah, about exegesis of the Qur'ān—a large book;²¹⁷ a collection of his epistles.

Ibn Ṭabāṭabā al-'Alawī

He is mentioned in connection with poetry and the poets. Among his books there were:

Support of the Exalted; Standards (Examining) of Poetry; Poetry and the Poets, his selections; an anthology of his poetry.²¹⁸

Al-Diyarmī

His name was ———. Diymart is in the region of Iṣbahān. He was a master of literary style, an author, and a grammarian, among whose books there was Training of Character.

Ibn Abī al-'Awādhil

He was ———. Among his books there was Excellence and Eloquence.

Abū al-Ḥusayn Muḥammad ibn 'Alī al-Iṣbahānī al-Diyarmī

Among his books there were:

The Faults of Thaqīf and the Rest of the Arabs; Al-Ḥamāsah.²¹⁹

'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn 'Isā al-Hamadhānī

He was the secretary of Bakr ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Abī Dulaf. He was a poet and secretary, among whose books there was Pronunciations (Dialects).

²¹⁷ The Beatty MS omits "a large book."

²¹⁸ The anthology is not mentioned in the Beatty MS.

²¹⁹ For the Thaqīf Tribe, see "Thaqīf," Enc. Islam, IV, 734. Al-Ḥamāsah is omitted by the Beatty MS. It means "valor" and is often used as the title of an anthology of poetry.

Ibn 'Abdakān

His name was Muḥammad ——— and he was a secretary of the Ṭulūn family. He was eloquent, a writer of correspondence, and a master of literary style, who wrote a large collection of epistles.

Ibn Abī al-Baḥl

His name was Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā ibn Abī al-Baḥl, surnamed Abū al-Ḥusayn.²²⁰ He was summoned from Iṣbahān to be promoted to act as vizier during the days of al-Muqtadir. He was eloquent, a writer of correspondence, and a master of literary style, one of the people of Marwān.²²¹ He was also a poet of excellent quality, with natural talent, who wrote a collection of epistles. His epistles were about the conquest of al-Baṣrah.²²²

Muḥammad ibn al-Qāsim al-Karkhī²²³

He was one of the secretaries who were transferred to the vizierate. He was a writer of correspondence and a master of literary style, who wrote:

Anthology of Epistles; Anthology of Poetry.

Al-Bāḥath 'an Mi'yās²²⁴

His name was Muḥammad ibn Sahl ibn al-Marzubān al-Karkhī, surnamed Abū Maṣṣūr. He was one of the people of al-Karkh and one of the masters of eloquence and literary style. A man who saw him told me that he had a paralyzed hand.²²⁵ Among his books there was The Limit of Perfection (Al-Muntahī fī al-Kamāl), comprising twelve books (chapters), which were:

²²⁰ The Flügel text does not give "Aḥmad ibn." The translation follows the Beatty MS. A father and a son have probably been confused. See Ibn Abī al-Baḥl for the members of this family.

²²¹ Flügel has al-marwāt, but al-Marwān, a part of Marw (Merv), seems to be the word meant.

²²² The reference to his epistles is not found in the Beatty MS.

²²³ Flügel gives al-Maqsam instead of al-Karkhī. The second title is lacking in the Beatty MS.

²²⁴ The name means "searching for the difficult in learning," and is given in the Beatty MS. Flügel has a different form, almost certainly incorrect.

²²⁵ In the Flügel edition, this statement is given incorrectly.

Praise of Culture; Description of Rhetoric (Eloquence); Prayer and Glorification; Passionate Love and Separation; Love of Fatherlands; Congratulations and Consolation; Hope and the Hoped-For; Youthful Amatory Praises and Beseechings; Praise and Blame; Apologies (Excuses); Pronunciations (Dialects); Values of the Government.

Abū Saʿīd ʿAbd al-Raḥmān ibn Aḥmad al-Iṣbahānī²²⁶

He wrote Epistles.

Al-Abharī al-Iṣbahānī

Nothing more is known about him [except that] among his books there were:

Formation of Literary Style; Training of the Secretary; The Court Companion.²²⁷

Al-Jayhānī

He was Abū ʿAbd Allāh Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Naṣr al-Jayhānī, the secretary, vizier of the lord of Khurāsān, among whose books there were:

Roadways and Kingdoms; Usage of Examples of Writing the Contracts of the Caliphs and Governors;²²⁸ Additions to the book of al-Nāshī about discourses;²²⁹ Epistles.

Abū Zayd al-Balkhī

His name was Aḥmad ibn Sahl and he was distinguished in connection with both ancient and modern sciences. In his compositions and compilations he followed the usage of the philosophers, but, as he resembled the men of letters and was closest to them, I have included him in this section of the book.

²²⁶ The Beatty MS has Abū Saʿīd instead of Abū Saʿīd. The translation follows Flügel, which is probably correct. The Beatty MS, however, corrects Flügel by giving Al-Abharī as a separate heading rather than running it into the preceding paragraph.

²²⁷ Last title not in the Beatty MS.

²²⁸ The translation follows what seems to be indicated in the Beatty MS. The Flügel edition varies.

²²⁹ The Flügel edition is garbled, but the Beatty MS clearly gives al-Nāshī, although which one of the men with this name is not explained. The final title is not in the Beatty MS.

It is said of Abū Zayd that he said:

Al-Ḥusayn ibn ʿAlī al-Marwarrūdhī, the brother of Suʿlūk, used to conduct familiar and continuous prayers for me, but when I dictated my book about investigation by methods of interpretation, he discontinued these [prayers] for me. Then Abū ʿAlī²³⁰ al-Jayhānī, the vizier of Naṣr ibn Aḥmad, had slave girls with whom he used to favor me, but when I dictated my book Offerings and Sacrifices, he withheld them from me.

Al-Ḥusayn [al-Marwarrūdhī] was a Qarnatī, al-Jayhānī a dualist, and Abū Zayd was accused of heresy. But it has been related that al-Balkhī²³¹ said, "This man," meaning Abū Zayd, "is suffering an injustice, for he is a believer in the oneness [of Allāh]. I know it from other people and also because I was brought up with him. Although it [heresy] might have come from logic, we studied logic together and thanks be to Allāh did not become heretics."

Among the books of Abū Zayd there were:²³²

The Ordinances of Religions; The Categories (Divisions) of the Sciences; Choice of Conduct (Choice of Journeys); the large book, Politics; the small book, Politics; Perfection of the Faith;²³³ Excellency of the Art of Writing; Advantages of Bodies and Souls;²³⁴ The Names of Allāh, Exalted and Sublime, and His Attributes; The Making of Poetry; The Excellency of the Science (Knowledge) of Historical Traditions; Names, Surnames, and Nicknames; Names of Things; Grammar and Conjugation; The Picture and the Pictured; his epistle about the definitions (limits) of philosophy; What Is Correct about Judgments of the Stars; Refutation of the Worshippers of Idols; Excellence of the Mathematical Sciences; about divulging²³⁵ the sciences of philosophy; Offerings and Sacrifices; Infallibility of the Prophets, for Whom May There Be Peace.²³⁶

²³⁰ "ʿAlī" may be a mistake, as he is usually called Abū ʿAbd Allāh.

²³¹ This was probably Muḥammad ibn al-Faḍl ibn al-ʿAbbās al-Balkhī, who died in A.D. 931, three years before the death of Abū Zayd al-Balkhī.

²³² The list given here should be compared with Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (1), 141-44.

²³³ See Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (1), 149 bottom. There is a note on the margin of the Beatty MS implying that this was an explanation of the perfection of religion.

²³⁴ Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (1), 142 l. 7, adds, "known as The Two Discourses."

²³⁵ Flügel gives ifshā ("divulging"), Yāqūt aqṣām ("dividing"), and the Beatty MS iqṭinā ("acquiring").

²³⁶ The pious phrase is not found in the Beatty MS.

Arrangement of the Qur'an; Qawāri' al-Qur'an;²³⁷ The Bold and Those Devoted to God (Al-Futtāk wa-al-Nussāk); a book in which he collected what was difficult to understand among the strange things in the Qur'an; about how the "Sūrah al-Ḥamd"²³⁸ is representative of the Qur'an as a whole; Replies of²³⁹ Abū al-Qāsim al-Ka'bī; Rarities among Various Sciences (Rarities in Various Forms); Replies of the People of Persia; Explanation of the Figures in the Book, "Heaven and the World," by Abū Ja'far al-Khazīn; Replies of Abū 'Alī ibn Abī Bakr ibn al-Muẓaffar, known as Ibn Muḥtaj; Replies of Abū Ishāq al-Mu'addab [Ibrāhīm al-Ḥarbī]; Verbal Nouns (Origins); Replies to the Questions of Abū al-Faḍl al-Sukkarī; Chess and Backgammon; The Superiority of Makkah over Other Places; Reply of the Epistle of Abū 'Alī ibn al-Munir al-Ziyādī; Awakening of the Secretaries;²⁴⁰ the large book, Investigation of Interpretations; the clarifying epistle to the person reproached;²⁴¹ his epistle praising the profession of the warrāq; his will (testament).

Al-Bushī²⁴²

He was Abū al-Qāsim ——. Although I never saw any book of his, information was given to me by Abū 'Alī ibn Sawwār,²⁴³ the secretary, to whom may Allāh show mercy, who established the library of the endowment (al-waqf) at al-Baṣrah, and who was devoted to the sciences and strong in his passion for them. He told me, "There are some of his [al-Bushī's] books in my library at al-Baṣrah."

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I am doubtful about "al-Bushī"; is it written with a shīn (sh) or a sīn (s)? "Bust" is known to be a place in Sijistān, but we do not know "Bush." That which made Abū 'Alī [ibn Sawwār] feel that the pronunciation

²³⁷ Verses recited for protection against men and demons.

²³⁸ The opening sūrah of the Qur'an.

²³⁹ The phrases translated as "replies of" may really refer to the replies of al-Balkhī in his disputes with other authors, in which case "replies to" would be the accurate translation.

²⁴⁰ The words given both in Flügel and the Beatty MS are not entirely clear.

²⁴¹ The word translated as "clarifying" is al-sāliḥah, which usually means "previous" or "former."

²⁴² In the Flügel edition the heading is "Al-Bustī."

²⁴³ The Beatty MS spells the name as Suwār (meaning "cavalier").

was with shīn (sh) was the dotting [of the consonants].²⁴⁴ We shall inquire about this man and his books and, if Allāh so wills, make a supplement to his section. Abū 'Alī said that his books were:

Trees and Plants; Description of the Climate of Jarjān; his reply about the antiquity of the world; The Weakness of a Double-Faced Vizier; Preservation of Learning and Control of the Soul; his epistle about the ordinances of the principal organ of man's body.

Ḥamzah ibn al-Ḥasan

He was from the people of Iṣbahān, a man of letters and an author, among whose books there were:

Iṣbahān and Its Historical Traditions; Similitudes (Allegories); Kinds of Prayer; Mispronouncing (Al-Taṣhīf); Examples of Af'ala, into which both poetry and prose are introduced;²⁴⁵ Examples Derived from Proofs of Poetry; Information about al-Muṣhīf;²⁴⁶ Epistles; Illustrations, about tidings of joy.

Ḥukmwayh ibn 'Abdūs

He was from the region of the Mountain (al-Jabal). Nothing more is known about his life. Among his books there were:

Unusual Expressions (Al-Shawārid) in the Epistles; Literary Pursuits.

Samakah

He was the teacher of Ibn al-'Amīd and his name was Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn Sa'īd. Among his books there was Historical Traditions of the 'Abbāsids.

Kushājim²⁴⁷

He was Abū al-Faḥ Maḥmūd ibn al-Ḥusayn, whose literary work and poetry are famous. Among his books there were:

The Training of a Court Companion; Epistles; an anthology of his poetry.

²⁴⁴ See Yāqūt, Geog., I, 612, for Bust; p. 628 for Busht near Nisābūr. No place called Bush is mentioned.

²⁴⁵ Af'ala is a verb form. This title and the four which follow are not in the Beatty MS.

²⁴⁶ Al-Muṣhīf means a "written book," but is as a rule used for the Qur'an, as is evidently the case in this title.

²⁴⁷ The paragraph about Kushājim is in the Flügel edition, but not the Beatty MS.

Khushkanānjah, the Secretary

He was from among the people of Baghdād, but spent most of his life at al-Raqqah and then moved to al-Mawṣil. His name was 'Alī ibn Waṣīf. The meaning of the name 'Alī was derived by the language authorities.²⁴⁸ He composed a number of books, which 'Abdān, the chief of the Ismā'īliyah, attributed to himself. He was friendly and agreeable to me. He died at al-Mawṣil, a Shī'ī.²⁴⁹ Among his books there was Explaining and Making Straight, about the institution of the land tax (al-kharāj) and its usages.

His Son, Abū al-Hasan Aḥmad ibn 'Alī²⁵⁰

He was a secretary, poet, and master of literary style. He died in the City of Peace [Baghdād], there being among his books:

Prose Joined to Verse (Prose Connected in Sequence); The Production of Literary Style (The Art of Rhetoric); Benefits; an anthology of his poetry.

Ibn Kathīr al-Aḥwāzī

He was Abū Bakr Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Faḍl. Among his books there was Virtues of the Secretaries.²⁵¹

Abū Namlah al-Numaylī

He was also called al-Namlī, but we know nothing about his life. Among his books there was Precious Things (Al-Shudhūr), about the counseling of the caliphs and governors (umarā').

²⁴⁸ The Flügel text apparently confuses this phrase and the Beatty MS does not make clear exactly what the author meant. Literally the passage is "His name was 'Alī from the masters of literary style in its meaning."

²⁴⁹ "A Shī'ī" is not in the Beatty MS.

²⁵⁰ This paragraph with its list of book titles is given very clearly in the Beatty MS but badly confused in the Flügel version. The Beatty MS does not mention the anthology of his poetry.

²⁵¹ Flügel has manāqib ("virtues"), which is probably correct. In the Beatty MS the only word which at all fits the letters is muta'wīk ("defective").

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Third Section of the Third Chapter

of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed, including accounts of the court companions, associates, men of letters, singers, buffoons, slap-takers, and jesters, with the names of their books.¹

Account of Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm al-Mawṣilī, His Father and Family

Ibrāhīm was born during the year one hundred and twenty-five [A.D. 742/43]. He was Ibrāhīm ibn Maymūn [al-Mawṣilī]. Maymūn's name was Māhān, but they changed it to Maymūn. Abū al-Faḍl Ḥammād ibn Ishāq said, "My father gave me the genealogy of my grandfather Ibrāhīm, saying that he was Ibrāhīm ibn Māhān ibn Bahman (Bahmān) ibn Nusk."²

Yazīd al-Muhallabī said, "Ishāq told me, 'We are Persians from among the people of Arrajān. Our protégés (patrons) are the Ḥanzalah, who have lands among us!' But still he was called al-Mawṣilī."³

Al-Ṣūlī⁴ said, "Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm had as sons Ḥamīd, Ḥammād, Aḥmad, Ḥāmid, Ibrāhīm, and Faḍl. Among the offspring of Ibrāhīm al-Mawṣilī the only singers were Ishāq and Tayyāb."⁵

² The Flügel edition omits "my father."

³ Flügel has Arrajān, an area south of Shīrāz, whereas the Beatty MS has Arkān, probably an error. See Yāqūt, Geog., I, 194, 210. For Ḥanzalah, see "Ḥanzala," Enc. Islam, II, 261.

⁴ Probably Ibrāhīm ibn al-'Abbās, rather than al-Ṣūlī described in the Biog. Index.

⁵ Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm was also Abū Muḥammad, but this first-born son must have died in childhood.

Ibrāhīm was born during the year one hundred and twenty-five [A.D. 742/43] and he died at Baghdād in the year one hundred and eighty-eight [A.D. 804], when he was sixty-four years old. Ishāq was born during the year one hundred and fifty [A.D. 767/68] and died in the year two hundred and thirty-five [A.D. 849/50], when his age was eighty-five. He was Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Māhān ibn Bahman ibn Nusk,⁶ whose origin was in Persia, but he fled from the oppressive taxation imposed upon him by the Banū Umayyah, coming to al-Kūfah, where he dwelt among the Banū Dārim.⁷

Ishāq used to say, "I do not want to die until the month of Ramaḍān goes by, so that I can profit by observing its fast and it [my death] will be when my balance is favorable."⁸ It is said that he fasted for some days at the start and, if the fast was not observed on any day, he gave a hundred gold coins (s., dīnār) as alms. At the end, his illness became so serious that he could not endure the fast. The illness resulted from a purge given to him. Idrīs ibn Abī Ḥafṣah composed an elegy for him, saying:

May Allāh, oh, Ibn al-Mawṣilī, with a shower
Of rain, water the tomb in which thou art a sojourner.
Gone thou hast, making the noble lonely and fearful;
No wonder an intimate weeps over thee!⁹

Ishāq was a quoter of poetry and great deeds. He met with the Arabian masters of literary style, both men and women, who when they entered the sultan's presence sought him out, remaining with him. He was also a poet who was skilled in the art of singing and trained in many sciences. He gained his livelihood from the sultan's multitude of gifts honoring his perfection and superiority.

⁶ Khallikān, I, 20 gives Nusk and the Beatty MS has Nusak; see Spiegel in ZDMG, IX (1855), 191.

⁷ As Ishāq lived after the end of the Umayyad regime, the last part of the sentence, "whose origin . . . among the Banū Dārim," probably refers to his grandfather. For the Banū Dārim, see Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 37.

⁸ The Beatty MS has mīzānī ("my balance," "my scales"), which evidently refers to weighing the soul on the Day of Judgment. Flügel gives mabarrātī.

⁹ This passage refers to the last month of the life of Ishāq, which was during Ramaḍān, when pious Muslims gain special merit by fasting, acts of charity, and studying the Qur'ān. Compare the rendering of the poem with Iṣbahānī, Aghānī, Part V, p. 130 top, which has a different wording.

The literary works which he himself composed were the following, not counting Kitāb al-Aghānī al-Kabīr (The Great Book of Songs) about which there was a disagreement, the circumstances of which we are going to explain:

His songs, which he sang; Traditions of 'Azzat al-Maylā'; Songs of Ma'bad; Traditions of Ḥammād 'Ajrād; Traditions of Ḥunayn al-Ḥirī;¹⁰ Traditions of Dhū al-Rumma; Traditions of Tuways; Traditions about the Singers of Makkah;¹¹ Traditions of Sa'id ibn Miṣjah; Traditions of al-Dallāl; Traditions of Muḥammad ibn 'Ā'ishah; Traditions of al-Abjar;¹² Traditions of Ibn Ṣāhib al-Waḍū'; Selections from the Songs [Addressed] to al-Wāthiq; Observations and Indications; Drinks, in which he quoted from al-'Abbās ibn Ma'an, Ibn al-Jaṣṣāṣ, and Ḥammād ibn Maysarah.¹³

Legacies of the Learned; Jewels of Speech (Al-Kalām); Al-Raqṣ wa-al-Zafn [types of dancing]; Melodious Singing and Cadence;¹⁴ Light-Footed (Al-Hadhlabīn); Epistle to 'Alī ibn Hishām; Qiyān al-Ḥijāz;¹⁵ Al-Qiyān; Selected Rare Forms; Traditions and Rare Forms;¹⁶ Court Companions;¹⁷ Convivial Pleasantries; Intimate Association of Brothers and Evening Conversation of Close Friends; Traditions of Ma'bad and Ibn Surayj and Their Songs; Traditions of al-Gharīd; Preference for Poetry and a Refutation of He Who Forbids It and Opposes It.

Information about Kitāb al-Aghānī al-Kabīr (The Great Book of Songs)¹⁸

I read what was written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Ubayd ibn al-Zubayr al-Kūfī al-Asadī:

¹⁰ Flügel has al-Khayrī instead of al-Ḥirī, evidently an error.

¹¹ This title is given incorrectly in the Flügel version.

¹² The Beatty MS has al-Abkhar, which is a mistake. The Flügel version gives the next title incorrectly.

¹³ The Flügel text incorrectly combines the first two names as one. The title which follows, Legacies of the Learned, is not in the Beatty MS.

¹⁴ The translation of this title and the following follows the Beatty MS, which differs from Flügel.

¹⁵ Qiyān here almost certainly refers to slave girls trained to sing and dance. Al-Ḥijāz is the holy land of Arabia.

¹⁶ Flügel gives "selections" instead of "traditions."

¹⁷ This title and the ones which follow are not in the Beatty MS.

¹⁸ Flügel includes this title in the list of books above. The Beatty MS has a separate heading.

Faḍl ibn Muḥammad al-Yazīdī related to me saying, "I was at the home of Ishāq [Abū Muḥammad] ibn Ibrāhīm al-Mawṣilī when a man came to him saying, 'Oh, Abū Muḥammad, give me Kitāb al-Aghānī.' Then he [Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm al-Mawṣilī] replied, 'Which book, the one which I myself composed, or the one composed for me?' By the one he himself composed, he had in mind the Book of Traditions about the Singers (Kitāb Akhbār al-Mughanniyīn), one by one, while the book compiled for him [referred to] the Great Book of Traditions about the Songs (Kitāb Akhbār al-Aghānī al-Kabīr), which is in use by the public."

Another Statement about This Subject

Abū al-Faraj al-Iṣbahānī related to me, saying:

Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Khalaf Wakī' told me, "I heard Ḥammād ibn Ishāq say, 'My father never composed this book, that is, Kitāb al-Aghānī al-Kabīr, and never saw it. The proof of this is that most of its poems attributed [to my father] have been collected from traditions about them and from what has been sung from them as late as this our own time. Furthermore, most of the genealogies of the singers are erroneous. What my father did compile from the collections of their songs points to the falsity of this book. For truly a warrāq of my father's wrote it after his death, except for "Al-Rukḥṣah,"¹⁹ which is the first part of the book and which my father did compose. All of its traditions, however, are from our quotations."

Abū al-Faraj also said to me:

I heard this from Abū Bakr Wakī' as a statement, which I memorized, but putting it into words I may add or subtract something. Moreover, Jahẓah told me that he knows the warrāq who wrote it, his name being Sandī ibn 'Alī. His shop is at Ṭāq al-Zibl (the Dung Arch) and he served as a warrāq for Ishāq [al-Mawṣilī]. He and a partner who was with him agreed about writing it. This book was known in former times as Kitāb al-Sarāh (Book of the Best).²⁰ It has eleven sections, each section being called by its beginning [line]. The first section of the book is "Al-Rukḥṣah," which is the composition of Ishāq, about which there is no doubt or disagreement.

¹⁹ Here rukḥṣah, probably meaning "indulgence," very likely implies that although singing was not encouraged by religion, it was granted indulgence by God.

²⁰ Perhaps this title is meant to be Kitāb al-Shudāh ("Book of Singing" or "Book of Chanting Songs").

Order of the Sections of the Book [Kitāb al-Aghānī al-Kabīr], Quoted until the Present Time

- First:²¹ Passion I plucked from her as a child,
And her love did not cease in strength to grow and increase.
- Second: I do not bear the ancient grudge against them,
For the chief of the people is not one who harbors malice.
- Third: Spend some time with Zaynab, for he has ransomed the riders.
Little will there be of condolence, if tomorrow is the move.
- Fourth: Stop, let us weep for the memory of a beloved,
And an abode at the bottom of the sands between al-Dakhūl and Ḥawmal.²²
- Fifth: Has he complained because²³ wealth comes and goes,
What remains of wealth being tradition and remembrance?
- Sixth: Oh, mistress of the camel litter, bend towards us,
For if thou dost not do so, wrong wilt thou do.
- Seventh: Oh, dwelling of 'Ātikah, where free I am from concern for the enemy
And where my heart is in safe keeping.
- Eighth: Passion your inflamed soul has aroused;
In the early morn at Tūḍīh, behold the camel litters.²⁴
- Ninth: For thou art as the night, which overtakes me,
As though I imagined that the road from you was a highway.
- Tenth: If her people wronged her dwelling.

Ishāq composed accounts of a group of poets. Among them there were:

Traditions of Ḥassān [ibn Thābit]; Traditions of Dhū al-Rummaḥ [Ghaylān ibn 'Uqbah]; Traditions of al-Aḥwaṣ [ʿAbd Allāh ibn Muḥammad]; Traditions of Jamīl [Abū 'Amr ibn 'Abd Allāh]; Traditions

²² For these desert names, also mentioned in a poem of Imru' al-Qays, see Yāqūt, Geog., II, 559.

²³ A more literal translation is "has he blamed that."

²⁴ The camel litters were covered seats on the camel's backs in which the women sat.

of Kuthayyir [ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān]; Traditions of Nuṣayb [Abū al-Ḥajnā]; Traditions of 'Aqīl ibn 'Ullafah; Traditions of Ibn Harmah [Ibrāhīm ibn 'Alī].²⁵

Ḥammād ibn Ishāq [ibn Ibrāhīm al-Mawṣilī]

[Ibrāhīm ibn al-'Abbās] al-Ṣūlī said, "Ḥammād was a man of letters, who quoted [poetry and traditions]. He shared with his father Ishāq much of what he heard. He also met the great men among his elders.²⁶ He heard [lectures by] Abū 'Ubaydah and al-Aṣma'i and composed books about literature, absorbing most of his father's learning."

Another person said Ḥammād was nicknamed "al-Bārid" (the Cold One) and Yahyā ibn 'Alī related, "I said to my father, 'Why is Ḥammād called "al-Bārid"?' He replied, 'My son, they have done him wrong. He used to sit by his father, Ishāq, and Ishāq was like a kindled fire, brilliant with impulsiveness of temperament.'"²⁷ Ḥammād died ———. Among his books there were:

Drinks; Traditions of al-Ḥuṭay'ah; Traditions of Dhū al-Rumnah; 'Urwah ibn Udhaynah; a selection of the songs of his grandfather, Ibrāhīm [al-Mawṣilī]; Traditions of Ru'bah [ibn 'Abd Allāh al-'Ajjāj]; Traditions of 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Qays al-Ruqayyāt; Traditions of the Court Companions.²⁸

Traditions about the Family of al-Munajjim, in Order of Sequence

The name of Abū Manṣūr was Abān Ḥusnus ibn Warīd ibn Kād ibn Mahāndādh Ḥusnus ibn Farūkhzādh ibn Ashtād Ziyār ibn Meher Ḥusnus ibn Yazdijird.²⁹

²⁵ This title is not in the Beatty MS.

²⁶ This probably refers to persons who were authorities for Arabic poetry and literature, although they might also have been tribal chiefs, government officials, learned scholars, or the elderly men of his father's acquaintance.

²⁷ The son was, therefore, called "the Cold One" because he seemed cold alongside his impulsive father.

²⁸ This last title is not in the Beatty MS.

²⁹ It is impossible to know how to spell these Persian names, as the Arabic texts lack most of the vowel signs and are imperfect. In the Beatty MS there are vowel signs for Ḥusnus, but no consonant points. The word is therefore probably written incorrectly. The names are mentioned in Khallikān, IV, 84-85, but are probably not accurate.

Yahyā his son, surnamed Abū 'Alī, was a protégé of al-Ma'mūn. At first he was associated with al-Faḍl ibn Sahl, working on his hypothesis of the judgments of the stars. Then, when the happening befell al-Faḍl,³⁰ al-Ma'mūn chose him [Yahyā], seeking him for Islām. Whereupon, he became a Muslim under the patronage [of al-Ma'mūn] and devoted himself to him. Yahyā died when he was setting forth to Tarsus (Ṭarsūs), and he was buried at Aleppo in the cemetery of the Quraysh, where there is an inscription on his grave. His sons were Muḥammad, 'Alī, Sa'īd, and al-Ḥasan.

Muḥammad was highly cultivated, a master of literary style, eloquent in expression. He composed anthologies and famous traditions, there being among his works the Traditions of the Poets. He also understood singing and astrology.

'Alī ibn Yahyā became associated with Muḥammad ibn Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm al-Mus'abī and later with al-Faḥ ibn Khāqān, for whom he made a library of learning.³¹ He transcribed for it [sections] from his own books and from things al-Faḥ asked him to write, more than enough to form a library of learning. He died during the last days of al-Mu'tamid, being buried at Sāmarrā. His sons were Aḥmad Abū 'Isā, 'Abd Allāh Abū al-Qāsim, Yahyā Abū Aḥmad, and Hārūn Abū 'Abd Allāh. Hārūn wrote many books.

Another Account of Them [the Family of al-Munajjim]

Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Yahyā ibn Abī Manṣūr al-Munajjim was a court companion of al-Mutawakkil and not only one of his intimate associates, but the foremost among them. He was attached to him and the caliphs following him until the time of al-Mu'tamid. He was a quoter of poems and traditions, as well as a good poet, who learned from Ishāq [al-Mawṣilī], quoting him. As his work among the caliphs was outstanding, he sat among their kinsmen [leaders] and they told him their secrets, entrusting him with their news. He died during the year two hundred and seventy-five [A.D. 888/89]. Among his books there were:

³¹ "Library of learning" (khizānat al-ḥikmah) was probably a term derived from the Bayt al-Ḥikmah, the famous library at Baghdad founded by al-Ma'mūn.

Poetry and Poets, Ancient and Islāmic, in which he quoted Muḥammad ibn Sallām [al-Jumhūrī], Muḥammad ibn 'Umar al-Jarjānī, and others besides them; Traditions of Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm [al-Mawṣilī]; Cooked Food.

His Son, Abū Aḥmad Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī ibn Yaḥyā ibn Abī Maṣṣūr³³

He was born during the year two hundred and forty-one [A.D. 855/56] and died on Monday night, the thirteenth night of the month of Rabi' al-Awwal [the third Muslim month] during the year three hundred [A.D. 912/13]. He was a court companion of al-Muwaffaq and the caliphs following him. He was also a theologian of the Mu'tazilī school of thought and the author of many books. He had, moreover, a class (session), which was attended by (bi-al-ḥadrah) a group of theologians. Among his books there was Splendor (Al-Bāhir), about the traditions and poems of the poets who lived during the two regimes [the Umayyad and the 'Abbāsīd]. He began with Bashshār, Ibn Harmah, Ṭurayḥ [al-Thaqafī], Ibn Mayyādah, Muslim [ibn Walīd], Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm [al-Mawṣilī], Abū Hiffān, and Yazīd ibn al-Ṭathriyah. The last one he wrote about was Marwān ibn Abī Ḥafṣah. He did not finish this [book], but his son, Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī, did complete it, with the decision to add to his father's book the lives of the modern poets. From among these he wrote about Abū Dulāmah, Wālibah ibn al-Ḥubāb, Yaḥyā ibn Ziyād, Mutī ibn Iyās, and Abū 'Alī al-Baṣīr.

Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī³⁴

He was a theologian and an authority for the law according to the code of Abū Ja'far al-Ṭabarī. I saw a portion of a book by Abū Ja'far about the law written in his handwriting.³⁵ Abū al-Ḥasan also wrote books which he composed independently of previous works, among which there were:

Traditions of his family and their genealogy in Persia; Consensus of Opinion, about the law according to the code of al-Ṭabarī; Introduction

³³ The Beatty MS runs this heading into the text. The Flügel text has only the words "His Son."

³⁴ The Arabic versions have no separate heading here. The Beatty MS does not give the full name as Flügel does.

³⁵ This sentence is in the Beatty MS, but lacking in Flügel.

to the Code of al-Ṭabarī and the Triumph of His School of Thought;³⁶ The Times (Seasons).³⁷

Abū 'Abd Allāh Hārūn ibn 'Alī ibn Yaḥyā ibn Abī Maṣṣūr³⁷

He died during the year two hundred and eighty-eight [A.D. 900/901], while he was still young. Among his books there were: The Distinguished (Al-Bānī), which was a selection of the poetry of the modern³⁸ poets, without comment on them; Traditions of the Poets, a large book which he did not finish—the persons included in it were Bashshār, Abū al-Atāhīyah, and Abū Nuwās; Women: What Fell to Them of Fame and Good Qualities and What Was Said of Them in Poems and Beautiful Speech.

Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Hārūn ibn 'Alī ibn Yaḥyā

We [al-Nadīm] have seen and heard him. He was a quoter [of poetry], a poet, man of letters, master of literary style, theologian, man of good character, and the court companion of a number of caliphs. He said to me, "My birth was during the year seventy-seven [A.H. 277: A.D. 890/91]." He kept on dyeing [his beard with henna] until he passed away during the year three hundred and fifty-two [A.D. 963/64] at the age of seventy-six.³⁹ Among his books there were:

The Month of Ramaḍān, which he wrote for [the Caliph] al-Rāḍī; The Nawrūz and the Mihrajān;⁴⁰ Refutation of al-Khalīl, in connection with "Prosody" (Al-'Arūḍ);⁴¹ his epistle about the difference between Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mahdī and Ishāq al-Mawṣilī, with reference to singing; a book which he started about the genealogy of his kinsmen—he was writing it for al-Muhallabī, but he never finished;⁴² Comprehensive ³⁶ Madhhab is translated here as "code" and "school of thought," rather than as "sect," which is a more usual rendering.

³⁷ Probably referring to times of prayer or feasts; not in the Beatty MS.

³⁸ This heading, and the three which follow, are made part of the text, rather than set off as separate headings, in the Beatty MS.

³⁹ The poets named as "modern" in the book Splendor (Al-Bāhir) of Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī, begun by Abū Aḥmad Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī, belong to the eighth and ninth centuries. This probably refers to this same group of poets.

⁴⁰ Reckoned in lunar years.

⁴¹ Persian feasts for New Year's and the September equinox, respectively.

⁴² A book on prosody by al-Khalīl ibn Aḥmad.

⁴³ His kinsmen were the family of al-Munajjim. Al-Muhallabī was Abū Muḥammad, the vizier of Mu'izz al-Dawlah.

Statement (Al-Lafz al-Muḥit), in refutation of a statement of al-Laḳīṭ—it is contradictory to a work of Abū al-Faraj al-Iṣbahānī, entitled "The Difference between the Free and the Slaves and Their Relative Worth."⁴³

Abū 'Isā 'Aḥmad ibn 'Alī ibn Yahyā

He was one of their distinguished members, who lived earlier than 'Alī ibn Hārūn. Among his books there was *History of the Years*⁴⁴ of the World.

Abū 'Abd Allāh Hārūn ibn 'Alī ibn Hārūn

He was from the stock of his kinsmen and forefathers,⁴⁵ a poet, man of letters, and a man with a knowledge of singing. He was also skillful and eminent in theology. He was born during the year ——— and died ———. Among his books there was Selection of Songs.⁴⁶

The family of Ḥamdūn

He was Ḥamdūn ibn Ismā'īl ibn Dā'ūd the secretary, the first member of his family to be a court companion. His son, 'Aḥmad ibn Ḥamdūn, quoted [others] and was a scholar of historical traditions, quoting al-'Adawī. Among his books there was Court Companions and Associates.⁴⁷

Abū Hiffān al-Mihzamī

Mention of him will be made in connection with a group of modern poets. He was a scholar of historical traditions, who quoted [others] and was an author. Among his books there were:

The Four, with traditions about the poets; The Art of Poetry, a large book, part of which I have seen.

⁴³ For this title, given more accurately, see Yāqūt, Iṣṣād, VI (5), 152 top. This book of 'Alī ibn Hārūn is not in the Beatty MS but is included in the Flügel text. Instead of "contradictory," the Arabic mu'āraḍah may mean "complimentary."

⁴⁴ The Beatty MS gives what appears to be sunī, which can be a plural form for sinīn ("years").

⁴⁵ The family of al-Munajjim.

⁴⁶ This title is not in the Beatty MS.

⁴⁷ This title also is not found in the Beatty MS. For the terms, see the Glossary.

Yūnus al-Katīb (the Secretary)

He was known as Yūnus the Singer, but was [really] Yūnus ibn Sulaymān, surnamed Abū Sulaymān. He was from among the people of Persia, living until the 'Abbāsīd regime. From what was written in the handwriting of al-Sukkārī, "He was one of the slaves, a slave of al-Zubayr ibn al-'Awwām."⁴⁸ He wrote famous books about songs and singers, it even being said that Ibrāhīm [al-Mawṣilī] learned from him. Among his books there were:

The Unique (Mujarrad) of Yūnus; Al-Qiyān; Melodious Singing.

Ibn Bānah

They called him "the son of Bānah" after his mother. He was 'Amr ibn Muḥannad ibn Sulaymān ibn Rāshid, a protégé of Yūsuf ibn 'Umar al-Thaqafī. Bānah was the daughter of Rawḥ, the secretary of Salamah al-Waṣīf. Among his books there was The Unique (Mujarrad) of 'Amr ibn Bānah.

He was devoted to al-Mutawakkil, being on intimate terms with him. As he learned from Ishāq [al-Mawṣilī] and other [teachers], he was skilled in singing. He lived until the days of al-Mu'tadid and, although his home was at Baghdād, at times he visited Sāmarrā.⁴⁹ He died during the year two hundred and seventy-eight [A.D. 891/92].

Al-Ṣinī

His name was Ḥubaysh ibn Mūsā⁵⁰ and he was the author of the book of songs arranged in alphabetical order which he composed for al-Mutawakkil. In this book he recorded things about the songs which were not mentioned by Ishāq [al-Mawṣilī] and 'Amr ibn

⁵⁰ Flügel gives this man's name as Ḥasan ibn Mūsā al-Naṣbī. The translation has been taken from the Beatty MS. It has been impossible to identify the individual in any other sources.

Bānah. Moreover, from the names of the male and female singers of the Pre-Islāmic and Islāmic periods he mentioned all that was unusual and strange. He wrote:

Book of Songs (Kitāb al-Aghānī), in alphabetical order; Abstractions of the Singers (Spiritual Beings among the Singers, Mujarradāt al-Mughanniyīn).

Abū Ḥashshishah

His name was Muḥammad ibn ‘Alī ibn Umayyah, surnamed Abū Ja‘far. He was a descendant of Abū Umayyah al-Kātib.⁵¹ He was a tanbur player who was skilled in his art and from whom Jaḥḥah believed that he learned [how to play]. He died ———. Among his books there were:

The Illustrious Singer (the illustrious book, The Singer); Traditions of the Tanbur Players.

Jaḥḥah

He was Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn Ja‘far ibn Mūsā ibn Yaḥyā ibn Khālīd ibn Barmak, a poet and singer, with a genius for poetry, and skill in the art of singing to the tanbur. Well-trained and excellent in expression, he met with scholars and quoters [of poems and traditions], learning from them. Facts about him are too well known and self-evident to mention in our book, as he lived so close to our time.

But in spite of what we have described in connection with him, he was far from having a moral character and was also foul[-minded]. In his religion, he did not have only some of the imperfections, but all of them. Abū al-Faṭḥ ibn al-Naḥwī recited to me saying, “Jaḥḥah recited to me about himself.”⁵²

⁵² It is important to note that the Tonk MS begins with the following verse of poetry.

If I do not desire my mouth to water,
Wine I make its substitute.
And wine is [different] from saliva,
For with heart aflame I keep on drinking.”⁵³

Jaḥḥah died at Wāsiṭ, where he had gone to be with Abū Bakr ibn Rā‘iq⁵⁴ during the year three hundred and twenty-six [A.D. 937/38], because of illness with diarrhea. Among his books there were:

The Delightful Book of Cooked Food; The Tanbur Players; Excellencies of Sikkāj;⁵⁵ Al-Tarannum; what he witnessed of al-Mu‘tamid; Speculations; what he collected from what the astrologers preserved and verified from among the predictions (Judgments).

After the account about him [Jaḥḥah] there should be the account of Qariṣ the Singer, but it comes seventeen leaves after this leaf, as the author of the book has arranged the sequence, so now we return to the famous singers.⁵⁶

We Have Returned to the Famous Authors

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: If I record an author, [then as a rule] I mention following him someone who was associated with him and similar to him. If, however, someone’s turn is put off for an interval, so as to come after somebody else, whom I place before him, this is [due to] the method which I use in the book as a whole and it is Allāh who by his mercy determines [the sequence].

⁵³ For the word translated as “aflame,” Flügel has a form of ghalīl (“burning with love”), whereas the Beatty and Tonk MSS have a form of alīl (“distressed”).

⁵⁴ The Beatty MS has “ibn Wāthiq,” but Flügel gives “ibn Rā‘iq,” which is probably correct, as he was a high official at the time of the death of Jaḥḥah. See Šābi, Wuzarā’, p. 360.

⁵⁵ Sikkāj is a dish of meat, flour, and vinegar. Al-tarannum, which follows, means the modulation of the voice or of an instrument. It is given by the Beatty MS and is probably correct, although Flügel has “Al-Nadīm.”

⁵⁶ This last paragraph is in the Flügel version but not in the Beatty MS. The last sentence of the paragraph says “we return to the famous singers,” but the heading which follows refers to famous authors. Either there is a mistake and the word “singers” was intended to be something different, or else the men listed in the following pages were singers as well as authors. The second-to-last account in this section of Al-Fihrist concerns al-Qariṣ.

Account of Ibn Abī Ṭāhir

He was Abū al-Faḍl Aḥmad ibn Abī Ṭāhir, the name of Abū Ṭāhir being Ṭayfūr. Although he was the son of a family of government employees from Khurāsān, he was born at Baghdād. Ja'far ibn Ḥamdān, the author of the book Splendor (Al-Bāhir), said, "He was first a teacher in a common school, but later did private work, being established at the Paper Workers' Bazaar (Sūq al-Warrāqīn) on the East Side."⁵⁷ He went on to say, "I have never seen anyone who became known so quickly as he became known for compiling books and reciting poetry, most of which he corrupted. In fact, there never was anyone more stupid intellectually or more erroneous in pronunciation than he was. He once recited a poem for me, informing me about Ishāq ibn Ayyūb, in which he made mistakes in about ten places. He was the most prone of men to steal a half or a third of a verse." He continued, "This is what al-Buḥturī told me about him, but at the same time he had a praiseworthy character, with a pleasant social manner, mellowed by maturity." He was born during the year two hundred and four [A.D. 819/20], the year in which al-Ma'mūn entered Baghdād from Khurāsān,⁵⁸ and he died during the year two hundred and eighty [A.D. 893/94]. Among his compiled books there were:

Prose and Verse, in fourteen sections, thirteen of which are in the people's hands; Plagiarisms of the Poets; Baghdād;⁵⁹ Jewels; Composers;⁶⁰ Gifts; The Derivative Varying from That with Which It Is Associated (The Derivative Varying from What Is Familiar); Names of the Poets Who Were Forefathers (Foremost); Nicknames of the Poets and Who Was Known by a Surname and Who by His [True] Name; Adornments and Garments;⁶¹ The Known among the Poets; The Embellished;

⁵⁷ The Paper Workers' Bazaar was a group of a hundred shops between the Ḥarrānī Arch and the Ṣarāt Canal of Baghdād. See Le Strange, Baghdad, p. 92; Coke, Baghdad, p. 63.

⁵⁸ After the death of Ḥārūn al-Rashīd, there were six years of conflict to determine the succession. Finally, in A.D. 819 al-Ma'mūn brought an army from Khurāsān and established himself in Baghdād as the caliph. See Hitti, Arabs, p. 304.

⁵⁹ This title is given by Flügel but omitted by the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

⁶⁰ This might be a word meaning "owners of camels," but it is much more likely "composers" (of books).

⁶¹ At this point in the Beatty MS there are two titles badly written, probably duplications of what follows carelessly copied in the wrong place. They are omitted in the translation.

Apology for Wahb [ibn Sulaymān], because of his breaking wind; He Who Recites Poetry and Is Answered by Words; Hurmuz ibn Kisrā Anūshirwān's High Rank; Information (Experience) of the Proud King in Connection with the Administration of the Kingdom, about politics; The Righteous King and the Designated Vizier.

The Babylonian King, the Egyptian King, the Tyrants, and the Magnanimous Greek (Byzantine) King; Vehement Emotion and Passion (Al-Ghullah wa-al-Ghalil);⁶² Those Making Excuses; Temperament and Reproaches;⁶³ The Glory of the Rose and the Narcissus; The Chamberlains (The Veil); Adversaries⁶⁴ of the Horsemen; Adversaries of the Poets; the large book, Horses; Banishment (Pursuit, Al-Ṭard); The Plagiarisms of al-Buḥturī from Abū Tammām;⁶⁵ Assembling the Genealogy of the Banū Hāshim;⁶⁶ his epistle to Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mudabbir;⁶⁷ his epistle about restraint of lusts; his epistle to 'Alī ibn Yaḥyā; The Compendium, about the poets and their traditions (traditions about them); Superiority of the Arabs over the Persians; Speech of the Eyes; Traditions of Women Affecting Elegance.⁶⁸

It is said that his son, Abū al-Ḥusayn [Ubayd Allāh ibn Aḥmad], wrote these [last] two books.

His Books with Selections of the Poems of the Poets⁶⁹

Selections from the Poetry of Bakr ibn al-Naṭṭāḥ; Selections from the Poetry of Di'bil ibn 'Alī; Selections from the Poetry of Muslim [probably Ibn al-Walīd]; Selections from the Poetry of al-'Attābī; Selections from the Poetry of Maṣṣūr al-Namarī; Selections from the Poetry of Abū al-'Atāhiyah.

⁶² Flügel has Disease and the Diseased, but the Beatty and Tonk MSS indicate the translation as given.

⁶³ This title and the one following are only in the Flügel edition.

⁶⁴ Instead of "adversaries" (al-muqābil), this might be "slayers" (al-muqātil).

⁶⁵ Flügel gives "the grammarians," but the Beatty and Tonk MSS give instead the name al-Buḥturī.

⁶⁶ The Banū Hāshim were the ancestors of the Prophet and also of the 'Abbāsids. The translation follows the Beatty MS; Flügel omits "genealogy" and the Tonk MS gives "Abū Hāshim" as the last two words.

⁶⁷ The Flügel version gives al-Walīd, but the other manuscripts have al-Mudabbir.

⁶⁸ For the phrase "women affecting elegance" the translation follows Flügel and the Tonk MS, as the word in the Beatty MS does not seem to be correct.

⁶⁹ Unlike the other versions, the Flügel edition does not give this as a separate heading.

Account of Bashshār and Selections from His Poetry; Account of Marwān [ibn Sulaymān], with Selections from His Poetry and Traditions of the Family of Marwān; Account of Ibn Mayyādah; Account of Ibn Harmah with a Selection of His Poetry; Account of Ibn al-Dumaynah; Selection from the Poetry of 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Qays al-Ruqayyāt.⁷⁰

His Son, 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Abī Ṭāhir, surnamed Abū al-Ḥusayn

He followed the example of his father in compiling and writing, but he quoted less than his father did and Aḥmad [his father] was more skillful and brilliant in technique and composition. The books of Abū al-Ḥusayn supplemented his father's books about the traditions of Baghdād. His father wrote until the end of the period of al-Muhtadī, while Abū al-Ḥusayn added traditions about al-Mu'tamid, traditions of al-Mu'taḍid, traditions of al-Muktafī, and traditions about al-Muqtadir, which he did not complete. Among his books there were:

Al-Sikbāj and Its Excellencies;⁷¹ Women and Men Affecting Elegance.

The Family of Abū al-Najm

The name of Abū al-Najm was Hilāl and he was a secretary, one of the people of al-Anbār. His son, Ṣāliḥ ibn Abī al-Najm, was, however, one of the inhabitants of Baghdād. Abū al-Najm was a protégé of the Banū Sulaym.⁷²

Aḥmad ibn Abī al-Najm was a poet, surnamed Abū al-Zumayl, who it is said recited to Abū al-Shīṣ this saying of his: "As though there were on the circling heavens⁷³ the voice of the caller to prayer." Abū al-Shīṣ replied, "Allāh is your combatant,⁷⁴ oh, company of the Banū Sulaym, with the saying of al-Khansā': 'As though he were a standard, with fire at its top (on its head),' and this you say ———." ⁷⁵

⁷⁰ This book is in the Flügel text, but not in the Beatty or Tonk MSS.

⁷¹ Sikbāj is a dish of meat, flour, and vinegar.

⁷² For this tribe, see "Sulaim," Enc. Islam, IV, 518.

⁷³ The word in the Flügel edition means "spindle," which does not seem to be as correct as "circling heavens."

⁷⁴ The Beatty MS has "Allāh is your speaker."

⁷⁵ This line of poetry refers to the brother of the poetess al-Khansā' and is part of a lament for him. See "al-Khansā," Enc. Islam, II, 901; Quataybah, Shi'r, p. 201, top.

Abū 'Awn Aḥmad ibn al-Najm, the secretary, was the son of the brother of these two [Ṣāliḥ and Aḥmad].⁷⁶ He was a theologian, writer of correspondence, and poet, among whose books there were:

Oneness (Al-Tawḥīd) and the Philosophical Doctrines Which Concern It; The Towns (Regions), with information about the earth—it is said that this was written by Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Abī 'Awn.

Ibn Abī 'Awn

He was Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Abī 'Awn Aḥmad ibn al-Najm, one of the associates of Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn 'Alī al-Shalmaghānī, who was known as Ibn Abī al-'Azāqir. He [Ibrāhīm] was one of his faithful supporters who were fanatical about his cause, in connection with which he [al-Shalmaghānī] claimed to be the deity, Allāh Almighty. When Ibn Abī al-'Azāqir was arrested, he [Ibrāhīm] was taken with him and beheaded after him. When he was subjected to showing contempt for him and spitting on him, he refused, being seized with trembling and terror, trepidation and distress.⁷⁷ He was one of the men of letters who wrote books, but he lacked intelligence. We explain his story when we mention al-'Azāqirī [al-Shalmaghānī]. Among his books there were:

The Towns (Regions), with information about the countries; Silencing Replies; Similitudes (Allegories); The Treasury of Joy; Al-Dawāwīn;⁷⁸ Epistles.

Account of Ibn Abī al-Azhar

He was Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Mazīd, the grammarian and historical traditionalist, called al-Busanjī as his origin

⁷⁶ Hilāl Abū al-Najm had three sons: al-Najm, Ṣāliḥ, and Aḥmad. The eldest son was the father of Abū 'Awn Aḥmad ibn al-Najm ibn Hilāl. He in turn had a son, Ibrāhīm ibn Abī 'Awn Aḥmad, described in the following account.

⁷⁷ He was ordered to recant by striking al-Shalmaghānī, but because he regarded this fanatic as divine, his hand trembled and he kissed him instead of striking him; see Khallikān, I, 436.

⁷⁸ Al-dawāwīn probably referred to the government departments or records, or else to anthologies. This title and the one following are only in the Flügel edition. In general, however, the translation follows the Beatty and Tonk MSS, which agree and seem to be more accurate than the Flügel edition in this passage.

was from Busanj.⁷⁹ He died at an advanced age. I have read what was written in the handwriting of 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd ibn al-Jarrāḥ, who was known as Ibn al-'Aramram, that when he asked Ibn Abī al-Azhar about his age during the year three hundred and thirteen [A.D. 925/26], he replied, "Eighty years and three months of my life have passed by," and then he lived on after that.⁸⁰ Among his books there were:⁸¹

Disturbance and Confusion, with traditions of al-Musta'in and al-Mu'tazz; Traditions about the Intelligent among the Insane; Traditions of the Ancient Masters of Literary Style.

Abū Ayyūb al-Madīnī

His name was Sulaymān ibn Ayyūb ibn Muḥammad. He came from al-Madīnah and was one of the persons who affected elegance. He was also one of the men of letters, acquainted with singing and traditions about the singers, in connection with which he wrote a number of books. Among his books there were:

Traditions of 'Azzat al-Maylā'; Ibn Misjah [Sa'id ibn Misjah]; Qiyān al-Hijāz;⁸² Qiyān Makkah; Agreement (Harmony); The Generations of Singers; Melodious Singing and Cadence; Court Companions; Account of the Elegant at al-Madīnah; Ibn Abī 'Atīq; Traditions of Ibn 'Ā'ishah [Muḥammad ibn 'Ā'ishah]; Hunayn al-Hīrī; Ibn Surayj; Al-Gharīd.⁸³

Al-Taghlibī⁸⁴

His name was Muḥammad ibn al-Hārith and he was attached to the entourage of al-Faṭḥ ibn Khāqān. Among his books there were: Characters of the Kings, which he composed for al-Faṭḥ; his epistles;⁸⁵ The Garden.

⁷⁹ Busanj was near Tirmidh on the Oxus River; see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 758.

⁸⁰ Flügel and the Tonk MS give 30 years, but the Beatty MS has 80, which seems to be correct.

⁸¹ The first and second titles are in all the versions, but the last one is only in the Flügel edition.

⁸² Qiyān here almost certainly refers to slave girls trained to sing and dance. Al-Hijāz is the holy land of Arabia.

⁸³ Last title omitted by the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

⁸⁴ Flügel and Mas'ūdī, I, 12, call him by this name; the Beatty and Tonk MSS call him al-Tha'labī.

⁸⁵ The Beatty and Tonk MSS do not have "his epistles" and "The Garden."

Ibn al-Ḥarūn

His name was Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn al-Aṣbagh ibn al-Ḥarūn. He was an excellent author and compiler, highly cultured, and one of the people of Baghdād who were sons of secretaries. Among his books there were:

The Conformable and Homogeneous; The Truths, a large book; Poetry and the Poets; Literary Pursuits; The Gardens; The Secretaries; Good Actions (Merits); Meeting Together of the Chiefs.⁸⁶

Ibn 'Ammār al-Thaqafī

He was Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad ibn 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Ammār al-Thaqafī, the secretary.⁸⁷ He was the agent of al-Qāsim ibn 'Ubayd Allāh and his son. He was also a friend of Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd ibn al-Jarrāḥ, whom he quoted. He held sessions (classes) in which he related historical traditions.⁸⁸ He died during the year three hundred and nineteen [A.D. 931]. Among his books there were:

Al-Mubayyidāh, with traditions about the combatants of the family of Abū Ṭālib;⁸⁹ Al-Anwā'; The Faults of Abū Nuwās;⁹⁰ Traditions about Sulaymān ibn Abī Shaykh; Additions, with traditions about the viziers; Traditions about Ḥujr ibn 'Adī; Traditions about Abū al-Nuwās; Traditions about Ibn al-Rūmī, with Selections from His Poetry; his epistle about the Banū Umayyah; his epistle about the faults of Mu'āwiyah; his epistle about the affair of Ibn al-Mujadhdhar;⁹¹ Traditions about Abū al-'Atāhiyah; Traditions about 'Abd Allāh ibn Mu'āwiyah ibn Ja'far;⁹² Contradictions;⁹³ his epistle about the preeminence of ⁸⁶ Another translation might be Discussions of Intellectual Leaders.

⁸⁷ The Flügel text has some errors in connection with the proper names in this passage. The translation follows the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

⁸⁸ The literal translation is, "To him sessions and traditions (majalisāt wa-akhbār)."
In the next sentence, the Beatty and Tonk MSS omit the date.

⁸⁹ This title means those who bring forth pure (literally, "white") children. It probably refers to the inherited purity claimed for the descendants of 'Alī. It was also the name of a sect [see Shahrastānī (Haarbrücker) Part I, pp. 173, 200], but it is not likely that the sect is referred to here.

⁹⁰ Flügel gives another name, probably an error.

⁹¹ The Beatty and Tonk MSS give this name, perhaps the son of Mujadhdhar ibn Dhīyād. Flügel has another name, probably that of Ibn Muḥriz, the singer.

⁹² Cf. Biog. Index, 'Abd Allāh ibn Mu'āwiyah ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ja'far and Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 105, top.

⁹³ This title and the one which follows are only in the Flügel edition.

the Banū Hāshim and their chiefs, with a reproach for the Banū Umayyah and their followers.

Ibn Khurdādhbih

He was Abū al-Qāsim 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Khurdādhbih. Khurdādhbih was a Magian, who became a Muslim under the patronage of the Barmak family. Abū al-Qāsim administered the postal and intelligence departments in the regions of the Mountain (al-Jabal). He was also a court companion of al-Mu'tamid, to whom he devoted himself. Among his books there were:

The Training of Hearing; A Collection of the Genealogies of the Persians and of al-Nawāfil;⁹⁴ Roads and Kingdoms; Cooked Food; Amusement and Musical Instruments (Amusement and Diversions); Drinks; Al-Anwā'; Court Companions and Associates.⁹⁵

Al-Sarakhsi⁹⁶

Abū al-Faraj Aḥmad ibn al-Ṭayyib al-Sarakhsi was a man of letters and master of literary style who quoted copiously. Among his books there were:

Government (Politics); Roads and Kingdoms; Training of the Kings; Guidance to the Secrets of Singing.

Ja'far ibn Ḥamdān al-Mawṣili

Abū al-Qāsim Ja'far ibn Muḥammad ibn Ḥamdān al-Mawṣili, the legal authority, was a good author and compiler, as well as a legal authority according to the code of al-Shāfi'i. He was also a poet, man of letters, and critic of poetry, who quoted copiously. He wrote a number of books about the law, which we shall mention when we discuss the legal authorities. His books about literary subjects were:

Splendor (Al-Bāhir), with selections from the more recent poets and some of the former ones, and also the plagiarisms;⁹⁷ the large book,

⁹⁴ The first two titles are given only by Flügel. The word translated as "Persians" might be "the horse."

⁹⁵ This title is in the Beatty and Tonk MSS, but not the Flügel edition.

⁹⁶ This paragraph about al-Sarakhsi is not included in the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

⁹⁷ The phrase "and some of the former ones, and also the plagiarisms" is not found in Flügel, but is in the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

Poetry and the Poets, which he did not finish; Plagiarisms, which he did not finish—if he had completed it, people would have been well equipped for an understanding of every book; the delightful book, The Good Qualities of the Poems of the More Recent (Modern) Writers.

Abū Ḍiyā' al-Naṣīb

Abū Ḍiyā' Bishr ibn Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī al-Qutbī al-Naṣībī was one of the people of Naṣībīn.⁹⁸ He was a poet, who wrote a little poetry, as well as a man of letters, literary by nature, among whose books there were:

The Plagiarism of al-Buḥturī from Abū Tammām; Jewels; Literary Pursuits; the large book, Plagiarisms, which he did not finish.

Ibn Abī Maṣṣūr al-Mawṣili

He was Yaḥyā ibn Abī Maṣṣūr, who had many relatives at al-Mawṣil. His books still exist and he represented the epitome of culture (literary quality). Among his books there were:

Songs (Al-Aghānī), arranged alphabetically;⁹⁹ Equivocal Speech (Al-Ma'ārīḍ); The Lute and Musical Instruments; the delightful book, Cooked Food.

Ibn al-Marzubān

He was 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Khalaf ibn al-Marzubān. Aḥmad ibn Ṭāhir uses his method in preserving historical traditions, poetry, and anecdotes.¹⁰⁰ Among his books there were:

Those Enslaved by Love; Drinks, including a number of books (chapters); The Infallible;¹⁰¹ Remote (Absent); Gardens and Flowers; Associates and Court Companions; Poetry and the Poets; Gifts; Negroes and Their Superiority over the Whites;¹⁰² Nicknames and the ⁹⁸ Flügel gives al-Qaynī instead of al-Qutbī. See the tribe Banū Qutbah in Qutaybah, Ma'ārīf, p. 41, l. 17. The Beatty MS gives the last element of the name as al-Naṣībī. For Naṣībīn, see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 787.

⁹⁹ The Tonk MS gives this meaning clearly.

¹⁰⁰ The Beatty and Tonk MSS give the form ḥāfiẓ, "preserving" or "memorizing."

¹⁰¹ This probably refers to the Shī'i imams, who were credited as inheriting from 'Alī an infallible knowledge of the law.

¹⁰² If this referred to slaves, it did not express the common opinion about them; compare Mez, Renaissance of Islam, Chap. XI.

Poets; Winter and Summer; Women and Amatory Poetry; The Compendium, a large book about the sciences of the Qur'ān, in twenty-seven sections;¹⁰³ Traditions of Abū Qays al-Ruqayyāt,¹⁰⁴ with a selection of his poetry; Traditions of 'Abd Allāh ibn Ja'far ibn Abī Ṭālib, with Whom May Allāh Be Well Pleased; Censure of Chamberlains and the Sequestered;¹⁰⁵ Censure of the Heavy-Hearted (Censure of the Oppressed); Traditions of al-'Arjī.

Al-Kasrāwī

He is known as 'Alī ibn Mahdī, surnamed Abū al-Ḥusayn. He was a teacher, man of letters, and memorizer of traditions, who was acquainted in particular with the Kitāb al-'Ayn. He was tutor to Hārūn ibn 'Alī ibn Yaḥyā al-Nadīm, later becoming attached to Abū al-Najm Badr al-Mu'tadidī.¹⁰⁶ Among his books there were:

Good Qualities; Contradictions of Those Who Think that It Is Not Necessary for the Judges to Eat the Same Kind of Food as the Imams and Caliphs—this book was also ascribed to al-Kasrāwī the Secretary; Feasts and New Years; The Missives of Brothers and Comings of Friends.¹⁰⁷

Ibn Bassām, the Poet

He was 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn Naṣr ibn Maṣṣūr ibn Bassām. 'Alī's mother was Umāmah, the daughter of Ḥamdūn, who was the intimate companion of his father and mother. He was a poet and man of letters, one of the brilliant secretaries, from whose tongue no one escaped.¹⁰⁸ He died ———. Among his books there were:

¹⁰³ This title and those following are not in the Beatty and Tonk MSS. The principal sciences of the Qur'ān are language, the Ḥadīth, readings, commentary, grammar, rhetoric, law, and theology.

¹⁰⁴ This name should almost certainly be Ibn Qays; see Biog. Index, Ruqayyāt.

¹⁰⁶ The translation follows the Beatty and Tonk MSS here, for Flügel says that he was tutor to the son of Hārūn. The manuscripts lack the book titles, although the Beatty MS leaves a space for them.

¹⁰⁷ As the text is not clear, this translation may not be correct.

¹⁰⁸ For this vernacular expression, see the Flügel edition, p. 150, n. 4.

Traditions of 'Umar ibn Abī Rabī'ah—I have never seen anything more eloquent in content; The Zaujīyūn Who Are Causing Conflict;¹⁰⁹ a collection of his letters; Inconsistencies of the Poets; Traditions of al-Aḥwaṣ.

Al-Marwazī

His name was Ja'far ibn Aḥmad al-Marwazī, surnamed Abū al-'Abbās. He was one of those who composed books about the sciences and his books were highly esteemed. He was the first person to write a book about the roads and kingdoms, but he did not finish it. When he died at al-Ahwāz, his books were taken to Baghdād and sold at Ṭāq al-Ḥarrānī¹¹⁰ during the year two hundred and seventy-four [A.D. 887/88]. Among his books there were:

Roads and Kingdoms; the large book, Literary Pursuits; the small book, Literary Pursuits; History of the Signs of the Qur'ān, in confirmation of the books of the sultan;¹¹¹ Eloquence and Preaching; Al-Nājim.¹¹²

Al-Šūlī

Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā ibn al-'Abbās al-Šūlī was one of the brilliant men of letters and collectors of books. He was a court companion of al-Rādī, and before that was his tutor. He had also served as a court companion of al-Muqtafi and al-Muqtadir during an unbroken period [of service]. His life is too conspicuous and well known and his period too recent for us to go into details with regards to him.¹¹³ He was one of the best chess players of his time and a person of manly bearing. He lived until the year three hundred and thirty [A.D. 941/42]¹¹⁴ and died hiding at al-Baṣrah,

¹¹⁰ An archway built by a man from Ḥarrān on the West Bank at the end of the bazaar where the paper dealers sold books. See Le Strange, Baghdad, pp. 57 (map), 90, 91, 96; Yāqūt, Geog., III, 489.

¹¹¹ The Flügel text gives this title as History of the Qur'ān.

¹¹² This may be The Rising Star, or the man Sa'd ibn al-Ḥasan al-Nājim.

¹¹³ He must have been born A.D. 870 or earlier and died between A.D. 941 and A.D. 948.

¹¹⁴ The date is given in the Flügel text, but not in the Beatty or Tonk MSS. Other authorities give a later date.

because he quoted a passage about 'Alī, for whom may there be peace, which caused both the populace and the elite to seek him in order to kill him.

Among his books there was Leaves (Folios, Al-Awrāq), with traditions about the caliphs and the poets, but which he did not finish. What resulted were traditions about all of the caliphs, with the poems and chronicles of the sons of the caliphs, from al-Saffāh to the time of Ibn al-Mu'tazz.¹¹⁵ There were also the poems of other members of the Banū al-'Abbās who were neither caliphs nor sons of caliphs in rank.

At the beginning [of the section] there was the poetry of 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Alī and at the end the poetry of Abū Aḥmad Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Ismā'il ibn Ibrāhīm ibn 'Isā ibn al-Manṣūr. Then followed the poems of members of the family of Abū Ṭālib: the descendants of al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn, the descendants of al-'Abbās ibn 'Alī, the descendants of 'Umar ibn 'Alī, and the descendants of Ja'far ibn Abī Ṭālib.¹¹⁶

Then followed the poems of the descendants of al-Ḥārith ibn 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib; after that traditions about Ibn Harmah, with a selection of his poetry; traditions about the Sayyid al-Ḥimyarī,¹¹⁷ with a selection of his poetry; traditions about Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf, with a selection of his poetry; and traditions about Sudayf,¹¹⁸ with a selection of his poetry.

In composing this book he relied upon the book of al-Marḥadī about poetry and the poets, in fact he transcribed and plagiarized it. I have seen a copy of [the work of] this man which came from the library of al-Ṣūlī and by which he was exposed.

In addition to this, his books were:

The Viziers; Worship; Training of the Secretary, according to Standard;¹¹⁹ Superiority of the Aged, which he wrote for 'Alī ibn al-Furāt ¹¹⁵ This was the period between A.D. 750 and A.D. 908.

¹¹⁶ The Arabic word walad may mean either "descendant" or "son." For the members of the family of Abū Ṭālib, see Mas'ūdī, V, 148.

¹¹⁷ "Al-Ḥimyarī" is not included by the Beatty or Tonk MSS, but is given by Flügel and Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (7), 137.

¹¹⁸ Before "traditions about Sudayf" the Beatty MS has "traditions of Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm [al-Mawṣilī], with a selection of his poetry."

¹¹⁹ The Beatty and Tonk MSS have "secretaries", whereas Khallikān, III, 69, has "secretary."

[surnamed] Abū al-Ḥasan;¹²⁰ Youths; Varieties, which he did not finish; Questions about Answers of Ramaḍān to (of) Ibn al-Munajjim;¹²¹ Ramaḍān; The Compendium, about knowledge of the Qur'ān—he did not finish it, and although it contained rare forms for the scholars, this is not the place [to describe it]; The Virtues of 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Furāt; Traditions about Abū Tammām; Traditions about al-Jubbā'ī [surnamed] Abū Sa'id; Al-'Abbās ibn Aḥnaf, with a selection of his poetry; his epistle about collecting taxes;¹²² Traditions about Abū 'Amr ibn al-'Alā'; Al-Gharar.¹²³

The Poems of the More Recent Writers, Which Abū Bakr [al-Ṣūlī] Compiled Alphabetically

Ibn al-Rūmī, Abū Tammām, al-Buḥturī, Abū Nuwās, al-'Abbās ibn al-Aḥnaf, 'Alī ibn al-Jahm, Ibn Ṭabāṭabā, Ibrāhīm ibn al-'Abbās al-Ṣūlī, [Sufyān] ibn 'Uyaynah, [Sawwār ibn] Abī Sharā'ah.¹²⁴

Al-Ḥakīmī

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Quraysh al-Ḥakīmī was a historical traditionalist, who heard a group [of scholars lecture]. He died ———. Among his books there were:

The Adornment of Men of Letters, which contained historical traditions (anecdotes); The Casket of Jewels;¹²⁵ Youth, Preferable to Old Age; Joking and Jest.¹²⁶

¹²⁰ This title is not in the Beatty or Tonk MSS, while the title which follows is not in the Flügel edition.

¹²¹ The Beatty MS suggests that the word "Ramaḍān" was inserted here by mistake, duplicating the next title. It is not certain which member of the Munajjim family Ibn al-Munajjim was.

¹²² Flügel lacks this title.

¹²⁵ This translation is taken from Flügel and the Tonk MS, which give Safaṭ al-Jawhar ("The Casket of Jewels"). The Beatty MS has a word which looks like either siqt ("extremity") or saqat ("defeat"), probably an error.

¹²⁶ The Beatty and Tonk MSS lack this title.

Al-Burjānī

He was Abū 'Alī.¹²⁷

Another Group, Different from Those Already Mentioned

Abū al-'Anbas al-Ṣaymarī

His origin was from al-Kūfah, but he became judge of al-Ṣaymarah.¹²⁸ He was Abū al-'Anbas Muḥammad ibn Isḥāq ibn Abī al-'Anbas. Although he was one of the jesters and clowns,¹²⁹ he was also a man of letters, familiar with the stars, about which he wrote a book; I have observed that it was praised by the leading astrologers. Al-Mutawakkil included him in the group of his court companions, giving him special attention. Because of his position he had a well-known connection with al-Buḥturī. He lived until the days of al-Mu'tamid, entering also into the group of his intimates. He satirized the cook of al-Mu'tamid:

Oh, delicious of my days, and what is passionately desired,
Though far from the market are we,
If for bread from Fars I make request,
Ṣāliḥ blows the trumpet for me.

Among his books there were:

Hindering (Postponing) Knowledge; The Lover and the Beloved; Refutation of the Astrologers; The Tambur Players;¹³⁰ Kūr Iblā';¹³¹ Long-Bearded; Refutation of the Perfumed; 'Anqā' Mughrib;¹³² Relaxation and the Advantages of Running Away;¹³³ The Excellencies

¹²⁷ The translation here follows the Tonk MS, which seems to be more correct than the other versions.

¹²⁸ See Yāqūt, Geog., III, 442, for al-Ṣaymarah.

¹²⁹ See Dozy, Supplément, I, 535, for this form, which in Arabic is al-murāṭazāt ("clowns").

¹³⁰ This word is so badly written in the various versions that it is impossible to be sure what is meant. It may also be a form for "drummers" or else al-ṭanbalīn ("those feigning idiocy").

¹³¹ This form cannot be identified, but may be connected with al-kūr al-ibī (see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 319), or as given in the Beatty MS might be kurz ablā ("dishonest estate managers").

¹³² This was a fabulous bird mentioned in old Persian and Arab stories; see "'Anka,'" Enc. Islam, I, 356.

¹³³ "Running away" is taken from the Beatty MS. The word given by Flügel seems to be wrong, and the Tonk MS has "al-Qur'ān."

of the Nature of the Head;¹³⁴ The Structure of the Mind; Unusual Stories; The Excellencies of the Wine Flask;¹³⁵ Refutation of Abū Mikhā'il al-Ṣaydanānī in Connection with Alchemy; Reproaches (Errors) of the Common People and Traditions about the Barbarous Populace (Traditions about the Careless in Speech); Wonders of the Sea;¹³⁶ Silenced Replies; Aids to Digestion and Treacles;¹³⁷ Preference of the Ladder to the Stairway;¹³⁸ The Two Dynasties, about preference between the two caliphates [the Umayyad and the 'Abbāsīd]; Al-Fās ibn al-Hā'ik.

Destroying (Luciting) of Minds; Al-Saḥḥāqāt wa-al-Baghāyūn [women used for unnatural sexual intercourse and whores]; Stirring (Al-Khaḍ-khaḍah), about masturbation; Traditions about Abū Far'ūn Kandar ibn Jaḥdar; Interpretation of Dreams; Rare Fornis of al-Ḥūṣā;¹³⁹ his [Abū al-'Anbas's] controversy with al-Buḥturī;¹⁴⁰ Transcribers (Al-Nuqalā) (or Heavy-Hearted [Al-Thuqalā]); Rare Anecdotes about Pimps (or Procureesses); Convocation (Pretension) of the Common People; Brothers and Friends; The Surnames of Animals;¹⁴¹ Judgments of the Stars; Introduction to the Art of Foretelling the Stars; Ṣāḥib al-Zamān;¹⁴² Repudiated (Al-Khalī 'in);¹⁴³ The Camel Seeking Aid from Its Master;¹⁴⁴ Superiority of the Rectum over the Mouth; his rare anecdotes and poems.¹⁴⁵

¹³⁴ Flügel has al-insān ("man") instead of "head," but questions its accuracy.

¹³⁵ Flügel gives al-rizq ("gain"), but the Beatty and Tonk MSS have al-ziqq ("wine flask").

¹³⁶ Flügel is uncertain about "sea," but it is clear in the Beatty MS.

¹³⁷ This translation is taken from Flügel, who seems to be correct. The Beatty and Tonk MSS have a variation.

¹³⁸ This title probably refers to special types of stairs used in medieval times.

¹⁴⁰ This title is only in the Flügel edition. The one which follows it is in the Beatty and Tonk MSS, but not in Flügel.

¹⁴¹ Flügel garbles the word for "surnames."

¹⁴² The Shī'ah give this name ("Lord of Time") to their last imam, who is some day to reappear.

¹⁴³ This title as translated is taken from the Beatty MS. It is perhaps meant to be al-jalī'in ("obscene"), but more likely is a form derived from khuḥ'ah ("divorce"). Another title follows here in the Beatty MS. It is omitted in the translation since it is apparently a repetition, badly copied.

¹⁴⁴ There is a variation in the Tonk MS which seems to be due to bad copying.

¹⁴⁵ This title is in the Flügel edition alone.

Abū Ḥassān al-Namālī

He was Abū Ḥassān Muḥammad ibn Ḥassān, one of the men of good spirits and culture. He lived during the days of al-Muta-wakkil, about whom and himself there are numerous anecdotes. Among his books there were:

The large book, Burjān and Ḥubāḥib, with stories of women and sexual intercourse;¹⁴⁶ a small book about the same subject; Adultery; Al-Suḥq;¹⁴⁷ Address of the Muleteer to the Slave Girl of the Vegetable Vendor.

Abū al-ʿIbar al-Hāshimī

He was surnamed Abū al-ʿAbbās and was Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn ʿAbd Allāh ibn ʿAbd al-Ṣamad ibn ʿAlī ibn ʿAbd Allāh ibn al-ʿAbbās. Jahḡzah said, "I never saw anyone who could remember better than he did, even every [letter] ʿayn, nor anybody better at poetry, nor is there in the world any art which he did not learn to do with his own hand. I have even seen him kneading dough and baking."

His father was nicknamed "al-Ḥāmiḍ." He [al-Hāshimī] was a man who remembered [anecdotes] and was cultured, but [because of] extreme opposition and cursing he was killed at Qaṣr ibn Hubayrah.¹⁴⁸ When he went out to get his belongings, a group of the Shīʿah¹⁴⁹ killed him, because they heard him slandering ʿAlī, for whom may there be peace. They threw things down on him from the roof of an inn (khān) where he was spending the night. Thus he died during the year two hundred and fifty [A.D. 864]. From his poetry there was:

¹⁴⁶ Burjān was a robber and Ḥubāḥib a miser; see Richardson, Dictionary, pp. 257, 552.

¹⁴⁷ The Flügel edition gives what might be al-suḥq ("remoteness"), or al-sahq ("tearing," as of an old garment). The word is not written clearly in the Beatty MS, but the most reasonable way by which to decipher it there is as al-saniq. In former times this might mean "banner," "cornet," or "waistband," usually the first meaning. But as this author wrote books about sex, the word may imply homosexual practice, as sahḡāqah was used for a Lesbian; see Lane, Lexicon, IV, 1319.

¹⁴⁸ A fortress on the Euphrates near al-Kūfah; see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 123.

¹⁴⁹ This first part of the sentence follows the Beatty and Tonk MSS. Flügel has variations, although the meaning is the same.

A visitor whose beauty was perfect;
For how can the night hide when the full moon is rising?
He spent time in vagueness until it became possible
To (and) watch the guardian¹⁵⁰ until he went to sleep.
Through terrors did he ride to make his visit,
But no sooner did he give his greeting than he departed.

A book which he called, A Collection of Stupid Women and a Gathering Together of Foolish Ones;¹⁵¹ Court Companionship and the Characters of the Caliphs and Emirs; Epistles;¹⁵² his rare anecdotes and dictations; his traditions and poems.

Ibn al-Shāh al-Ṭāhirī

Abū al-Qāsim ʿAlī ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Shāh al-Ṭāhirī was one of the descendants of al-Shāh ibn Mikāl, who was a man of letters, refined, and witty, with extreme beauty and purity of literary style. Among his books there were:

Summons of the Seas;¹⁵³ The Glory of Combing at the Mirror; The Dream; The War of Cheese and Olives; The War of Meat and Fish; Wonders of the Sea;¹⁵⁴ Adultery and Its Enjoyment; his poetry, with a selection from "Yā Makānis";¹⁵⁵ Traditions about al-Ghilmān;¹⁵⁶ Traditions about the Women; Masturbation (Al-Khaḡkhaḡah);¹⁵⁷ The Food Vendor.

¹⁵⁰ Flügel gives al-sāmīr ("one conversing at night"), whereas the other versions have al-ḡāris ("guardian"). On the margin of the Beatty MS there is a note implying that these verses were interpreted in various ways.

¹⁵¹ Flügel gives "abode" (māʿwa), but the Beatty and Tonk MSS have "comprising" (ḡāwi).

¹⁵² This and the two titles which follow are in Flügel but not the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

¹⁵³ The Beatty and Tonk MSS give "seas" (al-biḡār), whereas Flügel has "merchants" (al-tijār).

¹⁵⁵ "Yā Makānis" is quite clear in the Beatty MS. It apparently means "Oh, Brooms" and was probably the beginning of an amusing poem.

¹⁵⁶ Here al-ghilmān obviously refers to boys used for homosexual purposes.

¹⁵⁷ This word means "stirring," but here is used for "masturbation." This and the title which follows are only in the Flügel edition.

A Man Known as al-Mubārakī

His name was ———. Among his books there were:

The Uncultivated, the Rabble, and the Characters of the Common People;¹⁵⁸ Rare Anecdotes about Slave Boys (al-Ghilmān) and Eunuchs.

Al-Kutanjī

He was ——— and he belonged to the group of Abū al-ʿAnbas and Abū al-ʿIbar [al-Hāshimī]. It is said that he succeeded Abū al-ʿIbar as jester after his death. I have read what was written in the handwriting of Ibn Namandād,¹⁵⁹ that al-Kutanjī wrote to Sulaymān ibn Wahb or to [his son] ʿUbayd Allāh:

The confusion is mine, for truly of all your brothers the most foolish is like me and the most intelligent like you. We are at a time when the opinion of the intelligent is of little use for the mind, so leave it, but the opinion of the foolish has great usefulness for ignorance and is needed. Thus futile are those when they cease and those when they are needed, so we know not with what to live.¹⁶⁰

Among his books there were:

Compendium of Foolish Things and the Origin of Follies; Witticisms and Fools;¹⁶¹ Slap-Takers (Clowns, Al-Ṣafāʿinah); Al-Makhraqah [charlatanry, juggling, or a wreath used in dancing].

Jirāb al-Dawlah

His name was Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn ʿAlawīyah al-Sijzī, surnamed Abū al-ʿAbbās. He was one of the people of al-Rayy but he was called Sijzī, and was a tanbur player who affected elegance and used perfumes. He was nicknamed “al-Rīḥ” (Odor, Wind)

¹⁵⁸ The translation follows Flügel in giving “characters” (akhlāf), which may be more correct than the word in the Beatty MS, “contrariness” (ikhtilāf).

¹⁵⁹ This name is too uncertain to be included in the Biog. Index. Flügel adds, “I think it was Mānī-Dād.” In the Beatty MS is might be a compound name taken from yāmin (“happy”) and the ending dād.

¹⁶¹ This title and the two which follow are in the Flügel edition but not the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

and known as “Jirāb al-Dawlah” (Scrotum of the Government).¹⁶² Among his books there was Things Rare and Laughable, about various arts and rarities. He also called the book Perfuming the Winds and the Key to Joy and Gladness. He wrote it as a miscellany of arts and it was a large book.

Al-Barmakī

He was the secretary of Abū Jaʿfar ibn ʿAbbāsah, the friend¹⁶³ of Muʿizz al-Dawlah. His name was ———. He had a withered hand. Among his books there were:

The Compendium, about the poems of the distinguished poets;¹⁶⁴ Things Rare and Laughable.

Ibn Bakr al-Shīrāzī¹⁶⁵

He was gifted, well educated, and pleasing as a companion. He was the secretary of al-Muʿtī. He wrote good poetry. Among his books there were:

Methods (Necessities) and Arts; The Composition of Epistles; also, the writings which he took from al-Muʿtī li-Allāh.¹⁶⁶

Another Group Left Over¹⁶⁷ and Representing Miscellaneous Subjects

Ibn al-Faqīh al-Hamadhānī

His name was Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad [ibn Ishāq] and he was a man of letters, but we do not know anything more about his life. Among his books there were:

The Towns (Regions), about one thousand leaves—he derived it from the people’s books and plagiarism from the book of al-Jayhānī, [Roads

¹⁶³ “Friend” (ṣāhib) is taken from the Tonk MS. Flügel and the Beatty MS give ṣāhib jamāl (“possessor of beauty”), which does not seem to fit this passage.

¹⁶⁴ The translation follows Flügel. The Beatty and Tonk MSS do not give this title clearly.

¹⁶⁵ This account of al-Shīrāzī is found only in the Flügel edition.

¹⁶⁶ Probably meaning he took the writings down from dictation.

and Kingdoms]; Mention of the More Recent Poets and the Eloquent and Illustrious among Them.¹⁶⁸

'Ubayd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik ———, the Secretary

Among his books there were:

Intoxication during the Day and Incessant Wine Drinking;¹⁶⁹ The Preference of Morning Drink and Its Benefits, with the Faults and Defects of Drink at Night.

A Man Known as Ibn al-Mu'tamir or Abū al-Mu'tamir

He was Zayd ibn Aḥmad ibn Zayd the secretary, whose book was Courage and the Fecundity of Eloquence, in which he praised the family of Aḥmad ibn 'Isā ibn Shaykh.

Al-Mas'ūdī

This man, from among the people of al-Maghrib (North Africa), was known as Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Alī al-Mas'ūdī. He was a descendant of 'Abd Allāh ibn Mas'ūd and a compiler of books about the history and traditions of the kings.¹⁷⁰ Among his books there were:

The book known as Murūj al-Dhahab wa-Ma'ādin al-Jawhar (Fields of Gold and Mines of Jewels), about the pleasing things (gifts) of the nobles and kings, with the names of those in relationship with them;¹⁷¹ Treasures of Sciences and What There Was in the Passing of the Ages; Recollection of What Has Gone By in the Passing of the Ages; History, with traditions about the peoples, both Arab and foreign; Epistles.¹⁷²

¹⁶⁹ This title is in the Flügel edition but not in the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

¹⁷⁰ Many authorities think that al-Mas'ūdī did not come from North Africa. As he died in Egypt only about thirty years before this passage was written, it is probable that the author of Al-Fihrist knew very little about him.

¹⁷¹ The word translated "pleasing things" or "gifts" is tuhaf, which perhaps means here "favors" or "patronage." For this book, see Bibliography, Mas'ūdī.

¹⁷² This title is only in the Flügel edition. The title preceding it may be the book which Mas'ūdī himself refers to as Akhbār al-Zamān; see Mas'ūdī, I, 2.

Al-Ahwāzī Muḥammad ibn Ishāq, surnamed Abū Bakr

Among his books there were:

The Bee, Its Species and Its Bride;¹⁷³ Agriculture and Cultivation.

Al-Shimshātī

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Muḥammad al-'Adawī, whose origin was from Shimshāt in the land of Armenia on the frontier.¹⁷⁴ After tutoring Abū Taghlib, the son of Nāṣir al-Dawlah, and his brother, he became their court companion. He was a poet, compiler, and author, with a good memory, and [he memorized] many quotations, to which he used to add. Thus¹⁷⁵ I used to know him in former times, but it is said that he had greatly deteriorated¹⁷⁶ in character during his old age, for he is still living in this our own time. Among his books there were:

Lights, stringing together descriptions, anecdotes and similitudes (allegories)—first he wrote it and then afterwards added to it; the large book, Habitations; Traditions about Abū Tammām, with a selection from his poetry; Knowledge, the compiling of which he improved;¹⁷⁷ The True Triangle.¹⁷⁸

Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Sarrāj

He was one of the people of Naysābūr, who was quoted by a man known as al-Muzakkī. His name was Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad al-Naysābūrī. Among his books there were:

Traditions, in which he recorded traditions about the authorities of the Ḥadīth, the viziers, governors, and other persons in various lands, citing each, man after man; The Agreeable Book of Epistles;¹⁷⁹ Selected Poems, Which of Them Were Genuine and Which Plagiarized.

¹⁷³ The "bride" is obviously the queen bee. The title which follows is in the Flügel edition alone.

¹⁷⁴ For Shimshāt, see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 319. The name is given clearly in the Beatty MS, but incorrectly by Flügel.

¹⁷⁵ Before the word "thus" Flügel adds an extra word which is not in the Beatty or Tonk MSS.

¹⁷⁶ For the word translated as "deteriorated" Flügel gives tarak ("left"), but the Beatty and Tonk MSS have nazal ("lowered").

¹⁷⁷ The Tonk MS differs from the other versions by giving "pen" (al-qalam) instead of "knowledge" (al-'ilm).

¹⁷⁸ Only Flügel gives this title.

¹⁷⁹ This title and that following are in the Flügel edition, but not in the Beatty or Tonk MSS.

Ibn Khallād al-Rāmahurmuzī

He was Abū Muḥammad al-Ḥasan ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Khallād, a judge, good author, and excellent compiler, who followed the method of al-Jāḥiẓ. Ibn Sawwār, the secretary, told me that he was also a poet and that he studied (heard) and quoted the Ḥadīth. Among his books there were:

The Springtime of Those Enslaved by Love, with traditions about lovers; Defects in Selecting Historical Traditions;¹⁸⁰ Similes (Proverbs) of the Prophet, for Whom Be Peace; Al-Rayḥānatayn, al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn, for Whom and Their Families May There Be Peace;¹⁸¹ The Guide of Revelation, about the Qur'ān; Rarities and Anomalies of Speech; Training of a Speaker (Reasonable Being); Praising the Dead and Giving Condolence; Epistle of the Journey (Book); Old Age and Youth;¹⁸² Culture of the [Dinner] Tables (Table Manners); Places for Watering and Resting and Affection for the Homelands.

Al-Āmidī

His name is al-Ḥasan ibn Bishr ibn Yaḥyā, surnamed Abū al-Qāsim. He is one of the people of al-Baṣrah, contemporary with our time, I believe still alive. He is skillful in compiling and good in composing, drawing upon the school of thought of al-Jāḥiẓ for whatever writing of books he undertakes. Among his books there are:

The Intensity of Man's Need to Know His Own Power;¹⁸³ Disagreement and Agreement about the Names of the Poets; The Meaning of the Poetry of al-Buḥturī; Metrical Prose; Parallels between Abū Tammām and al-Buḥturī; Refutation of 'Alī ibn 'Ammār in Connection with His Criticism of Abū Tammām; The Thoughts of Two Poets Are Not in Agreement; Correction of the Measures in the Poetry of Ibn Ṭabāṭabā;

¹⁸⁰ Flügel gives al-'ilal ("defects"), but the Beatty MS gives al-falak, probably meaning "astronomy," or "the celestial sphere."

¹⁸² Only Flügel gives this title and the two which follow.

¹⁸³ All of these titles are in the Flügel edition, but this is the only one of the list in the Beatty and Tonk MSS. The word "about" precedes some of these titles.

The Difference between the Particular and the Shared in the Meaning of Poetry;¹⁸⁴ Preference for the Poetry of Imru' al-Qays over That of the Other Pre-Islāmic Poets.

Chess Players Who Wrote about Playing Chess

Al-'Adli

His name was ——— and among his books there were: Chess, the first book written about chess;¹⁸⁵ Al-Nard, Its Elements and Play.¹⁸⁶

Al-Rāzī

His name was ———. He was the equal of al-'Adli and they both used to play in the presence of al-Mutawakkil. Al-Rāzī wrote A Delightful Book about Chess.¹⁸⁷

Al-Ṣūli

He was Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā, who has already been mentioned. He wrote on the subject:

Chess, the first manuscript; Chess, the second manuscript.

Al-Lajlāj¹⁸⁸

He was Abū al-Faraj Muḥammad ibn 'Ubayd Allāh. I saw him at one time. He went to Shīrāz, to the King 'Aḍud al-Dawlah, and some time after the year three hundred and sixty [A.D. 970/71] he died at Shīrāz, where he had excelled [at chess]. His book on the subject was The Stratagems of Chess (Manṣūbāt al-Shiṭranj), ¹⁸⁴ This title is not given correctly by Flügel. The translation follows Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (3), 58, and Ḥajjī Khalifah, IV, 415, No. 9026.

¹⁸⁷ The words "about chess" only appear in the Flügel text.

¹⁸⁸ Flügel gives the death date of al-Lajlāj, as well as his full name and the full name of Ibn al-Uqlīdāsī, in the paragraph which follows. The Beatty and Tonk MSS lack this information.

Ibn al-Uqlīdāsī Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad ibn Šālīḥ

He was one of the most skillful [chess players], who wrote A Collection of the Stratagems of Chess.

Qarīṣ al-Mughannī

Qarīṣ al-Jarrāhī belonged to the group of Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd ibn al-Jarrāh. His name was ——— and he was one of the most skillful of the singers and the learned among them. He should have been mentioned in the category of Jahḡah, following and attached to the statement about him, but I neglected to mention him there. Jahḡah said in rhyme:

We ate qarīṣ and Qarīṣ sang,
As we spent the night in the glory of the triumphant one.¹⁸⁹

Qarīṣ died during the year twenty-four [A.H. 324: A.D. 935/36], in the same year Jahḡah died. Among his books there was The Art of Singing, Traditions of the Singers, and Alphabetical Mention of the Refrains (al-Aṣwāt) Which They Sang. Although he did not complete it, what he did produce amounted to about one thousand leaves.

Ibn Ṭarkhān

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Ḥasan, who had a good method of singing and some share of culture. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Rare Anecdotes and Historical Traditions; Accounts of the Singers and Tanbur Players; Genealogies (Pedigrees) of Pigeons; What Has Developed with Regards to Superiority of Birds Which Lead.¹⁹⁰

¹⁸⁹ Qarīṣ is a dish made of fish, meat, and bread. It was evidently the nickname of the singer. The final word of the poem is al-fālij, which can be a proper name, but also signifies "the triumphant one," as translated, or "the paralyzed."

¹⁹⁰ In Asia pigeons were used for carrying messages and it was also popular to fly one's own flock in such a way as to attract the birds from neighboring flocks.

The Fourth Part of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the ancient and modern scholars who were authors and the names of the books which they wrote. The composition of Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Nadīm, known as Abū al-Faraj ibn Abī Ya'qūb al-Warrāq.¹

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate, to whom I commit myself and whose aid I seek

of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they wrote, comprising the poets, in two sections.²

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: In [the first section of] this chapter we have aimed to make mention of the composers of the ancient poems, the names of those who quoted them, and their anthologies; also the names of the poems of the tribes and those who collected and compiled them.

In the second section of this chapter, which includes the poems of the more recent authors, we shall mention the amount of material in the poetry of each of the poets, indicating who among them was prolific and who wrote only a small amount. By His bounty and kindness Allāh will grant whatever our souls may need from Him for this task.

² This part of the heading also follows the Beatty MS, which is more complete than the Tonk MS and varies slightly from the Flügel version.

[The First Section]

The Names of Those Who Quoted the Tribes and the Poems of the Pre-Islāmic and Islāmic Poets to the Beginning of the Rule of the Banū al-'Abbās³

Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī, who has already been mentioned; Khālīd ibn Kulthūm al-Kūfī, already mentioned; Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb, already mentioned; al-Ṭūsī, already mentioned; al-Aṣma'ī 'Abd al-Malik ibn Qurayb, already mentioned; Ibn al-A'rābī, also previously mentioned.

In what has preceded we have recorded who among these scholars was among those who quoted [poems and anecdotes], or was a master of literary style, or was an Arabian tribesman. There is, therefore, no need for repetition, since when there is a demand, each can be sought in his proper place, if Allāh so wills.

Imru' al-Qays ibn Ḥujr⁴

He was quoted by Abū 'Amr [al-Shaybānī], al-Aṣma'ī, Khālīd ibn Kulthūm, and Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb. Abū Sa'īd al-Sukkārī edited all of the things quoted from him, making improvements. Abū al-'Abbās al-Aḥwal also edited them, but without finishing, and Ibn al-Sikkīt also worked over them.⁵

Zuhayr ibn Abī Sulmā

A number of persons quoted his poetry, abbreviating it, their quotations differing. Al-Sukkārī edited it, improving its rendition.⁶

³ For well-known translations of some of these ancient poems, see Mufaḍḍal, Mufaḍḍaliyyāt (Lyall) and Tammām, Al-Ḥamāsah.

⁴ Only the Flügel edition includes "ibn Ḥujr" in the poet's name.

⁵ The great language scholars studied early Arab poems, so as to understand the tribal dialects and gain a knowledge of unusual words in the Qur'ān. As some of these poems were heard orally or obtained in crude writing, it was necessary to work over them, edit them, and make improvements.

⁶ The Tonk MS adds, "Abū al-'Abbās al-Aḥwal worked over it, but without finishing." This may be an error by the copyist, a partial repetition of the last sentence in the preceding paragraph.

The Names of the Poets Whose Poems Abū Sa'īd al-Sukkārī Edited

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: Abū Sa'īd al-Sukkārī, whose name was al-Ḥasan ibn al-Ḥusayn, was the one among the scholars who edited the poems of the poets, improving and correcting them. As I have already dealt thoroughly with him in his proper place, I shall only mention at this point what he edited, to make it available for one desiring to get hold of it. In this place I shall also record he who did as al-Sukkārī did, abridging and improving, so that, if Allāh so wills, there will be no need for repetition.

Among Those⁷

Imru' al-Qays, already mentioned.

Al-Nābighah al-Dhubyānī: al-Aṣma'ī also edited and condensed; Ibn al-Sikkīt and al-Ṭūsī improved it.

Zuhayr, already mentioned.

Al-Ḥuṣay'ah: edited by al-Aṣma'ī, Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī, al-Ṭūsī, and Ibn al-Sikkīt.

Al-Nābighah al-Ja'dī: edited by al-Aṣma'ī, Ibn al-Sikkīt, and al-Ṭūsī.

Labīd ibn Rabī'ah: edited by Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī, al-Aṣma'ī, al-Ṭūsī, and Ibn al-Sikkīt.

Tamīm ibn Ubayy ibn Muqbil: Abū 'Amr [al-Shaybānī], al-Aṣma'ī, al-Ṭūsī, and Ibn al-Sikkīt.

Durayd ibn al-Ṣimmah: al-Aṣma'ī and Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī.

'Amr ibn Ma'dī Karīb: Abū 'Amr [al-Shaybānī].

Muḥallil ibn Rabī'ah: al-Aṣma'ī and Ibn al-Sikkīt.

Al-A'shā al-Kabīr:⁸ Abū 'Amr [al-Shaybānī], al-Aṣma'ī, Ibn al-Sikkīt, al-Ṭūsī, and Tha'lab.

A'shā Bāhilah: al-Aṣma'ī and Ibn al-Sikkīt.

⁷ For the first part of this listing of poets the Beatty MS has two vertical columns, with the names of the editors placed under the poets' names. The other versions have horizontal lines. Beginning with al-Kumayt which is near n. 18, the Beatty MS returns to horizontal listing. Up to this point in the list, mention of a poet's name without any editor's name following evidently means that only al-Sukkārī worked over the poems of that man. When the poet's name is followed by a colon, the name or names following the colon are those of editors who in addition to al-Sukkārī edited the material. The order of the poets is different in the different versions. Compare this list with Aṣma'ī, Fuḥūlat al-Shu'arā'.

⁸ Almost certainly Maymūn ibn Qays, called al-Kabīr ("the elder" or "the great").

Mutammim ibn Nuwayrah:⁹ Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī and al-Aṣma'ī.

Bishr ibn Abī Khāzim:¹⁰ al-Aṣma'ī and Ibn al-Sikkīt.

Al-Zibraḡān ibn Badr: al-Aṣma'ī, Abū 'Amr [al-Shaybānī], and others in addition to them.¹¹

Al-Mutalammis: al-Aṣma'ī, and others, too.

Al-Musayyab ibn 'Alas: a group.

Humayd ibn Thawr al-Rājiz:¹² al-Aṣma'ī, Abū 'Amr [al-Shaybānī], Ibn al-Sikkīt, and al-Ṭūsī.

Humayd al-Arqaṭ: al-Aṣma'ī, Abū 'Amr [al-Shaybānī], Ibn al-Sikkīt, and al-Ṭūsī.

'Adī ibn Zayd al-'Ibādī: a group.

'Adī ibn al-Riqā' al-'Āmīlī: a group.

Suhaym ibn Wathīl: al-Aṣma'ī and Ibn al-Sikkīt.

Al-Ṭirimmāh; al-Ṭūsī improved [his poetry] and a group [edited it].

'Urwah ibn al-Ward: al-Aṣma'ī and Ibn al-Sikkīt.

Shahīb ibn al-Barṣā'.

'Amr ibn Sha's: al-Aṣma'ī and Ibn Ḥabīb.¹³

Al-'Abbās ibn Mirdās al-Sulamī: al-Ṭūsī and Ibn al-Sikkīt.

Al-Namir ibn Tawlab:¹⁴ al-Aṣma'ī and Ibn al-'A'rābī.

Al-Marrār al-Faq'asī.

Abū al-Ṭamahān al-Qaynū.

Sālim ibn Wābisah.¹⁵

Al-'Abbās ibn 'Utbah ibn Abī Lahab.

Al-Shammākh.

Ma'n ibn Aws.

Al-Rā'ī 'Ubayd.

'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Ḥassān and his son, Sa'id ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān.

'Ubayd Allāh ibn Qays al-Ruḡayyāt: al-Aṣma'ī and al-Ṭūsī.

Abū al-Aswad al-Du'ālī: Abū 'Amr [al-Shaybānī].

Jirān al-'Awd al-Nūmayrī.

Al-Ḥādirah: Ibn Durayd also [edited his poetry].

⁹ Flügel alone gives this name correctly.

¹⁰ The Beatty MS has Bishr ibn Ḥāzim.

¹¹ Omitted by Flügel.

¹² Flügel gives al-Rabbāhī, but the Beatty and Tonk MSS have al-Rājiz.

¹³ The Beatty and Tonk MSS have Ibn Jundub, but as he was a poet rather than an editor, Flügel is probably correct in giving Ibn Ḥabīb, evidently meaning Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb.

¹⁴ This name is given correctly by Flügel, but seems to be garbled in the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

¹⁵ This name is correct in Flügel but garbled in the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

Mudarras ibn Rib'ī: al-Aṣma'ī and others, too.

Khuraybah:¹⁶ a group.

Khidāsh ibn Zuhayr.

Muzāhim al-'Uqaylī: a group.

Abū Ḥayyāh al-Numayrī: al-Aṣma'ī.¹⁷

Al-Khansā': Ibn al-Sikkīt, Ibn al-'A'rābī, and others besides them.¹⁸

Al-Kumayt: Al-Aṣma'ī edited his poetry, Ibn al-Sikkīt made additions, and a group of scholars quoted his poetry from Ibn Kunāsah al-Asadī. Ibn Kunāsah quoted the poetry from Abū Jāzī,¹⁹ Abū al-Mawṣūl, and Abū Ṣadaḡah, who quoted it from the Banū Asad Tribe. Ibn al-Sikkīt quoted the poetry from his teacher, Naṣrān. Naṣrān, moreover, said, "I learned the poetry of al-Kumayt from Abū Ḥafṣ 'Umar ibn Bukayr." Al-Sukkarī also edited the poetry of al-Kumayt.

Dhū al-Rumīnah: a group of scholars edited and quoted his poetry. It was Abū al-'Abbās al-Aḥwal who made an edition from all of these quotations. Al-Sukkarī also edited his poetry, adding to what was done by the group. Those who quoted the poetry of Dhū al-Rumīnah were al-Ḥarīsh ibn Numayr, who learned it from his father; Hilāl ibn Mayyās;²⁰ al-Muntajī ibn Nabhān, quoted by Abū 'Ubaydah; al-Layth ibn Dūmām,²¹ who learned it from Abū al-Marḡā; and al-Nusayr ibn Qāsim, who quoted Abū Jahm al-'Adawī.²²

Abū al-Najm al-'Ijlī: Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī quoted the poetry of Abū al-Najm from Muḥammad ibn Shaybān ibn Abī al-Najm and from Abū al-Azhar, who was the son of the daughter of Abū al-Najm. Abū Sa'id al-Sukkarī also edited his work, improving it.

¹⁷ The Beatty MS inserts the word muhdath ("beginner," "originator"), or muhaddith ("relator") at this point. It may be a mistake, or meant to be some other word.

¹⁸ With the next name the Beatty MS again takes up its customary horizontal lines, ending the double vertical columns of poets' names (see n. 7).

¹⁹ In the Beatty MS this name is given as Abū Hurrī, but Flügel suggests that perhaps Abū Jāzī is meant.

²¹ This name seems to be given inaccurately in the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

²² In the Arabic texts the name is given as Abū Juhmah al-'Adawī, although it is probably meant to be the name given in the translation. For al-'Adawī, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 130, l. 3.

Al-'Ajjāj al-Rājaz; al-Aṣma'ī and Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī [edited his poetry].

Ru'bah ibn al-'Ajjāj, who was one of the more recent poets: al-Aṣma'ī quoted the poetry of Ru'bah directly from him, as did also Abū 'Amr al-Shaybānī and a number of other scholars. Abū Sa'id al-Sukkarī edited and improved his poetry.

Al-Akhṭal: al-Sukkarī edited his poetry, improving it.

Al-Farazdaq: al-Sukkarī also edited his poetry and improved it.

Jarīr: al-Sukkarī did not edit his poetry. Those who did edit it belonged to a group of scholars, among whom were Abū 'Amr [al-Shaybānī], al-Aṣma'ī, and Ibn al-Sikkit. The person who quoted the poetry of Jarīr directly from him with his contentions²³ was Miṣhal ibn Kaṣīb ibn 'Ammār ibn 'Aṭṭā ibn al-Khaṭafā. This is what is written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Kūfī.

The contests between Jarīr and Farazdaq were edited by Abū 'Ubaydah Ma'mar ibn al-Muthannā, while al-Aṣma'ī quoted them from another source. Abū Sa'id al-Ḥasan ibn al-Ḥusayn [al-Sukkarī] edited and improved them. Abū al-Mughith al-Awḍī also edited them, and Tha'lab quoted them from him.

The Names of Those Who Contended with Jarīr and Whom Jarīr Opposed

Contentions of Jarīr and al-Akhṭal; Abū 'Amr [al-Shaybānī] and al-Aṣma'ī [edited them].

Contentions of Jarīr and 'Umar ibn Lajā': Abū 'Amr and al-Aṣma'ī [edited them].

Contentions of Jarīr and al-Farazdaq.²⁴

The Names of the Children of Jarīr Who Were Poets, and Also of His Grandchildren²⁵

Nūḥ ibn Jarīr, a poet who composed only a small amount.

Bilāl ibn Jarīr, a poet who composed only a small amount.

²³ In the Beatty MS this word is "faults" (naqa'is), but because Jarīr was known for his arguing, "contentions" (naqa'id) must be the word meant. See "Djarīr," Enc. Islam, I, 1024; also Jarīr, Naqa'id.

²⁴ In this passage Flügel does not give the editors. The Beatty and Tonk MSS give the editors, but give the last title as simply Contentions of Jarīr.

²⁵ Jarīr had eight sons and two daughters; see Qutaybah, Shi'r, pp. 283-89. The translation follows the Beatty MS.

A daughter of Jarīr, whose name was ———, a poetess who composed only a small amount.

'Aqīl ibn Bilāl, a poet who composed only a small amount.

'Umārah ibn 'Aqīl, an excellent and prolific poet.

³⁰ This arrangement is taken from the Beatty MS, which differs from the other versions and which has a space between the two last names, evidently left for material to be added later.

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Second Section of the Fourth Chapter of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they wrote, including the names of the more recent poets and some of the Islāmic ones, with the amount of their poetry, up to our own time.¹

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]:² At the beginning of this chapter we stated that we do not favor going into detail in connection with the poets, for we have already mentioned the scholars and men of letters who have undertaken this. We ourselves aim to present the names of the poets and the amount of poetry written by each poet among them, especially by the more recent ones, and also the variations occurring in their poems, so that whoever desires to collect books and poems can have this information and an insight into the matter. If we say that the poetry of a certain man fills ten leaves, we mean Sulaymānīyah ones, holding twenty lines, I mean on each side of the leaf.³ We shall follow this designation in connection with all of the small and large amounts of poetry that are mentioned, giving approximate figures and basing our estimates on what we have observed during the course of years, but without verification or figures of final accuracy.

¹ Flügel inserts "up to our own time," but the other versions omit this phrase. This passage suggests that al-Nadīm wrote his account of the poets as a catalogue for the customers at his father's bookshop to use.

² The Tonk MS gives "the author," instead of the proper name.

³ Sulaymānīyah was evidently the name of a kind of paper. A leaf refers to a single sheet of paper, often inscribed on both sides.

Bashshār ibn Burd

He was nicknamed al-Mura'ath⁴ and was a protégé of the Banū 'Aqil Tribe, said to be of Persian origin. No one has collected all of his poetry. It is not collected into any anthology, but I have seen about a thousand disconnected leaves of it and a number of people have compiled selections of his poems.

Ibn Harmah

He was Ibrāhīm ibn 'Alī ibn Harmah, whose poetry by itself fills about two hundred leaves. In the edition of Abū Sa'īd al-Sukkārī, however, there are about five hundred leaves. Although al-Šūlī also worked over it, nothing came of it.

Abū al-'Atāhiyah

The situation with regards to his poetry is like that of [the poetry of] Bashshār. Parts of his poetry, which I saw at al-Mawṣil, filled more than twenty sections of half-size Ṭalhī [paper], written in the handwriting of Ibn 'Ammār, who was a scribe for the poetry of the more recent poets. But what I saw in separate portions⁵ indicated that [altogether] there were thirty sections. A number of persons have collected traditions about him and his poetry. We have mentioned what they wrote as we have discussed them.

Abū Nuwās

He is so celebrated that it is unnecessary to go into detail about his lineage and biography. Abū Nuwās died during the civil war in the year two hundred [A.D. 815/16], before al-Ma'mūn advanced from Khurāsān.⁶ Ibn Qutaybah said it was during the year one hundred and ninety-nine [A.D. 814/15].

One of the persons who edited the poetry of Abū Nuwās, without alphabetical order, was Yahyā ibn al-Faḍl, who quoted and edited his work according to ten subjects. Among the scholars, there was Abū Yūsuf Ya'qūb ibn al-Sikkīt, who commented on his work in about eight hundred leaves, arranged also according to ten subjects. Abū Sa'īd al-Sukkārī edited his work, too, but did not finish it. The part which he did edit was two thirds [of the whole], filling a thousand leaves.

⁴ The Beatty MS spells this name Murghath, which is almost certainly incorrect. Cf. Qutaybah, Shi'r, p. 476.

⁵ Only the Beatty MS contains the phrase "in separate portions."

⁶ This was the struggle between the heirs of Hārūn al-Rashīd, who died A.D. 809.

Among the men of letters [who edited his work]:

Al-Šūlī edited his work alphabetically, omitting what was falsely ascribed to him.

'Alī ibn Ḥamzah al-Iṣbahānī also edited his work alphabetically.

Yūsuf ibn al-Dāyah wrote an account about him and compiled a selection of his poetry.

Abū Hifḡān also wrote an account about him, with a selection of his poetry.

Ibn al-Washshā' Abū Ṭayyib, too, wrote an account about him and made a selection of his poetry.

Ibn 'Ammār wrote an account about him and made a selection of his poetry, with also an epistle about his faults and plagiarisms.

In one of the books written by the family of al-Munajjim about the poetry of the more recent writers, there is an account about him [Abū Nuwās] with a selection of his poetry. Mention of that has already been made.

Abū al-Ḥasan al-Sumaysāfi also wrote an account about Abū Nuwās, with a selection of his poetry, and [about] his triumph, with remarks on his excellencies.

Muslim ibn al-Walīd

He is famous, his poetry filling about two hundred leaves arranged alphabetically. Al-Šūlī edited [his poetry], and also a man known as ———, who is living in our own time.

Marwān ibn Abī Ḥafṣah al-Rashīdī, His Family and Descendants Who Were Poets

Abū Ḥafṣah was the first. His name was Yazīd and he lived during the days of 'Uthmān ibn 'Affān, with whom may Allāh be well pleased.⁷

He wrote only a very small amount.

Yahyā ibn Abī Ḥafṣah lived at the time of 'Abd al-Malik ibn Marwān and was a poet who wrote a small amount, about twenty leaves.

⁷ The pious phrase is found only in Flügel.

Marwān ibn Sulaymān ibn Yaḥyā ibn Abī Ḥafṣah, surnamed Abū al-Samṭ,⁸ was a poet whose poetry filled about three hundred leaves. Abū al-Samṭ Marwān ibn Abī al-Janūb ibn Marwān Abū al-Samṭ was a poet whose poetry filled about one hundred and fifty leaves. Muḥammad ibn Marwān ibn Abī al-Janūb was a poet: about fifty leaves.⁹ *Fatūḥ*¹⁰ ibn Maḥmūd ibn Marwān ibn Abī al-Janūb was a poet: about one hundred leaves. Abū Sulaymān Idrīs ibn Sulaymān ibn Abī Ḥafṣah was a poet: about one hundred leaves. Muḥammad ibn Idrīs was a poet who wrote only a small amount. Amīnah, the daughter of al-Walīd ibn Yaḥyā ibn Abī Ḥafṣah, was a poetess who wrote a small amount. Abū al-Samṭ ʿAbd Allāh ibn al-Samṭ was a poet: about one hundred leaves.

The Family of Razīn ibn Sulaymān, a Poet¹¹

ʿAlī ibn Razīn was a poet: about fifty leaves. Dīʿbil ibn ʿAlī: about three hundred leaves, which were edited by al-Ṣūfī.¹² Razīn ibn ʿAlī was a poet: about fifty leaves.¹³ Al-Ḥusayn ibn Dīʿbil was a poet. His poetry: about two hundred leaves. Abū al-Shīṣ Muḥammad ibn ʿAbd Allāh ibn Razīn was the son of the paternal uncle of Dīʿbil and surnamed Abū Jaʿfar. He was a poet; his poetry: about one hundred and fifty leaves, edited by al-Ṣūfī.¹⁴ ʿAbd Allāh ibn Abī al-Shīṣ was a poet; his poetry: about seventy leaves.

⁸ The Beatty and Tonk MSS misspell this name here, but give it correctly in the rest of the passage. Some authorities spell the name "al-Simṭ."

⁹ The number of leaves following the poet's name here and elsewhere refers to the quantity of his poetry.

¹⁰ The Beatty and Tonk MSS have Mutawwaj for the first name. Flügel and Tabarī, Annales, Part III, p. 1467, n. c, give Fatūḥ, which seems to be correct. Muḥammad may be meant instead of Maḥmūd.

¹¹ The Flügel edition does not give this title in its complete form. The number of leaves following each poet's name refers to the quantity of his work.

¹² Flügel adds another editor, al-Khuzāʿī, and also "Among his books there were: Groups of the Poets; The Unique (ʿAl-Wahidah)." The Beatty and Tonk MSS omit these additions, as do also the authorities referred to in the Biog. Index under Dīʿbil.

¹³ Flügel omits this name, but it is included in the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

¹⁴ The Tonk MS confuses two of the lines and the Beatty MS garbles the word for "uncle," but the Flügel version gives the passage clearly.

The Family of Abū al-ʿAtāhiyah

Mention of Abū al-ʿAtāhiyah has already been made, but here we shall record those among his children and grandchildren who were poets. Among them there were:

Muḥammad ibn Abī al-ʿAtāhiyah, surnamed Abū ʿAbd Allāh, was a hermit nicknamed al-ʿAtāhiyah (the Foolish One). He was a poet whose poetry filled about fifty leaves. ʿAbd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī al-ʿAtāhiyah was a poet, the amount of whose poetry was fifty leaves.¹⁵ Abū Suwayd ʿAbd al-Qāwī ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī al-ʿAtāhiyah was a poet whose poetry was fifty leaves.

The Family of Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn¹⁶

Abū al-Ḥusayn Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn was a poet, the amount of whose poetry was fifty leaves. ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn was a poet, the amount of whose poetry was fifty leaves. Muḥammad ibn ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir was a poet, the amount of whose poetry was seventy leaves. Sulaymān ibn ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir was a poet: a small amount. Muḥammad ibn Ṭāhir ibn ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir was a poet: about thirty leaves. ʿUbayd Allāh ibn ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir was a poet; his poetry: about one hundred leaves.

A Statement about the Quantities of the Poems, as Mentioned by Muḥammad ibn Dāʿūd in Kitāb al-Waraqah (The Leaf)¹⁷

At the beginning of this section there was mentioned a group of poets recorded by Muḥammad, and here, if Allāh so wills, there begins a statement of what he recorded other than what we have already mentioned.

¹⁵ This poet and the one following are not mentioned by Flügel but are included in the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

¹⁶ This whole section is omitted by Flügel. This family was famous as the Ṭāhirid Dynasty in Khurāsān, A.D. 820-72.

Ru'bah ibn al-'Ajjāj, the composer of rajaz verse. His poetry was quoted by al-Aṣma'ī and edited by Abū Sa'īd al-Ḥasan ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Sukkarī in nearly one thousand leaves.

Al-Sayyid ibn Muḥammad al-Ḥimyarī, one of the poets of Ahl al-Bayt, among the men of wealth. I saw two sections, about three hundred leaves including only *Al-Rātibāt*¹⁸ by al-Sayyid. I also saw a section of about two hundred leaves containing only *Al-Kaysāniyyāt*¹⁹ of al-Sayyid. Then I saw his poetry as a collection: about five hundred leaves.

Sudayf, a protégé of the Banū al-'Abbās: thirty leaves.²⁰

Ibn Jundub al-Hudhalī: thirty leaves.

'Alī ibn Thābit: one hundred and fifty leaves.

Ḥammād 'Ajrad: fifty leaves.

Abū Nukhaylah al-Rājiz: about fifty leaves.

Ashja' al-Sulamī: about two hundred leaves.

Salamah ibn 'Ayyāsh: about fifty leaves.

Ibn al-Mawlā: about thirty leaves.

Muḥammad ibn Abī 'Uyaynah: about one hundred leaves.²¹

Salm ibn 'Amr al-Khāsir: about one hundred and fifty leaves.

Sulaymān ibn al-Muhājir: about fifty leaves.

Al-Mu'ammal al-Raqqī: about fifty leaves.

Rabī'ah al-Raqqī: one hundred leaves.

Al-Sarī ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān: a small amount.

The Commander of the Faithful al-Mahdī: ten leaves.

Šāliḥ ibn Janāḥ: fifty leaves.

Al-Khalīl ibn Aḥmad: twenty leaves.

Khalaf al-Aḥmar: fifty leaves.

Jahm ibn Khalaf: fifty leaves.

Al-Ḥusayn ibn Muṭayr al-Asadī: about one hundred leaves.

Abū Dulāmah Zand ibn al-Jawn: fifty leaves.²²

¹⁸ This is probably a book title. It could mean "rations" or "ranks," among several other things. It is probably correct as written, although there are no consonant marks.

¹⁹ This is also probably a book title. It refers to a sect. See Iṣbahānī, Aghānī, Part VII, pp. 3, 5; Baghdādī (Seelye), pp. 34, 58; Khallikān, II, 241, n. 2.

²⁰ The number of leaves following each poet's name refers to the quantity of his work.

²¹ After omitting nearly a page, the Flügel account starts again at this point (Flügel, p. 162, top).

²² Flügel omits Abū Dulāmah, giving instead Zayd ibn al-Jahm. The Beatty and Tonk MSS give both names, each with fifty leaves. As Zayd ibn al-Jahm cannot be identified, it is likely that the original was a corrected combination of the two.

Dā'ūd [ibn Salīm] al-Aswad: fifty leaves.

Ibn Ḥassān:²³ fifty leaves.

Sharā'ah ibn al-Zand Būdh: seventy leaves.

'Alī ibn al-Khalīl: one hundred leaves.

Mutī' ibn Iyās: one hundred leaves.

Yahyā ibn Ziyād al-Ḥārithī: seventy leaves.

Munqidh al-Hilālī: fifty leaves.

Walibah ibn al-Ḥubāb: one hundred leaves.²⁴

Sa'īd ibn Wahb: fifty leaves.

Abū al-Tayyāḥān: fifty leaves.

Adam ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz, who was accused of al-zandaqah: twenty leaves.

'Abd Allāh ibn Muṣ'ab: fifty leaves.

'Ukāshah ibn 'Abd al-Šamad: thirty leaves.

'Abd Allāh ibn al-Mubārak al-Khayyāṭ: thirty leaves.

Musāwir al-Warrāq: fifty leaves.

Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Abī Subbah: thirty leaves.

Abū Mālik al-'A'raj: thirty leaves.

Abū al-Walīd al-Zindīq: thirty leaves.

Bishr ibn al-Mu'tamir; an account of him will be given in the fifth chapter. This man was a poet, most of whose poetry was musammaṭ and muzdawij.²⁵ He interpreted in poetry various ideas from books, as I am going to mention. Thus there were [among his books]:

Oneness (Al-Tawḥīd); The Happening of Things; Refutation of the Magians;²⁶ The Proof to Confirm the Prophecy of the Prophet, for Whom May There Be Peace; Refutation of the Christians; Refutation of the Jews; Refutation of the Rāfiḍah; Refutation of the Murji'ah; Refutation of the Khawārīj;²⁷ Refutation of Abū al-Hudhayl; Refutation of al-Nazzām; Refutation of Abū Shimr; against Ziyād al-Mawṣilī; against Dirār [ibn 'Amr]; against Abū Jildah;²⁸ against Ḥafs al-Fard; against Hishām ibn al-Ḥakam; against the adherents of Abū Ḥanīfah; Legal Interpretation by Personal ²³ In the different Arabic texts, this name is given in various ways, none of which seem to be correct. It may be Ibn Ḥassān, as given; see Biog. Index, 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Ḥassān ibn Thābit.

²⁴ This name and the one following are omitted by Flügel.

²⁵ These words denote forms of poetry.

²⁶ The Flügel text has Refutation of the Grammarians.

²⁷ For references to books which explain the sects, see the Glossary.

²⁸ Flügel gives Abū Khālidah, evidently an error.

Opinion;²⁹ Akham ibn Ṣayfī,³⁰ against al-Aṣamm;³¹ The Strife between 'Alī, for Whom May There Be Peace, and Talḥah, with Whom May Allāh Be Well Pleased;³² also, Against al-Aṣamm, concerning the Imamate; Refutation of the Polytheists.

Abū al-Shadā'id al-Fazārī: twenty leaves.

Ishāq ibn al-Faḍl and his brothers, 'Abd al-Raḥmān, Muḥammad, and 'Abd Allāh: a small amount.

Ghālīb ibn 'Uthmān al-Hamadhānī: twenty leaves.

Abū al-Tayyār: fifty leaves.

Abū 'Aṣim al-Aslamī: twenty leaves.

Al-Dārīmī al-Madanī: thirty leaves.

'Alī ibn Ruwaym al-Kūfī: fifty leaves.

'Umar ibn al-Mubārak, a protégé of Khuzā'ah: a small amount.

Ibn Yāmīn al-Baṣrī: twenty leaves.

Abū Hanash al-Numayrī: thirty leaves.

The Family of Abū Umayyah, from [a Source] Other Than Kitāb al-Waraqah (The Leaf)³³

Umayyah ibn Abī Umayyah: fifty leaves.

Muḥammad ibn Abī Umayyah: fifty leaves.

'Alī ibn Umayyah ibn Abī Umayyah: one hundred leaves.

'Abd Allāh ibn Umayyah ibn Abī Umayyah: fifty leaves.

Aḥmad ibn Umayyah ibn Abī Umayyah: thirty leaves.³⁴

Abū Hashshishah, the tanbur player, who has already been mentioned and who wrote no poetry that we know of.

Abū Ḥayyah al-Numayrī: fifty leaves.

Abū Najdah al-Numayrī: thirty leaves.

Muḥammad ibn Dhu'ayb al-'Umānī, the composer of rajaz verse: fifty leaves.

Aḥmad ibn Abī 'Uthmān al-Kātib (the Secretary): fifty leaves.

²⁹ See Glossary.

³⁰ Flügel has al-Ḥusayn ibn Ṣaba'i; the translation follows the Beatty MS.

³¹ This probably refers to al-Aṣamm Abū Bakr. But Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 119, suggests that it might refer to a heretical school of thought.

³² The Beatty and Tonk MSS omit the pious phrases.

³³ See u. 17. The number of leaves following each poet's name refers to the quantity of his poetry.

³⁴ The names which follow this one probably should be separated from those of the family of Abū Umayyah. There is an inch of space at this point in the Beatty MS, evidently left for material to be added later.

'Abd al-Ghaffār ibn 'Amr al-Anṣārī: a small amount.

Saqlah ibn Muntahī al-Madinī: a small amount.

'Ubayd Allāh ibn al-Ḥurr: a small amount.

Abū al-Mu'āfi al-Madanī: twenty leaves.

Al-Mukhayyas ibn Arṭāh al-A'rajī, the composer of rajaz verse: a small amount.³⁵

Al-Danqashī: a small amount.

Ibn Abī al-'Āsiyah al-Sulamī: fifty leaves.

Ibrāhīm ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ḥasan: a small amount.

Mūsā ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ḥasan: a small amount.

Ma'n ibn Zā'idah: a small amount.

Ṣāliḥ ibn 'Abd al-Qaddūs, accused of being a zandīq: fifty leaves.

Salamah ibn 'Abbād ibn Manṣūr: a small amount.

Abū al-Ḥajnā' Nuṣayb: seventy leaves.

Yahyā ibn Bilāl al-'Ibādī: a small amount.

Sulaymān ibn al-Walīd, the brother of Muslim: a small amount.

Al-Ḥakam ibn Qunbur al-Māzinī: fifty leaves.

Abū Hāshim al-Ṭalībī: a small amount.

Abū al-Warrās al-Khuzā'i: a small amount.³⁶

Abān al-Lāhiqī and His Family

Abān ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd ibn Lāhiq ibn 'Ufayr was a prolific poet, most of whose poetry was muzdawij and musammaṭ.³⁷ He translated books of the Persians and other [peoples], which I record as follows:

Kalīlah wa-Dimūah; Balawhar and Būdāsāf; Al-Sindbād; Mazdak; Fastings and Retreats.³⁸

'Abd al-Ḥamīd, his father, a poet: a small amount.³⁹

Lāhiq, Abū 'Abd al-Ḥamīd, a poet: a small amount.

'Abd al-Ḥamīd ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd, the brother of Abān, a poet: a small amount.

³⁵ Al-Mukhayyas is taken from the Tonk MS. It is not clear in the Beatty MS, and is given as al-Muhsin in the Flügel edition. The next name, Al-Danqashī, seems to be the name intended, but none of the versions give it in exactly that form.

³⁶ Omitted by Flügel.

³⁷ Muzdawij and musammaṭ are technical terms, used for special types of poetry.

³⁸ The Beatty and Tonk MSS add a title which seems to be a repetition of Mazdak. For the first three titles, see the Glossary.

³⁹ Flügel gives a different series of names and confuses ibn with abū in several instances. The translation follows the Beatty and Tonk MSS.

Ḥamdān ibn Abān ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd: fifty leaves.⁴⁰
Sahl ibn Hārūn, a poet already mentioned: a small amount.⁴¹
Al-'Abbās ibn al-Aḥnaf, whose poetry al-Šūlī edited: about one hundred and fifty leaves.
Zanbūr al-Kātib (the Secretary), a poet: fifty leaves.
Bakr ibn al-Naṭṭāḥ, a poet: one hundred leaves.
Šāliḥ ibn Abī al-Najm: fifty leaves.
Abū Shihāb al-Khayyāt: twenty leaves.
Abū al-Hawl al-Ḥimyarī: fifty leaves.
Dā'ūd ibn Razīn al-Wāsiṭī: thirty leaves.⁴²
Kulthūm ibn 'Amr al-'Atābī: one hundred leaves.
Maṣṣūr ibn Salamah al-Namarī: one hundred leaves.
Abū Qābūs al-Shaybānī: one hundred leaves.
Yūsuf ibn Ṣayqal: fifty leaves.
Al-'Abbās ibn Abī al-Sha'li: one hundred leaves.
Aḥmad ibn Sayyār al-Jurjānī: fifty leaves.
Al-'Abbās ibn al-Ḥasan al-'Abbāsī: fifty leaves.
'Utbaḥ al-A'war al-Kūfī: a small amount.
'Abd Allāh ibn Ayyūb al-Taymī: one hundred leaves.
Ibrāhīm ibn Sayyābah: fifty leaves.
Al-Ḥusayn al-Khalī' ibn al-Daḥḥāk: one hundred and fifty leaves.
'Amr al-Warrāq: fifty leaves.
Ya'qūb ibn al-Rabī': seventy leaves.
Al-Faḍl al-Raqāshī: one hundred leaves.
Ibn al-Aswad al-Shaybānī: fifty leaves.
Abū al-'Udhfir al-Anī: a small amount.
 The brothers of al-Faḍl al-Raqāshī; Aḥmad, al-'Abbās, and 'Abd al-Mubdī' [ibn 'Abd al-Ṣamad]: a small amount.
Abū al-Musbi' al-Madanī: a small amount.
'Amr ibn Naḍr al-'Isāmī: fifty leaves.
Al-Buṭayn ibn Umayyah al-Ḥimṣī: a small amount.

⁴¹ Sahl starts a new list, not connected with Abān. Flügel omits the name of al-Šūlī in the next item.

⁴² Flügel confuses this name. On the lower margin of the Beatty MS a garbled note has been inserted.

Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Faq'asī: one hundred leaves.
Ibn Abī Ṣubḥ: a small amount.⁴³
Muḥammad ibn Munādhir al-Ṣubayrī: seventy leaves.
*Abū al-Naḍir*⁴⁴ and Abū al-Maḍraḥī: small amounts.
Abū al-Shamaqmaq: seventy leaves.
Sahl ibn Ghālib al-Khazraji: a small amount.

The Family of Abū 'Uyaynah al-Muhallabī

'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī 'Uyaynah: one hundred leaves.
 Abū 'Uyaynah ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī 'Uyaynah: one hundred leaves.⁴⁵
 'Abd Allāh ibn Mubārak al-Yazīdī: one hundred leaves.
 [Hārūn] al-Rashīd: ten leaves.
Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mahdī: one hundred leaves.
 Abū al-Haydhām al-Murri: a small amount.
 'Alī ibn Ḥamzah al-Kisā'i: a small amount.
 Yahyā ibn al-Mubārak al-Yazīdī: a small amount.
 Al-Aṣma'i: a small amount.
 Razīn al-'Arūḍī: one hundred leaves.
 Al-Faḍl ibn al-'Abbās ibn Ja'far al-Khuzā'i: a small amount.

Women: The Free and the Slaves

'Ulayyah, the daughter of al-Mahdī: twenty leaves.
 Zarzar al-Zarqā': ten leaves.
 'Inān, the slave girl of al-Nāṭifi: twenty leaves.
 Al-Dhālfā': a small amount.
 Khansā': a small amount.
 Malak: a small amount.
 Ṣadūf: a small amount.⁴⁶
 Mukhannithah: a small amount.⁴⁷

⁴³ Flügel gives Ibn Abī Shaykh.

⁴⁴ Flügel gives Abū al-Baṣīr, but the Beatty MS clearly indicates the name as translated.

⁴⁶ This name is omitted by Flügel and carelessly written in the Beatty MS. Ṣadūf is a guess.

⁴⁷ Flügel gives a different form, but in the Beatty MS the name might be as given, or Mukhannathah. This and the name following cannot be identified.

Mudām: a small amount.
Khashf: a small amount.
‘Ilm: a small amount.
Raym: a small amount.
Sakan: a small amount.
Danānīr, the slave girl of Ibn Kunāsah: a small amount.⁴⁸
Faḍl al-Shā’ir: twenty leaves.
Baydūn al-Khādīm: at least twenty leaves.
‘Abd al-Jabbār ibn Sa’id al-Musāḥiqī: fifty leaves.
Al-Damrī: a small amount.
Abū Fara’ūn al-Shāshī: thirty leaves.
‘Amr al-Khārakī: fifty leaves.
Aḥmad ibn Ishāq al-Khārijī: fifty leaves.
Abū al-Khaṭṭāb al-Bahdalī: thirty leaves.
Abū al-Duhmān: a small amount.
Abū al-Bayda’ al-Riyāḥī: thirty leaves.
Abū al-Rumayḥ Jundub ibn Sūdab: a small amount.
Maymūn al-Ḥaḍramī: a small amount.
Al-Mustahall ibn al-Kumayt: fifty leaves.
Ismā’īl ibn Jarīr al-Ḥarīrī (al-Jarīrī): a small amount.
Muḥammad ibn Kunāsah al-Asadī: fifty leaves.
‘Abd al-Qadūs and ‘Abd al-Khālīq, the two sons of ‘Abd al-Wahīd ibn al-Nu’mān ibn Bashīr: small amounts.
‘Amr ibn al-Ḥuwayy [al-Sukkarī]: a small amount.
Ṭālib and Ṭālūt, the two sons of Azhar: small amounts.
Abū al-Ḍilā’ al-Sindī: thirty leaves.
Al-Munajjim al-Rāsibī: thirty leaves.
Tawbah al-Baṣrī: a small amount.
Ma’qil ibn Tawq: a small amount.
‘Abbād ibn al-Mumazzaq: fifty leaves.
Ismā’īl [ibn Mu’ammār] al-Qurāṭī: seventy leaves.

⁴⁸ In the Beatty MS there is a space below Danānīr, and below the space, the two names which follow in the translation, Faḍl al-Shā’ir and Baydūn al-Khādīm, are written together on the same line. There are two possible interpretations of this arrangement. The two names below the space may begin a new list of poets, this one male, since Baydūn was a man and Faḍl al-Shā’ir may refer to some male poet such as al-Faḍl ibn al-‘Abbās. But it is more likely that the space was left to be filled in later with the names of other women poetesses, the list to be terminated with the name of the famous poetess Faḍl al-Shā’irah. If this is the case, then the manuscript is written carelessly at this point, for nothing is inserted to indicate the end of the list of female poets and the beginning, with Baydūn, of a new list of male poets.

Abū Ya’qūb al-Khuraymī: two hundred leaves.
‘Alī ibn Jabalah al-‘Akawwak: one hundred and fifty leaves.
Muḥammad ibn Ḥāzim al-Bāhili: seventy leaves.
Muḥammad ibn Bashīr: fifty leaves.
Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf: fifty leaves.⁴⁹
Al-Qāsim ibn Yūsuf: fifty leaves.
‘Awf ibn Muḥallim: thirty leaves.
Al-Ghassānī Abū Muḥammad: a small amount.
Al-Ḥasan ibn Ṭalhah al-Qurashī: a small amount.
‘Alī ibn Abī Kathīr: fifty leaves.
Al-‘Ashannaq al-Ḍabbī: fifty leaves.
Muḥammad and Ishāq, the two sons of Ibrāhīm al-Fazārī: small amounts.
Waraqah al-Asadī: a small amount.
Abū Dulaf al-‘Ijlī: one hundred leaves.
Ma’qil ibn ‘Isā, the brother of Abū Dulaf: a small amount.
Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm [al-Mawṣilī]: fifty leaves.
Al-Ma’mūn: twenty leaves.
Muḥammad ibn ‘Alī al-Ḍabbī: thirty leaves.
Muḥammad ibn Abī Ḥamzah al-‘Uqaylī: a small amount.
Abū Ṣa’ā’ al-Ḍarīr al-Kūfī: a small amount.
Abū Bakr al-‘Arūdī: fifty leaves.
Al-‘Alā’ ibn ‘Āsim al-Ghassānī: a small amount.
Al-Ḥusayn ibn al-Ḍaḥḥāk al-Bāhili: a small amount.
Abū al-‘Amaythal: one hundred leaves.
Aḥmad ibn Hishām: fifty leaves.
‘Alī ibn Hishām: fifty leaves.
Abū Ḥafṣ al-Shiṭranjī: fifty leaves.
Abū al-Yanbughī: ten leaves.
Ja’far ibn ‘Affān al-Ṭā’i, one of the poets of the Shi’ah, whose poetry amounted to two hundred leaves.
Muḥammad ibn al-Faḍl al-Sukūnī: a small amount.
Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥajjāj: a small amount.
Al-Qāsim ibn Sayyār al-Kātib: fifty leaves.
Ibn Abī al-Zawā’id: fifty leaves.
Rawḥ ibn ‘Abd al-Salām: a small amount.
Abū Daffāfah Aḥmad ibn Maṣṣūr al-Baṣrī: a small amount.
Al-Marāghī: a small amount.
Muḥammad ibn Abī Badr al-Sulamī: fifty leaves.

⁴⁹ This man and his brother, who follows, were important secretaries serving al-Ma’mūn.

Abū Ziyād al-Kilābī: thirty leaves.
 Muḥammad ibn Yazīd ibn Maslimah al-Ḥiṣnī: one hundred leaves.
 Ishāq ibn al-Ṣabbāḥ al-Ash'athī: a small amount.⁵⁰
 Abū Rāsib al-Bajlī: fifty leaves.
 Abū Mūsā al-Makfūf: fifty leaves.
 Al-Akhfash al-Baṣrī: a small amount.
 Al-Ḥirmāzī: fifty leaves.
 Abū Hammām Rawḥ ibn 'Abd al-A'la: fifty leaves.
 'Aṭā' ibn Aḥmad al-Madinī: a small amount.
 Muḥammad ibn 'Alī al-Jawālīqī: fifty leaves.
 Al-'Addā' al-Ḥanafī al-Miṣrī: fifty leaves.
 Sa'īd ibn Dandam al-Kilābī: fifty leaves.
 Abū 'Adnan al-Sulamī: thirty leaves.
 Ismā'īl ibn Abī Muḥammad al-Yazīdī: fifty leaves.
 Mansūr al-Hindī, the pupil (servant) of Ḥaṣṣuwayh: a small amount.
 Abū 'Imrān al-Sulamī: fifty leaves.
 Abū Shunbul (Shanbul) al-'Uqaylī: a small amount.
 Al-Haytham ibn Maẓhar al-Fā'fā' (the Stutterer): a small amount.
 Al-Faḍl ibn Ismā'īl ibn Ṣāliḥ al-Ḥashimī: one hundred leaves.

The Family of al-Mu'adhdhal

Al-Mu'adhdhal ibn Ghaylān ibn Muḥarib ibn al-Buḥtarī al-'Abdī, surnamed Abū 'Amr: fifty leaves.
 'Abd al-Ṣamad ibn al-Mu'adhdhal, a poet: one hundred and fifty leaves.
 Aḥmad, 'Isā, and 'Abd Allāh, poets already mentioned: small amounts.⁵¹
 Abū Ḥizām al-'Uklī: fifty leaves.⁵²
 Muḥammad al-Baydhaq: thirty leaves.
 Al-'Arrāf ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Miṣrī: thirty leaves.
 Al-Khaṭṭāb ibn al-Mu'allā: fifty leaves.
 Abū al-Kalb al-Ḥasan ibn al-Najjāḥ: fifty leaves.
 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad al-Makkī: thirty leaves.⁵³

⁵⁰ The final name is given as al-Shī'ī in the Beatty MS and differently by Flügel, but it is evidently meant to be al-Ash'athī.

⁵² Flügel gives variations for this name and the two which follow; the translation follows the Beatty MS.

⁵³ This was very likely 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Khayyāt (see Biog. Index), but may have been some less important author.

Yūsuf ibn al-Mughīrah ibn Abū al-Qusayrī: a small amount.⁵⁴
 Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥārith al-Miṣrī: fifty leaves.
 Al-Jaml al-Miṣrī [al-Ḥusayn] ibn 'Abd al-Salām: fifty leaves.
 Al-Khalīl ibn Jamā'ah al-Miṣrī: fifty leaves.
 Ḥishām ibn al-Akhḍār al-Iyādī al-Miṣrī: thirty leaves.
 Ishāq ibn Mu'adh al-Miṣrī: thirty leaves.
 Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Mudabbir: seventy leaves.
 Abū Sa'd al-Makhzūmī: one hundred and fifty leaves.
 Al-Kisā'i 'Alī ibn Ḥamzah: ten leaves.
 Muḥammad ibn Wuhayb: fifty leaves.
 'Umārah ibn 'Aqīl: three hundred leaves.
 Farwah ibn Ḥumaydah al-Asadī: fifty leaves.
 Abū al-'Āliyah al-Shāmī: fifty leaves.
 Muknif Abū Salamah al-Madanī: a small amount.
 Abū Tammām Ḥabīb ibn Aws al-Ṭā'i, among whose books there were:
 Al-Ḥamasah; Selections from the Poetry of the Poets; Selections from the Poems of the Tribes; The Great Poets (al-fihl).⁵⁵
 What amounted to two hundred leaves of his poetry remained unpublished until the days of al-Ṣūlī, who edited his work alphabetically in nearly three hundred leaves. 'Alī ibn Ḥamzah al-Iṣbahānī edited it too, and improved it according to subjects rather than alphabetically.⁵⁶
 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad al-'Utbi: fifty leaves.
 'Abd Allāh ibn Ubayd Allāh al-'Ā'ishī: fifty leaves.
 Ishāq ibn Ḥumayd al-Ṭūsi: seventy leaves.
 Abū Nahshal, Abū Naḍīr, and Muḥammad ibn Ḥumayd: small amounts.
 Ibrāhīm ibn Ismā'īl ibn Dā'ūd al-Kātib: seventy leaves.
 His brothers, Ḥamdūn and Dā'ūd, poets: each one fifty leaves.
 Al-Buḥturī, al-Walīd Abū 'Ubādah, whose poetry was not arranged alphabetically until the time of al-Ṣūlī, who edited and arranged it according to the alphabet. 'Alī ibn Ḥamzah al-Iṣbahānī also edited it, improving it according to subjects. Among his books there were:
 Al-Ḥamāsah, similar to "Al-Ḥamāsah" of Abū Tammām; Meaning of the Poets (Ma'āni al-Shu'arā').⁵⁷

⁵⁴ Flügel has Yūsuf ibn al-Mu'tazz.

⁵⁵ Only the Flügel edition includes these four titles.

⁵⁶ There is an inch of space at this point in the Beatty MS.

⁵⁷ These anthologies are not mentioned in the Beatty or Tonk MSS.

Ibn al-Rūmī, 'Alī ibn al-'Abbās.⁵⁸ His poetry was not arranged alphabetically, but al-Musayyabī⁵⁹ quoted it and then al-Ṣūlī edited and arranged it alphabetically. Abū al-Ṭayyib, the copyist of Ibn 'Abdūs, collected it from all of the manuscripts, adding what each of them contained, without reference to alphabetical order, to the extent of about one thousand verses.

Mithqal, the pupil of Ibn al-Rūmī: one hundred leaves. 'Alī ibn al-'Aṣb, surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan al-Milḥī, quoted Ibn al-Rūmī from Mithqal.⁶⁰

Ibn al-Ḥājib, a pupil of Ibn al-Rūmī: one hundred leaves.⁶¹

Aḥmad ibn Abī Fanan al-Kātib: one hundred leaves.

Khālīd al-Kātib, whose poetry was edited and arranged alphabetically by al-Ṣūlī: two hundred leaves.

The Names of the Poets Who Were Secretaries, as Mentioned by Ibn Ḥājib al-Nu'mān in His Book in Which He Repeated What Came from the Book of Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd⁶²

Al-Qāsim ibn Ṣabīḥ: fifty leaves.

Yahyā ibn Khālīd: a small amount.

Al-Faḍl ibn Yahyā: a small amount.

'Alī ibn 'Ubaydah al-Rayḥānī: a small amount.

Ja'far ibn Yahyā: a small amount.

Al-Fayḍ ibn Abī Ṣāliḥ: a small amount.

Yūsuf ibn al-Qāsim: fifty leaves.

Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf: a small amount.

Ya'qūb ibn Nūḥ: fifty leaves.

Ibn al-Muqaffā': a small amount.

'Abd al-Wahhāb ibn Ṣabāḥ al-Madā'inī: fifty leaves.

Al-Faḍl ibn al-Rabī': a small amount.

⁵⁸ Flügel adds a name evidently meant to be a transliteration of the Greek form for George.

⁵⁹ This name is given clearly in the Beatty MS, but is not made clear by Flügel.

⁶⁰ This reference to 'Alī is given by Flügel but not by the other versions.

⁶² Some of the following government officials who wrote poetry were men of secondary importance, whose names cannot be identified. The amount or number of leaves following each poet's name refers to the quantity of his work.

Ya'qūb ibn al-Rabī': thirty leaves.

Al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl: a small amount.

Al-Faḍl ibn Sahl: a small amount.

Zunbūr ibn al-Faraj: fifty leaves.

Yūsuf Laqwah: fifty leaves.

Sandī ibn Ṣadaqah: fifty leaves.

Sahl ibn Hārūn: fifty leaves.

Muḥammad ibn Bakr: fifty leaves.

Ḥamzah ibn Khuzaymah al-Kātib: a small amount.

Ḥammād ibn Najjāḥ al-Kātib: one hundred leaves.⁶³

Al-Qāsim ibn Yūsuf, the brother of Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf: fifty leaves.

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Yazdād: a small amount.⁶⁴

Maslamah ibn Salm: a small amount.

Ṣāliḥ ibn Abī al-Najm: a small amount.

Muḥammad ibn Ḥusayn ibn Shu'ayb: a small amount.

Dā'ūd ibn Jahwar: an anthology.

Abū al-Ḥārith Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥarrānī: an anthology of fifty leaves.

Abū Ja'far Aḥmad ibn Abī 'Uthmān al-Kātib: thirty leaves.

Ibrāhīm ibn al-'Abbās al-Ṣūlī: twenty leaves, which al-Ṣūlī edited.

Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Zayyāt: fifty leaves.

Al-Ḥasan ibn Wahb: one hundred leaves.

Sulaymān ibn Wahb: a small amount.

Abū 'Uthmān Sa'id ibn Ḥumayd al-Kātib: fifty leaves.

Sa'id ibn Wahb, not from the family of Wahb: fifty leaves.

Mūsā ibn 'Abd al-Malik: twenty leaves.

Al-Ḥasan ibn Rajā' ibn Abī al-Ḍaḥḥāk: fifty leaves.

Ibrāhīm ibn Ismā'il ibn Dā'ūd: seventy leaves.

'Amr ibn Mas'adah and his brother Mujāshi': both together, fifty leaves.

Aḥmad ibn al-Mudabbir, surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan: an anthology of fifty leaves.

Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mudabbir: a small amount.

Abū al-Jahm Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf: fifty leaves.

Abū 'Alī al-Baṣīr: fifty leaves.

Abū al-Ṭayyib 'Abd al-Raḥīm al-Ḥarrānī: twenty leaves.

Aḥmad ibn Abī Salamah, the secretary of al-'Ayyāsh:⁶⁵ fifty leaves.

⁶³ This is a known poet. The Beatty MS appears to have the name Khabbāz ibn Janāh, which is unidentified.

⁶⁴ Flügel gives "ibn Dā'ūd" instead of "ibn Yazdād," probably mistakenly.

⁶⁵ Flügel gives al-'Abbās, but the Beatty MS has al-'Ayyāsh. This official cannot be identified.

Aḥmad ibn Yahyā ibn Jābir al-Balādhurī: fifty leaves.
 Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-'Aṭawī: one hundred leaves.
 Jād al-Kātib:⁶⁶ a small amount.
 Sulaymān ibn Abī Sahl ibn Nawbakht: fifty leaves.
 Al-Ḥusayn ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Sahl: a small amount.
 Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Zaydūnah⁶⁷ al-Kātib: thirty leaves.
 Abū Ḥakīm al-Rāshid ibn Ishāq al-Kātib: seventy leaves.
 Abu Ḥārūn ibn Muḥammad, the secretary of al-Ḥasan ibn Zayd: fifty leaves.
 Harthamah ibn al-Khalī': a small amount.
 Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn Ja'far al-Kātib: fifty leaves.
 Ibrāhīm ibn 'Isā al-Madā'ini: fifty leaves.
 'Alī ibn 'Abd al-Karīm: thirty leaves.
 Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Dā'ūd al-'Abartā'i:⁶⁸ fifty leaves.
 Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Ḥārūn ibn Mukhlid ibn Abān: a small amount.
 Abū 'Alī Yahyā ibn Ḥārūn ibn Mukhlid al-Kātib: a small amount.⁶⁹
 Aḥmad ibn 'Isā, whose poetry I have read written in the handwriting of 'Alī ibn Ya'qūb:⁷⁰ a small amount.
 Abū Šāliḥ 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Yazdād: thirty leaves.
 'Abd Allāh ibn Naṣr al-Kātib: thirty leaves.
 'Abd Allāh ibn Yazīd: a small amount.
 Al-Qāsim ibn Yūsuf al-Sulamī: fifty leaves.
 Aḥmad ibn Khālīd al-Riyāshī: a small amount.
 Ghālīb ibn Aḥmad, known as al-Faṭīn (the Intelligent One): thirty leaves.
 'Umar ibn 'Uthmān ibn Istidbār, one of the poets of Egypt:⁷¹ fifty leaves.
 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn, one of the poets of Egypt and a secretary: thirty leaves.
 Sahl ibn Muḥammad, a secretary and an Egyptian: fifty leaves.
 'Abd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf: fifty leaves.

⁶⁶ Flügel gives Janān, but the Beatty MS gives Jād. It is possible that there is an n, b, or y between the j and the ā. The name has not been identified.

⁶⁷ Zaydūnah is taken from Flügel; the Tonk and Beatty MSS do not make the name clear enough to identify it.

⁶⁸ Flügel divides this name into two names, but the Beatty MS is evidently correct in giving the form indicated here.

⁶⁹ This name is omitted by Flügel. Beatty gives the name without the ibn before Ḥārūn.

⁷⁰ The Tonk and Beatty MSS omit "written in the handwriting of."

⁷¹ Istidbār is suggested in the Beatty MS. It was perhaps the name of the grandfather of 'Umar.

'Ubayd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Zayyāt: a small amount.
 Abū al-Saqr Ismā'il ibn Bulbul: a small amount.
 Abū al-Faḍl Aḥmad ibn Sulaymān ibn Wahb: fifty leaves.
 Ḥamd ibn Mihrān al-Kātib: fifty leaves.
 Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ya'qūb ibn Dā'ūd al-Ya'qūbī: fifty leaves.
 'Ubayd Allāh ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ya'qūb, his brother: a small amount.
 Aḥmad ibn 'Alī ibn Khiyār al-Kātib: fifty leaves.
 Maṣṣūr ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Kātib: fifty leaves.
 Aḥmad ibn al-'Alawīyah al-Iṣbahānī al-Kātib: fifty leaves.
 Abū al-Ṭayyib Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Yūsufī: fifty leaves.
 Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Abd al-Ghaḥfār al-Jarjārā'i, who though blind was a secretary: fifty leaves.⁷²
 Abū al-Ḥusayn 'Abd al-Wahhāb ibn 'Amr al-Shalmaghānī: one hundred leaves.
 Abū 'Alī Aḥmad ibn 'Alī ibn al-Ḥasan al-Mādhārā'i: fifty leaves.
 Maṣṣūr ibn Ibrāhīm al-Kātib: twenty leaves.
 'Abd Allāh, the son of the sister of Abū al-Wizīr: a small amount.
 Muḥammad ibn Abī Hikmah: a small amount.
 Muḥammad ibn 'Alī, known as Daydān: a small amount.
 Muḥammad ibn al-Faḍl al-Jarjārā'i, secretary and vizier: thirty leaves.
 'Isā ibn Farūkhān-shāh al-Kātib: a small amount.
 Abū 'Alī Aḥmad ibn Ismā'il Naṭṭāḥah: fifty leaves.
 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn Naṣr ibn Maṣṣūr ibn Bassām: one hundred leaves.
 Abū al-'Abbās 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Nāshī: fifty leaves.
 Abū Bakr Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad al-Ṭālaqānī: fifty leaves.
 Muḥammad ibn Ghālīb, [nicknamed] Bāḥ, al-Iṣbahānī: seventy leaves.
 Abū al-Qāsim Ja'far ibn Muḥammad ibn Ḥamdān, an Egyptian, the secretary of the Ṭūlūniyah: seventy leaves.⁷³
 Abū Muḥammad al-'Abbās ibn al-Faḍl al-Fāsī: fifty leaves.
 Aḥmad ibn Šāliḥ ibn Shīrẓād al-Kātib: thirty leaves.
 Muḥammad ibn 'Alī al-Kātib, known as Badhinjānah: a small amount.
 Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn 'Alī ibn Khiyār:⁷⁴ fifty leaves.

⁷² Flügel omits "though blind," but the Tonk and Beatty MSS include it.

⁷³ The Ṭūlūniyah, the dynasty of Aḥmad ibn Ṭūlūn, ruled Egypt A.D. 868–905; see Hitti, Arabs, pp. 452–57.

⁷⁴ Flügel gives Ḥayyān instead of Khiyār, evidently a mistake. The name Sayyār in the next line is not clearly written and may not be correct.

- 'Alī ibn Aḥmad ibn Sayyār al-Mādhārā'i: fifty leaves.
 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭālib al-Kātib: one hundred leaves.
Muḥammad ibn 'Umar, known as Ibn al-Khansā': thirty leaves.
 Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Fayyād: an anthology of fifty leaves.
 Abū 'Alī 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn 'Isā al-Hamadhānī, the secretary of Bakr [ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz]: fifty leaves.
Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Mutawakkil, a resident of Egypt: fifty leaves.
 Abū Sa'īd 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Aḥmad al-Iṣbahānī: fifty leaves.
 Abū al-Ḥusayn Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā ibn Abī al-Baḡhl: fifty leaves.
 Abū Muḥammad al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad al-Karkhī: fifty leaves.
 Abū Muqātil Naḍr ibn al-Munqaḍī al-Daylamī: fifty leaves.
 Abū al-Ḥusayn Aḥmad ibn Khālid al-Mādhārā'i: fifty leaves.
 Abū al-Ḥusayn Muḥammad ibn Ishāq ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Mādhārā'i: fifty leaves.
 Abū 'Alī 'Āsim ibn Muḥammad al-Kātib: thirty leaves.
 Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥusayn ibn Aḥmad ibn Ishāq al-Mādhārā'i: a small amount.
 Abū 'Abd Allāh Ḥakam ibn Ma'bad al-Iṣbahānī, whose poetry we have not seen.
 Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn 'Arūs al-Kātib: thirty leaves.
 Abū al-'Abbās ibn Thawābah: twenty leaves.
 Abū al-Ḥusayn ibn Thawābah: a small amount.
 Al-Qāsim ibn 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Sulaymān: a small amount.
 Abū al-'Abbās ibn al-Furāt: a small amount.
 Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn al-'Abbās al-Nawbakhtī: two hundred leaves.
 Abū 'Abd Allāh Aḥmad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Nawbakhtī: one hundred leaves.
 Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Sīrāfi: one hundred leaves.⁷⁵
Ja'far ibn Qudāmah: one hundred leaves.
 Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Mufajja' al-Baṣrī: about two hundred leaves.⁷⁶
 Abū al-Faḍl al-'Abbās ibn 'Abd al-Jabbār: fifty leaves.
 Abū al-Qāsim 'Alī ibn Muḥammad al-Tustarī: a small amount.
 Abū al-Ṭayyib Muḥammad ibn 'Alī al-Bukhārī: one hundred leaves.
 Aḥmad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Rashīd al-Kātib: one hundred leaves.

⁷⁵ Different versions give different forms for this name. Cf. Ibn al-Sayrafī.

⁷⁶ Flügel has "about one hundred leaves."

- Al-Ḥasan ibn Muḥammad ibn Ghālib ibn Abī 'Abd Allāh Bāḡ al-Iṣbahani: fifty leaves.
 Abū al-Qāsim ibn Abī al-'Alā': fifty leaves.
Ḥamdūn ibn Ḥātim al-Anbārī: a small amount.
 Yaḥyā ibn Zakarīyā' ibn Yaḥyā al-Uqlīdisī: a small amount.
 Abū 'Alī al-Ḥasan ibn Yūsuf, unknown to us.
 Abū 'Abd Allāh Aḥmad ibn Kāmil: a small amount.
 Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn al-Fayyād: a small amount.
 Abū Ghālib Muqātil ibn al-Naḍr: a small amount.
 Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn Sa'īd al-Jarjārā'i: fifty leaves.⁷⁷
Junādah: fifty leaves.
 Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn Muqlah: thirty leaves.
 Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ismā'īl ibn Šāliḥ ibn Yaḥyā al-Kātib: a small amount.⁷⁸
 Abū al-Ḥusayn Sa'īd ibn Ibrāhīm al-Tustarī, a Christian and a secretary: one hundred leaves.
 This ends what was contained in the book of Abū al-Ḥusayn ibn Ḥājib al-Nu'mān al-Kātib from among the names of the secretaries who were poets and from whose poetry he made selections.

The Names of a Group of Recent Poets Who Were Not Secretaries and [Lived] after Three Hundred [A.D. 912/13] in This Our Time

- Mudrik* ibn Muḥammad al-Shaybānī: two hundred leaves.⁷⁹
 Abū Bakr ibn al-'Allāf. Some of his relatives edited his poetry, with traditions about him, with something from those who praised him.
 The amount [of his poetry] was four hundred leaves.
 Al-Tujībī⁸⁰ Abū Bakr: one hundred leaves.
 Al-'Abdūsī, whose name was Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad al-Ḍarīr: one hundred leaves.⁸¹

⁷⁷ The translation follows the Beatty MS, as Flügel gives variations with the last two parts of the name.

⁷⁸ Here the Beatty MS is so carelessly written that the translation follows Flügel.

⁷⁹ The amount or number of leaves following each poet's name refers to the quantity of his work.

⁸¹ Flügel introduces the name Abū al-Ḥasan Maṭbu' before al-'Abdūsī, but omits al-Ḍarīr.

Al-Qurāṭīsī, whose name was ———: three hundred leaves.
 Abū Ja'far al-Ḍarīr,⁸² whose name was ———: two hundred leaves.
 Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn Ḥamdān al-Mawṣilī, the jurist: two hundred leaves.⁸³
Kushājīm, a descendant of al-Sandī ibn Shāhik: one hundred leaves. He [wrote] a book, Training of a Court Companion.⁸⁴
 Al-Iskāfī, whose name was ———: two hundred leaves.
Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad⁸⁵ al-Ṣanawbarī, surnamed Abū Bakr, one of the people of Antioch, whose poetry al-Ṣūlī edited and arranged alphabetically: two hundred leaves.
 ——— Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad, one of the people of Antioch: one hundred leaves.⁸⁶
 Abū al-Mu'taṣim ʿĀsim ibn Muḥammad al-Anṭākī, whose poetry was edited by Abū Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥallāb. [He lived] before three hundred.⁸⁷
 Ibn Abī Zur'ah al-Dimashqī, [who lived] before three hundred [A.D. 912/13]: one hundred and fifty leaves.⁸⁸
 Al-Khubz Aruzī, whose name was Naṣr ibn Aḥmad ibn Ma'mūn⁸⁹ and who was a poet of al-Baṣrah, refined in expression, but not expert in the technique of poetic composition. He edited and arranged his own poetry alphabetically, but this [editing] was ascribed to al-Ṣūlī: about three hundred leaves.
 Abū al-'Abbās al-Nāmī, whose poetry up to the time when he died was one hundred and fifty leaves. Abū Aḥmad al-Ḥallāb edited it.⁹⁰
 Abū Maṣṣūr ibn Abī Barrāk, the teacher of al-Sarī ibn Aḥmad al-Kindī, was an excellent poet. It is said that al-Sarī stole and plagiarized his poetry. The amount of it which I have seen is about two hundred leaves.

⁸² Flügel adds "ibn Jilbāb" to this name.

⁸³ Flügel gives the name as Abū Ja'far Naṣr ibn Muḥammad ibn Jahān.

⁸⁴ This book title is not found in the Beatty MS.

⁸⁵ The Beatty MS omits these two first name elements.

⁸⁶ The first part of the name was probably al-Badīhī. This man was a contemporary poet; see Ziriklī, Part V, p. 143.

⁸⁷ Flügel omits "ʿĀsim ibn Muḥammad," but includes "three hundred leaves." The Beatty MS has "before three hundred. [A.D. 912/13]."

⁸⁸ The Flügel text gives "killed" instead of "before."

⁸⁹ The Beatty MS gives only the two first elements; the other part of the name is in the Flügel edition.

⁹⁰ Flügel gives the editor's name incorrectly and adds at the end of this sentence the name al-Khalī'. Tha'libī, Yatimat al-Dahr, Part II, p. 292, calls the poet al-Khalī' al-Nāmī.

Al-Khabbāz al-Baladī, whose name was Muḥammad ibn ———, surnamed Abū Bakr. Al-Khālidiyān edited his poetry at al-Mawṣil, making it excellent.⁹¹ about three hundred leaves.
 Al-Shayḡamī, whose name was ———, wandered about and then attached himself to Sayf al-Dawlah. Before he died he edited his own poetry, which amounted to about five hundred leaves.
 Abū Ṭāhir Sandūk ibn Ḥabīb al-Wāsiṭī, whose poetry is well edited: five hundred leaves.⁹²
 Al-Salāmī, one of the people of al-Baṭīḥah:⁹³ less than two hundred leaves.
 Al-Maḡhnam al-Miṣrī, one of the poets of Sayf al-Dawlah. His name was Abū al-Ḥasan Muḥammad ibn Sāmī al-Sha'bānī. He is not remembered for what he wrote, except for a poem "Al-Dalālah": less than two hundred leaves.
 Al-Babbaghā', surnamed Abū al-Faraj, was 'Abd al-Wahīd ibn Naṣr al-Shāmī, a poet of natural genius who fell in with Sayf al-Dawlah and wrote epistles and poetry: three hundred leaves.
 Abū al-Ṭayyib Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Mutanabbī, whose fame makes it unnecessary to say much about him. He was from al-Kūfah and became attached to Sayf al-Dawlah. The poetry composed for him [Sayf al-Dawlah] became famous: three hundred leaves.
 Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn fell in with Sayf al-Dawlah. His books: ———.
 Abū Naṣr ibn Nubātah al-Tamīmī was one of the poets of Sayf al-Dawlah. He died after four hundred [A.D. 1009/10] in hiding: about four hundred leaves.
 Ibn Zamkūn, Abū ———, al-Mawṣilī, was skillful in connection with satirical poetry, going deep into the meaning. His poetry was about three hundred leaves.
 Al-Khālidiyān, Abū Bakr and Abū 'Uthmān, Muḥammad and Sa'īd, the two sons of Ḥāshim, were from a village of the district of al-Mawṣil, known as al-Khālidiyāh.⁹⁴ Both of them were poets and men of ⁹¹ In the Arabic, simply the word "excellent" is inserted in the margin of the Beatty MS and may be intended to go with the poet who follows.

⁹³ See Yāqūt, Geog., I, 668, for al-Baṭīḥah.

⁹⁴ Al-Khālidiyān is in the dual form, and the names which follow belong to these two. In other words, the two men from al-Khālidiyāh were Muḥammad ibn Ḥāshim, surnamed Abū Bakr, and Sa'īd ibn Ḥāshim, surnamed Abū 'Uthmān. Flügel gives al-Khālidiyān as a separate heading.

letters, who memorized [verses] and were quick with extemporaneous recital. One of these two, Abū Bakr, whose capacity for memorization and impromptu recitation, and whose ability to commit to memory made me marvel, said to me, "I retain in my memory a thousand passages, each one about one hundred leaves in length."⁹⁵

But in spite of all this, if they admired anything they plagiarized it, whether the author was alive or dead, not because of inability to compose poetry, but because that was their nature. Abū 'Uthmān edited his own and his brother's poetry before he died and I believe that a young man known as Rishā'⁹⁶ also edited it [to the extent of] about one thousand leaves. Abū Bakr died — and Abū 'Uthmān died —. Among their books there were:

Ḥamāsah, poetry of the recent [authors]; Traditions of al-Mawṣil; about traditions of Abū Tammām and the beauties of his poetry; about traditions of the poetry of Ibn al-Rūmī; Selections from the Poetry of al-Buḥturī; Selections from the Poetry of Muslim ibn al-Walid.

Al-Sarī ibn Aḥmad ibn — al-Kindī⁹⁷

He came from al-Mawṣil, and was a poet with natural genius, but he plagiarized a great deal. He had agreeable diction and good presentation. He was versatile in using similes and descriptions, which he attempted even when they lacked pleasing appearance and form. The only art in which he did well was the recitation of poetry. Before his death he edited his poetry [to the extent of] three hundred leaves. Later more was added and some of the recent men of letters have edited and arranged it [his poetry] alphabetically.

Abū al-Ḥasan ibn al-Najīb

His name was — and he was one of the people of Baghdād, but for a long time he resided at al-Mawṣil. He was a theologian and a poet, and before his death edited his own poetry: about five hundred leaves.

⁹⁵ The Beatty MS gives clearly "said to me." Al-Nadīm probably met him at al-Mawṣil. For data about this period, see Khallikān, I, 557–59; Ziriklī, Part III, p. 128, article on al-Sarī.

⁹⁶ This name is not in the Biog. Index. He was probably a pupil or transcriber.

⁹⁷ Flügel gives this name and the names of the two poets who follow as separate headings, but the Beatty and Tonk MSS include these names in the long list of recent poets which precedes.

Al-Tamīmī Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Muḥammad

He was from the people of Baghdād. He lived at al-Mawṣil and edited his own poetry: about five hundred leaves.⁹⁸

From among the Syrian Poets Who Were Earlier than These [Poets Just Mentioned]

Abū al-Jūd al-Ras'anī, whose name was Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad and whose poetry amounted to about one hundred leaves.

Abū Miskīn al-Bardha'i, a modern poet, who wandered among the towns.

He was an excellent poet, whose poetry amounted to about one hundred leaves.

Al-Khalī' al-Raqqī, also called al-Ḥarrānī, although he was not from that region. His name was Muḥammad ibn Abī al-Ghamz⁹⁹ and he was an excellent poet, who inserted into his poetry homonyms (al-tajnis)¹⁰⁰ and contrasts (al-tatbiq), rarely having a verse without them. His poetry was not edited, but it amounted to [about] three hundred leaves. It is said that some of the men of letters of our own time have edited and arranged it alphabetically and that Abū Muḥammad al-Muhallabī has made a selection of a portion of it.¹⁰¹

Poems Recited about the Unusual (Strange)

Poem of al-Sharqī ibn al-Qaṭāmī, who has already been mentioned; poem of Yaḥyā ibn al-Nujaym; poem of al-Abzārī, whose name was —; poem of Shubayl ibn 'Azrah, who has already been mentioned; poem of Mūsā ibn Ḥazanbal; poem of al-Anbārī.¹⁰²

⁹⁸ From the manuscripts available, it appears that when he wrote his original manuscript, al-Nadīm omitted many of the well-known tenth-century poets from the list of recent poets, which ends here in the Beatty and Tonk MSS. This fact makes it clear that he must have completed his book before the end of the tenth century. It indicates also that the Beatty MS was an early copy of the original. The extra material in the Flügel edition which is included in the translation shows that some copyist in later times added names to the original.

⁹⁹ The name is lacking in the Beatty MS.

¹⁰⁰ After this point a group of pages is missing in the Tonk MS. The text of the Tonk MS resumes in Chap. V, almost immediately after the Beatty MS ends, although at least one page must have been lost from the manuscript between the end of the Beatty MS and the resumption of the Tonk. See Chap. V, sect. 1, nn. 237, 238.

¹⁰¹ The Beatty MS omits the reference to al-Muhallabī.

¹⁰² This name is in the Beatty MS but not the Flügel edition.

Poems with the *Hamzah*¹⁰³

Poem of Ibn Harmah, beginning "Inna Sulaymā, Allāh will watch over her." Poem of Ḥafṣ ibn Abī al-Nu'mān al-Umawī, one of the Banū al-Qirriyah,¹⁰⁴ which most of the transmitters quote as belonging to Abū Ṣa'sa'ah al-Āmirī. Its beginning is, "She watched the flashing of the lightning as it glittered." Because of its diction the people preferred this saying to the poem of Ibn Harmah, even though Ibn Harmah came before him.¹⁰⁵

What Has Been Composed about the Cooing of Pigeons and about Their Breeds

Poem of Yahyā ibn Abī Mūsā al-Nahrutīrī about the breeds of pigeons. Book: Sayings of the Arabs about the Conversations of Pigeons, by Ibn Rabī'ah al-Baṣrī;¹⁰⁶ Species, by Thābit; Traditions of the Arabs and What They Have Said about the Lamentations of Pigeons and the Cooing of Birds.

Mention of Books about Literary Pursuits Which I Have Happened Upon, but Which Are Composed by Persons Whose Status Is Not Known after Careful Investigation¹⁰⁷

Pardon and Expiation, by Abū al-Ḥusayn Aḥmad ibn Najīḥ ibn Abī Ḥanīfah; Pronunciations (Dialects), by Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Kātib; Pardon and Forgiveness, by Abū 'Āṣim al-Nabīl; He Who Composed a Verse and Was Nicknamed for It, and He Who Composed ¹⁰³ Immediately after this heading there is a gap in the Beatty MS where some material has been lost. The manuscript begins again with the title of the fifth chapter. In the paragraph which follows, the poems of Ibn Harmah and Ḥafṣ are mentioned together because the line from Ibn Harmah's poem begins with the letter hamzah, and the line from Ḥafṣ ends with hamzah. Flügel misspells the name Ibn Harmah.

¹⁰⁴ For this tribe, see Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 206; Durayd, Geneal., p. 202.

¹⁰⁶ This may be an error, meant for the poet Rabī'ah al-Baṣrī himself.

¹⁰⁷ This heading and what follows to the end of the chapter are taken from Flügel, as are the two preceding paragraphs. This material may never have been in the Beatty MS or may be in the lost pages. As it does not seem to go with the accounts of the poets, it is likely that some scribe inserted it into another copy of the book at a later period, after the Beatty MS had been completed.

¹⁰⁹ This man cannot be identified. He may have been a son of either al-Ḥusayn ibn Muḥammad al-Ḥarūn (see Ziriklī, Part II, p. 276) or al-Ḥarūn al-'Alawī (see Ṭabarī, Annales, Part III, pp. 2025-26).

¹¹⁰ Perhaps Ja'far ibn al-Furāt.

¹¹¹ This may be the same book as the one mentioned in Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (4), 257, entitled Kitāb Ta'rikh Mulūk al-Rayyān by Sinān ibn Thābit ibn Qurrah. The Flügel edition gives "Abū" instead of "Ibn" in this name. For a book by al-Rāzī about the potion (al-sharāb), see the epistles of al-Rāzī listed near the end of Chap. VII, sect. 3. Coitus (Al-Bāh), three titles further, is listed with al-Rāzī's books in the same section.

¹¹² The Daylamīyah probably refers to the Buwayh dynasty, which gained control of the caliphate A.D. 945. See Hitti, Arabs, p. 470, and "Būyids," Enc. Islam, I, 807.

¹¹³ See Chap. III, sect. 2, near n. 219.

¹¹⁴ The form Rūsand is probably a mistake, so that it is not included in the Biog. Index. Ruwayshid may be the name meant; see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 433.

Completed is the fourth chapter of Kitāb al-Fihrist and finished entirely is the first part. If Allāh the Exalted wishes, it will be followed by the fifth chapter of the book, with accounts of the scholars and the various books which they compiled, in five sections. To Allāh be praise, for He is worthy and deserving of it and it is His due. For our Master Muḥammad and his holy family¹²¹ and honored Companions be prayer and peace.¹²²

¹¹⁵ See Chap. III, sect. 3, near n. 173.

¹¹⁶ For another mention of this book, see the book entitled Kinds of Swords and Iron, in Chap. VII, sect. 1, near n. 249.

¹¹⁸ The phrase "epistle of" is repeated before each name in the first paragraph. It is given only the first time in the translation.

¹¹⁹ The word translated as "edited" is ṣana' (usually translated "made" or "wrought").

¹²⁰ See Chap. III, sect. 2, near n. 219.

¹²¹ The word translated as "holy" is fāhirīn, which means "pure" but is used by the Shī'ah to signify the special quality of their imams, who were descendants of 'Alī.

¹²² This conclusion was probably contained in the author's original copy of Al-Fihrist.

The Fifth Part of the book Al-Fihrist,¹ with accounts of the ancient and modern scholars, who were authors, with the names of the books which they composed about the rest of the sciences.² The composition of Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Nadīm, known as Abū al-Faraj ibn Abī Ya'qūb al-Warrāq.

Most of Chapter V, Section 1, is found only in the Beatty MS. After the termination of the Beatty MS, a few pages follow which are found only in the Tonk MS (see nn. 237, 238). Evidently one or more pages have been lost between the end of the Beatty MS and the beginning of the Tonk MS (see n. 238 for probable content of the missing material). As the Beatty and Tonk MSS are not easily available for study, an attempt has been made to give the transliteration of some of the more important words in the book titles in this segment. With the account of al-Wāsiṭī, very near the end of Section 1, the Flügel text resumes, and MS 1934 begins (n. 266). See Introduction for more information on these manuscripts.

The Cairo edition of Al-Fihrist, printed by the Raḥmānīyah Press in 1929, has a very short Appendix, the content of which was taken from Aḥmad Taymur, who took the material from Die Kunde des Morgen Landes, 1889, a work which is not generally available. This Appendix contains accounts of nearly a dozen scholars, almost all of whom are mentioned in Chapter V by either Flügel or the Beatty MS. It is referred to in the footnotes as these men appear in the text. The one scholar in the Cairo Appendix who is not mentioned by the Beatty MS or the Flügel text is a judge named Abū Muḥammad 'Abd Allāh ibn Aḥmad, called Ibn Zubd. He may be the man of that name, although called Ibn Zanū, who is mentioned in the Index to Ṭabarī, Annales. Perhaps "Ibn Zubd" is meant to be "Ibn Zayd."

In this chapter, certain technical words and the names of many religious sects are mentioned over and over again. For explanation, the Glossary should be consulted.

² In writing this phrase, "the rest of the sciences," the author probably had in mind the theology in the fifth chapter and law in the sixth chapter, as those two fields of study were included in the Islāmic sciences.

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Fifth Chapter

of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed, in five sections.

The First Section

with accounts of the dialectic theologians (al-mutakallimūn) of the Mu'tazilah and the Murji'ah, and of the beginning of dialectic theology (al-kalām) and disputation (al-jidāl).³

Why the Mu'tazilah Were Called by This Name⁴

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: Abū al-Qāsim al-Balkhī said that the Mu'tazilah were called by this name because of the disagreement occurring in connection with the terms for those who committed great sins among the people of prayer.⁵ The Khawārij said that these were unbelievers and polytheists, as well as sinners.⁶ The Murji'ah said that they were believers and Muslims, but at the same time sinners. The Zaydiyyah and Ibādiyyah said that they did not believe in [God's] grace, and were neither polytheists nor Muslims, but sinners. The companions of al-Ḥasan⁷ said that they were hypocrites and also sinners.

³ Most of the theological discussions were carried on by members of the heretical sect of the Mu'tazilah, until al-Ash'arī persuaded the orthodox scholars to use dialectic methods to defend their own doctrines.

⁴ At the beginning of the Arabic title there is the letter lām (l) which is evidently meant to express interrogation. Al-Mu'tazilah means those who are separated from others. This passage explains the reason for calling this sect by this name. For the founding of the Mu'tazilī movement, see Nicholson, Literary History of the Arabs, pp. 222–23; Khallikān, II, 513; Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (7), 224; Jār Allāh, Mu'tazilah, p. 2; Nādir, Système philosophique, p. 4; Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 121; Shahrastānī (Haarbrücker), Part I, p. 47. The various sects and technical words are explained in the Glossary.

⁵ This evidently refers to pious Muslims.

⁶ This means that these rebels were not only transgressors against the ordinances of the Qur'ān, but also regarded as being outside of the Muslim community.

⁷ This evidently refers to the disciples of al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī; see Shahrastānī (Haarbrücker), Part I, pp. 25, 44, 46, 49; "al-Ḥasan ibn abī'l-Ḥasan," Enc. Islam, II, 273.

All of the Mu'tazilah separated themselves from the things about which these [groups] differed. They said, "We agree about what they join in calling sin, but we avoid matters about which they disagree concerning unbelief, belief, hypocrisy, and polytheism."

Abū Bakr ibn al-Ikhshīd said, "'Separation' (al-i'tizāl) became attached to the Mu'tazilah during the days of al-Ḥasan [al-Baṣrī], according to what some people record, but this is not confirmed among us, nor do we have quotations about it." He said, "What is [better] known among our scholars is that the name originated after [the time of] al-Ḥasan." He said:

The basis for it was that after al-Ḥasan had died and Qatādah had taken his place, 'Amr ibn 'Ubayd and a group with him separated themselves from him [Qatādah]. So Qatādah called them al-Mu'tazilah (the Separatists). When 'Amr heard about this name, he accepted and approved it, saying to his companions, "Al-i'tizāl is a term which Allāh has praised in His Book,"⁸ so that this is unexpected good fortune,"⁹ and thus he accepted it.

Mention of the First to Speak About Predestination, Justice, and Oneness

Al-Balkhī said that the first person to speak about predestination and separation was Abū Yūnus al-Aswārī, a man from among the Aswāriyah known as Sinsawayh, who was followed by Ma'bad al-Juhanī. It is also said that Sulaymān ibn 'Abd al-Malik spoke about this matter.

The Names of Those from Whom Justice and Oneness Were Derived

I read [what was written] in the handwriting of Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abdūs [al-Jahshiyārī], that Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī ibn Yaḥyā al-Munajjim said:

⁸ Al-i'tizāl means "separation" or "turning aside." It is mentioned in the Qur'ān 18:15(16), where it is said that Allāh will show mercy to those who separate from false worshipers to enter the cave; also in 19:50(49), where it speaks of Allāh's reward for Abraham, when he turned aside from false worshipers.

⁹ For the idiom "good fortune," see Richardson, Dictionary, p. 17; in Arabic it is ittifāq ḥasan.

My father informed me, and my paternal uncle Aḥmad as well as my paternal uncle Hārūn¹⁰ also informed me, saying, "Abū Ya'la Zurqān, whose name was Muḥammad ibn Shaddād, the companion of Abū al-Hudhayl, related to me saying, 'Abū al-Hudhayl al-'Allāf Muḥammad ibn al-Hudhayl told us saying, "I received¹¹ what I know about justice and oneness from 'Uthmān al-Ṭawīl, who was the teacher of Abū al-Hudhayl." Abū al-Hudhayl said, "'Uthmān told me that he learned about the matter from Wāṣil ibn 'Aṭā', and that Wāṣil derived this from Abū Hāshim 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥanafīyah. 'Abd Allāh received it from his father, Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥanafīyah. Muḥammad informed him that he obtained it from his father 'Alī, for whom be peace, and that his father received it from the Apostle of Allāh, for whom be peace.¹² The Apostle of Allāh told him that Gabriel (Jibrīl) revealed it from Allāh, Glorious and Almighty.'" ¹³

Al-Ḥasan ibn Abī al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, surnamed Abū Sa'īd

He was born two years before the end of the caliphate of 'Umar and died when eighty-nine years old, during the year one hundred and ten [A.D. 728].¹⁴ Al-Ḥasan served as secretary to al-Rabī' ibn Ziyād in Khurāsān and for about three years was the secretary of Anas ibn Mālik at Sābūr.¹⁵ He was one of those who gave allegiance to Ibn al-Ash'ath, but was also one of the ascetics and pietists.¹⁶ When Ibn al-Ash'ath was overthrown, his adherents were hunted down and he [al-Ḥasan] went to al-Ḥajjāj, who after disciplining him gave him amnesty. But as al-Ḥasan did not feel safe near al-Ḥajjāj, he hid until he [al-Ḥajjāj] died.¹⁷

¹⁰ See Biog. Index, Munajjim family.

¹¹ In this passage forms of the Arabic word akhad are translated as "received," "obtained," "derived," etc., to make the meaning clearer.

¹² On the margin of the Beatty MS there is the note, "Abū Hudhayl and 'Uthmān lied."

¹³ There is a second note on the margin of the Beatty MS, saying that this passage is a lie against Allāh and His Apostle, with some extra words which are not clear.

¹⁴ 'Umar was the second caliph, who died A.D. 644. The age of al-Ḥasan is reckoned in lunar years.

¹⁵ See Yāqūt, Geog., III, 4-6.

¹⁷ Al-Ḥajjāj was famous for his tyranny. He died A.D. 714.

Among his words despising al-Ḥajjāj, when news of his death reached him, there was "Oh, our God, thou it is who has killed him and cut short his way of life." Then he said, "Thou gavest us a little blind bat, emitting poison (burning), miserable and afflicted, with flapping of sides and shaking of buttocks, saying 'Know us, know us!' Truly we have known thee; Allāh has abhorred thee and abhorred thee also have the righteous." [He also said] "He stretched out to me a hand with short fingers, and, by Allāh, it has never perspired from holding the reins to drive along the way of God."

Among the books of al-Ḥasan there were:

Commentary on the Qur'ān (Tafsīr li-al-Qur'ān), which a group quoted from him;¹⁸ a book addressed to 'Abd al-Malik ibn Marwān refuting the Qadariyah.

Wāṣil ibn 'Aṭā'

Abū Hudhayfah Wāṣil ibn 'Aṭā' was a protégé of the Banū Ḍabbah, or it is also said of the Banū Makhsūm.¹⁹ His birth was at al-Madīnah and he was called al-Ghazzāl because of his frequenting Sūq al-Ghazl in order to become acquainted with the chaste women, to whom he distributed his alms.²⁰ He had a long neck and also mispronounced the letter rā' (r) but as he was a master of style, eloquent and vigorous in speech, with versatility of expression, it was possible for him to avoid the letter rā' (r) in his speech.

It was related that Wāṣil said about Bashshār ibn Burd, "Is there not someone to kill this blind man (a'mā) who is surnamed Abū Mu'ādh? By Allāh, if it were not for the malice which is one of the characteristics of the Ghulāt,²¹ I would have sent someone to rip open his stomach on his bed. An 'Uqaylī or Sadūsī would attend

¹⁸ The members of this group were probably his pupils, who quoted his teachings and wrote commentaries about them.

¹⁹ For these tribes see Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, pp. 34, 36.

²⁰ The Sūq al-Ghazl was the bazaar where the women spun thread. The word "chaste" probably refers to elderly women, needing aid and with no one to depend upon.

²¹ The Arabic text gives the form al-Ghāliyah, but the Glossary and translation give the usual form, Ghulāt.

to that."²² Thus he avoided pronouncing rā', for he spoke of the "blind man surnamed Abū Mu'adh," not saying either Bashshār or Ibn Burd. He mentioned al-a'mā instead of saying *al-ḍarīr*²³ and spoke of the characteristics of the Ghulāt, rather than of the Mug-hīriyah or the Manṣūriyah. He also said ba'atha instead of *arsala*²⁴ and mentioned 'alā mudṭaja'ihī rather than saying 'alā firāshihi."²⁵ He spoke of the Banū 'Uqayl, because Bashshār was a protégé of theirs, and mentioned the Banū Sadiis because he dwelt among them. Avoiding letters is very difficult, especially one like rā', which is used so much.

Wāṣil fell in with Abū Hāshim 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥanafiyah and also attended the session (class) of al-Ḥasan [al-Baṣrī]. Because he kept very silent, he was thought to be dumb. His neck was very long, so that 'Amr ibn 'Ubayd remarked about it, saying "A man with such a neck cannot be of any use!" But when Wāṣil became proficient, his excellence being evident, 'Amr said, "Perhaps I made a mistake about his sense of perception."

Al-Balkhī said, "Wāṣil was one of the people of al-Madīnah. His birth was during the year eighty [A.D. 699] and he died in the year one hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 748]." Among his books there were:

The Middle Position (Al-Manzilah bayn al-Manzilatayn);²⁶ Judicial Interpretation (Al-Futayā); Oneness (Al-Tawḥīd).

Among the books of his associates (pupils), the authors being unknown, there were:

The Mashraqiyyūn,²⁷ from the pupils of Abū Ḥudhayfah [Wāṣil ibn 'Aṭā'] to their brothers in North Africa, which included a number of chapters (books), among which there was, The Way to a Knowledge of the Truth (Al-Sabil ilā Ma'rifat al-Ḥaqq).

²² For these tribes see Durayd, Geneal., pp. 181, 211. The translation is given freely so as to make the passage readable.

²³ These are both words for "blind."

²⁴ Synonym meaning "sent."

²⁵ These words might be translated "bedding" and "mattresses," signifying the same thing.

²⁶ See Glossary for this phrase.

²⁷ The Mashraqiyyūn was a name used for those living in the east. In North Africa it applied especially to members of the Shī'ah.

'Amr ibn 'Ubayd

He was Abū 'Uthmān 'Anir ibn 'Ubayd ibn Bāb, a protégé of the Banū al-'Adawiyah [clan] of the Ḥanzalāh [branch] of the Banū Tamīm Tribe.²⁸ Al-Balkhī said that Bāb [the grandfather] was one of the prisoners from Kābul, a prisoner of 'Abd al-Rahmān ibn Samurah²⁹ and a protégé first of the Banū 'Uqayl, but later of the Banū 'Arārah.³⁰

He was born during the year in which Wāṣil was born, which was the year eighty [A.D. 699]. He was a man of medium stature, calloused between the eyes as the result of prostrating.³¹ He was a friend of [the Caliph] Abū Ja'far al-Manṣūr and there were stories about them. He preached to al-Manṣūr a number of times with a famous and well-known message (word). 'Amr died while returning along the way to Makkah from al-Baṣrah, at a place known as Marrān,³² during the year one hundred and forty-four [A.D. 761], when he was sixty years of age.

Although it has never been heard of for a caliph to make an elegy for a person of lower rank, al-Manṣūr composed an elegy for him, saying:

May Allāh bless you lying in the tomb, which I passed on the way at Marrān;

It is a tomb enshrouding a believer, who revered and worshiped Allāh, believing the Qur'ān.

Had time spared a righteous man, it would have spared for us 'Amr Abū 'Uthmān.

Among his books there were:

The Commentary (Al-Tafsīr), taken from al-Ḥasan [al-Baṣrī]; Justice and Oneness (Al-'Adl wa-al-Tawḥīd); a refutation of the Qadariyah.

²⁸ See Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 37.

²⁹ This was a Companion of the Prophet who conquered Kābul; see Biog. Index.

³⁰ See Durayd, Geneal., pp. 181, 254.

³¹ He prayed so often, touching his forehead to the ground, that the skin over his eyes became calloused.

³² See Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 479, where there is mention of a tomb at Marrān in Arabia.

Naming of Those Who Drew upon 'Amr [ibn 'Ubayd] and Wāsil [ibn 'Aṭā']

One of those who drew upon 'Amr and Wāsil, but no book of whom is known, was Abū 'Amr 'Uthmān ibn Khālīd al-Ṭawīl, the teacher of Abū Hudhayl [al-'Allāf]. There was also Abū Ḥafṣ 'Umar ibn Abī 'Uthmān al-Sāmarrī, who drew upon the Commentary (Kitāb al-Tafsīr) of 'Amr and al-Ḥasan.

Abū al-Hudhayl al-'Allāf

He was Abū al-Hudhayl Muḥammad ibn al-Hudhayl al-'Allāf, a protégé of 'Abd al-Qays and al-Hudhayl ibn 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Makhūl al-'Abdī.³³ Abū al-Hudhayl was born during the year one hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 748/49]; it is also said thirty-four. He learned theology from 'Uthmān ibn Khālīd al-Ṭawīl, not coming into contact with either Wāsil [ibn 'Aṭā'] or 'Amr [ibn 'Ubayd]. Abū al-'Aynā' said that Abū al-Hudhayl died at Sāmarrā during the year two hundred and twenty-six [A.D. 840/41],³⁴ when he was one hundred and four years old.

When Abū al-Hudhayl was asked about his birth, he replied, "I was born during the year one hundred and thirty-five [A.D. 752/53]." On another occasion, when he was asked about this he said, "My parents told me that Ibrāhīm ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ḥasan was killed when I was a child of ten years old." Ibrāhīm was killed during the year forty-five [A.H. 145; A.D. 762/63]. This remark of Abū al-Hudhayl indicates, therefore, that his birth was during the year one hundred and thirty-five [A.D. 752/53].

Abū al-Hudhayl died during the caliphate of al-Mutawakkil, in the year two hundred and thirty-five [A.D. 849/50], when he was one hundred [lunar] years old. At the end of his life he was stricken with senility. Although he did not lose sight of the fundamental principles of doctrine, he became weak in opposing adversaries and disputing with persons who disagreed with him, as his intelligence became weak.

³³ See Durayd, Geneal., p. 45, for 'Abd al-Qays. The second name may be that of a chief or a subtribe.

³⁴ This date and those given by Mas'ūdi, VI, 369, and Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 125, seem to be too early. Khallikān, II, 667, says he died A.D. 849/50, which is also the date given by al-Nadīm in the next paragraph.

It was said that when a son of Ṣāliḥ ibn 'Abd al-Quddūs died and [the father] grieved for him, Abū al-Hudhayl came to mourn with him. Upon finding him distraught Abū al-Hudhayl said to him, "I do not know the reason why you grieve for your son if man, according to you, is like what is planted (al-zar')."³⁵ Ṣāliḥ replied, "Oh, Abū al-Hudhayl, I grieve for him because he never read the Book of Doubts (Kitāb al-Shukūk)."³⁶ Then he [Abū al-Hudhayl] asked him, "The Book of Doubts, what is that, oh, Ṣāliḥ?" He answered, "It is a book which I have written, in order that whoever reads it will be doubtful about what exists, imagining that it is non-existent, and about what does not exist, imagining that it is existent." So Abū al-Hudhayl said to him, "Be doubtful about the death of your son, acting as though he did not die, even though he has passed away. Be uncertain about his reading the Book of Doubts, even though he never read it."

Abū al-Hudhayl wrote a book known as Milās. This Milās was a Magian, who embraced Islām because of a meeting which he arranged between Abū al-Hudhayl and a group of dualists. When Abū al-Hudhayl silenced them, Milās immediately embraced Islām.³⁵ Abū al-Hudhayl had a son, whose name was al-Hudhayl. Although he was a theologian, no book of his exists.

A person coming up behind Abū al-Hudhayl stopped him and, seizing his throat, said, "Take off your clothes, so that I can see the proof you have of this [circumcision]." Then Abū al-Hudhayl retorted to him, "My proof is that you are saying 'Take off your clothes,' when to remove them while you are holding my throat is impossible. Let go your hand, so that I can take them off!" So he said, "Go in the care of Allāh, for if I postpone the proof for a day, you will take them off immediately." So he did not take off his clothes.³⁶

³⁵ Cf. this passage with Khallikān, II, 668.

³⁶ Because Abū al-Hudhayl was a heretic, who was not born as a Muslim, he was accused of not being circumcised. Accordingly, he was told to take off his clothes, so as to show whether or not he was circumcised. In the second-to-last sentence, the implication is that if Abū al-Hudhayl could have a day's notice, he would immediately become circumcised. The last line is not clear, and the whole passage is so confused that the translation is given freely. The translation assumes that the word given in Arabic as hujj ("pilgrimage") is meant for hujjah ("proof").

Abū al-Hudhayl came to Baghdād during the year two hundred and thirty [A.D. 844/45]. He lived to be over a hundred, but lost his sight. Among his books there were:

The Imamate, against Hishām;³⁷ against Abū Shimr in connection with al-irjā'; Obedience, Not for the Desire of Allāh (Ṭa'ah Lā Yurād Allāh biha);³⁸ against the Sophists; against the Magians; against the Jews; Birth, against al-Nazzām;³⁹ The Promise and the Threat (Al-Wa'd wa-al-Wa'id); The Killing of Ghaylān;⁴⁰ book to the Damascenes; The Sessions; The Proof (Al-Ḥujjah); Describing Allāh as Justice and the Rejection of Evil;⁴¹ Pretence (Proof) of the Heretics (al-Mulhidīn); Naming of the Innovators (Ahl al-Ihdāth); against Dirār [ibn 'Amr] who said that Allāh oppresses His creatures (inna Allāh yaghḍab min fi'lihi);⁴² against the Christians; Questions about Motions and Other Things; against 'Ammār the Christian, which was a refutation of the Christians; A Description of the Oppression and Good Will of Allāh, Exalted Is He;⁴³ Oppression and Good Will; What Is Created [the Qur'ān], against Ḥafṣ al-Fard; Refutation of Muknif al-Madanī; Ordinance, against Ibrāhīm [al-Nazzām]; Refutation of the Ghaylanīyah in Connection with al-Irjā'.

Against Ḥafṣ al-Fard in connection with fa'ala wa-yaf'al;⁴⁴ against al-Nazzām in connection with [God's] approval of the foreordination of injustice;⁴⁵ against al-Nazzām in connection with creation of a phenomenon, and the reply from him; Refutation of the Qadarīyah and the Mujbirah; against Dirār, Jahm, Abū Ḥanīfah, and Ḥafṣ, in connection

³⁷ Probably Hishām ibn al-Ḥakam. See Glossary for "imamate."

³⁸ The heresy of those who are obedient without the intention of pleasing Allāh; see Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 129.

³⁹ Cf. Baghdādī (Seelye), pp. 139-40.

⁴⁰ See Ghaylān ibn Marwān in the Biog. Index.

⁴¹ In Arabic this is Ṣifat Allāh bi-al-'Adl wa-Naḥī al-Qabīḥ. Perhaps ṣifat ("describing") should be translated as "attribute." For the terms in this title, see Mu'tazilah in Glossary and Galland, Essai sur les Mo'tazélites, p. 66.

⁴² See Shahrastānī (Haarbrücker), Part I, p. 94.

⁴³ A word in the manuscript is not clear, but also unimportant. "Oppression" probably refers to the orthodox doctrine that God foreordains man to sin and then punishes him, while "Good Will" refers to the contrary doctrine of the Mu'tazilah.

⁴⁵ See Baghdādī (Seelye), pp. 138 ff.

with the created [the Qur'ān];⁴⁶ against al-Nazzām, about man;⁴⁷ about totality (composition) of forms;⁴⁸ Al-Istiṭā'ah; Motions;⁴⁹ about the creation of a phenomenon from a phenomenon; Refutation of Ahl al-Adyān [ritualists]; Understanding, Also, the Movements of the People of Heaven;⁵⁰ answer of al-'Attābī [Kulthūm ibn 'Amr]; against whoever speaks of punishing infants;⁵¹ The Leaps;⁵² against Ibrāhīm [al-Nazzām]; against the dualists; Essential and Accidental Properties (Al-Jawāhir wa-al-A'rād); Water, Intercession, and Punishment in the Tomb (Al-Ḥawḍ wa-al-Shafā'ah wa-'Adhāb al-Qabr); against the authorities for the Ḥadīth (aṣḥāb al-Ḥadīth) in connection with metaphor; Relationship (Qualification) of the Essential Elements;⁵⁴ Hearing and Sight: Are They Active or Employed Phenomena?;⁵⁵ Man: What Is He?;⁵⁶ Indications of the Validity of the Apostle; The Duration of Man, His Color and Composition;⁵⁷ Sound: What Is It?⁵⁸

Among His Associates

There was Abū Ya'lā Muḥammad ibn Shaddād, known as Zurqān, among whose books there were:

The Delightful Book of Discourses; The Created [the Qur'ān].

⁴⁶ These men were almost certainly Dirār ibn 'Amr, Jahm ibn Safwān, Abū Ḥanīfah al-Nu'mān, and Ḥafṣ al-Fard.

⁴⁷ Cf. Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 139, bottom.

⁴⁸ See Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 135.

⁴⁹ See Nādir, Système philosophique, p. 168.

⁵⁰ This may refer to the heresy which holds that the people of Heaven are active, drink, and intermarry, among other things; see Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 127.

⁵¹ This evidently refers to the foreordaining of infants to go to Hell.

⁵² See Glossary.

⁵³ Al-Ḥawḍ was the "watering trough of the Apostle," from which believers would be given a drink on the Day of Resurrection; see Lane, Lexicon, Part II, p. 670.

⁵⁴ Abū al-Hudhayl defined the body as containing six elements; see Nādir, Système philosophique, pp. 150, 151, 278.

⁵⁵ This is a free translation; the book evidently dealt with problems connected with the attributes of God.

⁵⁶ See Nādir, Système philosophique, pp. 268 ff.

⁵⁷ Cf. ibid., p. 164, for atomic composition and death of man; Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 135, for the body and color of man.

⁵⁸ See Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 144, for the heresy about hearing.

Al-Aswārī⁵⁹

He was Abū 'Alī 'Amr ibn Fāyid al-Aswārī, one of the important theologians among the people of al-Baṣrah. He was attached to Muḥammad ibn Sulaymān ibn 'Alī al-Hāshimī. Coming from Asāwarah he fell in with 'Amr ibn 'Ubayd, from whom he learned and with whom he had disputes. He died shortly after two hundred [A.D. 815/16].

'Amr ibn Fāyid [al-Aswārī] said to Abū al-Mundhir Sallām al-Qārī (the Qur'ānic Reader) in the presence of Muḥammad ibn Sulaymān, "From whom is the truth?" Sallām answered, "From Allāh." Then he said, "Who is the revealer of the truth (al-muḥiqq)?" He answered, "Allāh." He said, "From whom is the false?" He replied, "From Allāh." He said, "Who is the teller of falsehoods (al-mubḥil)?" Whereupon Sallām was silent, cutting short [the conversation]. Among his books there were: ———.

Bishr ibn al-Mu'tamir

Abū Sahl Bishr ibn al-Mu'tamir was born at al-Kūfah, or some say Baghdād. He was one of the great men and chiefs of the Mu'tazilah. The leadership was passed to him during his time. He quoted poetry and historical traditions and was also a poet, most of whose poetry was muzdawij.⁶⁰ He turned prose books about theology, law, and other subjects into poetry. We have already mentioned, in the proper place [in connection] with poetry and the poets, the things which he transcribed.

A group of scholars preferred him to Abān al-Lāḥiqī. He wrote a poem nearly three hundred pages long about his arguments (evidences). No one was ever seen who was more capable than he was in [composing] *mukhammas*⁶¹ and muzdawij. He had skin trouble,⁶² and died during the year two hundred and ten [A.D. 825/26] when he had grown old.

⁵⁹ This man was very likely the father of the better known 'Alī al-Aswārī.

⁶⁰ A type of poetry composed of rhymed couplets.

⁶¹ A type of poetry in the form of five-line verse.

⁶² Abraṣ is the word translated as "skin trouble." It means "leprous," but other skin diseases were often confused with true leprosy.

Al-Jāhiz said:

Bishr ibn al-Mu'tamir slandered Abū al-Hudhayl, whom he accused of hypocrisy. He said in describing Abū al-Hudhayl, "For him to be ignorant, when the people think that he is learned, pleases him more than being learned but considered by the public to be ignorant. Moreover, to belong to a low social class, but to be considered by the people to be a member of an upper class, is better liked by him than that he should belong to the upper class, but by the people be assigned to a lower class. He also prefers to be stupid but appear to be intelligent, rather than to be intelligent but appear to be stupid. Thus he prefers hypocrisy to sincerity, and falsehood which is accepted to truth which is repudiated."

Bishr wrote [the following] prose works, in addition to the books already mentioned as being transmuted into poetry:

Refutation of Anyone Who Reproached Theology; Refutation of the Khawārij; Unbelief and Faith; The Threat (Al-Wa'id), against the Mujbirah; against Kulthūm [ibn 'Amr al-Attābī] and his associates; Interpretation of the Strange in the Qur'ān; against al-Nazzām; against Dirār in connection with the created [the Qur'ān]; Refutation of the Hypocrites; Refutation of the Ignorant; Refutation of Abū al-Hudhayl; The Imamate; Al-Istīṭā'ah, against Hishām ibn al-Ḥakam; Justice (Al-'Adl); against al-Aṣamm, about the created [the Qur'ān]; Al-Tawallud, against al-Nazzām; against upholders of predestination; against Mazīd⁶³ in connection with al-istīṭā'ah; about the middle position (al-manzilah bayn al-manzilatayn);⁶⁴ about children (al-atfāl), against the Mujbirah.

Al-Nazzām

Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Sayyār ibn Hānī al-Nazzām was a freed-man (protégé) of the Ziyādīyūn.⁶⁵ He was born a slave,⁶⁶ the servitude having befallen one of his ancestors. He was a theologian, poet, and man of letters, with a passion⁶⁷ for Abū Nuwās, about whom he composed a number of short poems. Abū Nuwās had him in mind when he said, ⁶³ This name is mentioned by Jār Allāh, Mu'tazilah, p. 226, but cannot be definitely identified and is omitted in the Biog. Index.

⁶⁴ See Glossary.

⁶⁵ See Tabarī, Annales, Part III, p. 1754.

⁶⁶ Instead of "slave," the Arabic word may indicate that he was a member of the tribe of al-'Ubayd; see Durayd, Geneal., p. 258.

⁶⁷ The Cairo Appendix has "upbraiding" instead of "with a passion for."

Tell anyone who with learning lays claim to philosophy,
That you have remembered some things, but other things have gone from you.⁶⁸

In his poetry he adhered to the school of thought of philosophical dialectic, but at the same time he was eloquent in literary style, excellent in expression, and good in deliberate speaking. When describing 'Abd al-Wahhāb al-Thaqafī there was among his sayings:⁶⁹ "He, by Allāh, was sweeter than security after fear, recovery after illness, fertility after barrenness, and wealth after poverty; [sweeter] than the obedience of the beloved, the rejoicing of the distressed, and unceasing association with tender youth."⁷⁰

From his poetry there was:

He was so slender that if his garments were torn
The sky would hold him, because of his fineness.
Repeatedly looking at him will wound him
And if you ogle him with the eye he complains.⁷¹

It is said that when Abū al-Hudhayl was with him he [al-Nazzām] repeated these two couplets. Then he [Abū al-Hudhayl] said to him, "Oh, Abū Ishāq, such [poetry] could not have been offered without some nobleness of mind." From his poetry there was [also]:

I censure him, but with forgiving, turning my back on what my soul feels;
I fear the persistent tattle of blame, feeling pain,
For ignorance smites the heart of a forbearing man.
I am humble with him, as though I were expressing to him repentance for his [own] sin committed against me.

⁶⁸ The Cairo Appendix adds the following lines to the poem from the Beatty MS: "Do not ban a benefit, as though it were something prohibited, / For refusing is like repudiation in religion." This was because he was appealing to him to accept the doctrine of the threat (al-wa'id), which he refused."

⁶⁹ Here the Cairo Appendix adds, "apparently nothing was seen better than this."

⁷⁰ In the Beatty MS the word for tender is al-nā'im, but the Cairo Appendix has al-dā'im ("lasting," "eternal").

⁷¹ This poem is given in Baghdādī, Ta'rikh, Part VI, p. 98, and also in the Cairo Appendix.

Al-Nazzām died in the house of Hammawayh, [nicknamed] Ṣāhib al-Tawāwīs (Owner of the Peacocks). Among his books there were: Confirmation of the Apostles; Oneness of Allāh (Al-Tawhīd); against the materialists (aṣḥāb al-hayyūlā); Refutation of the Dahriyah; Refutation of Adherents of the Dualists; Refutation of the Types of the Heretics (al-Mulḥidūn); Rectifying and Making Legal; Knowledge (Al-Ma'rifah); Foreordaining (Al-Taqrīr); Predestination; about the self-contradictory (the impossible, al-muḥal); The Created [the Qur'ān], against the Mujbirah; about justice (al-'adl); Substitution (Al-Badal);⁷² Compliance (Al-Mustaṭī); Al-Tawallud; The Threat (Al-Wa'id); Replies; Unraveling (Breaking an Agreement, Al-Nakth).

The Atom; Al-Ma'ānī, against Mu'ammār [al-Sulamī]; The Leap;⁷³ Al-Makāmanah;⁷⁴ Al-Mudākhalah [one who becomes a proselyte to a heresy]; about The Great World; The Small World; Event (Al-Ḥadath); Man;⁷⁵ Logic (Al-Mantiq); Motions; Essential and Accidental Properties (Al-Jawāhir wa-al-A'rād); Bridegroom (Sulphur, Al-'Arūs) (or Thrones [Al-'Arūsh]); Riches (Possessions, Al-Arzāq); The Movements of the People of Heaven;⁷⁶ Creation of the Phenomenon; The Attributes;⁷⁷ about the Qur'ān, what is it?;⁷⁸ Al-Afā'il [actions within the limits of space and time]; Refutation of the Murji'ah.

Al-Dimashqī Qāsim ibn al-Khalīl⁷⁹

He was in the group (class) of Jā'far ibn Mubashshir. Among his books there were:

The Imamate of Abū Bakr; Oneness (Al-Tawhīd); Commentary of the Qur'ān; The Threat (Al-Wa'id); Justice (Al-'Adl), about the categories of the Mu'tazilah; The Created [the Qur'ān].

'Isā ibn Ṣabīḥ al-Murdār

He was Abū Mūsā 'Isā ibn Ṣabīḥ al-Murdār, one of the early chiefs of the Mu'tazilah, who was a pupil of Bishr ibn al-Mu'tamir, the man who introduced the Mu'tazili schism [al-i'tizāl] at Baghdād

⁷² If a diacritical mark is added, the word might be al-bazl ("clarification").

⁷³ See Glossary.

⁷⁴ This Arabic word probably means "places of safe keeping," or "places of hiding," but it may have some religious significance in this title.

⁷⁵ See Nādir, Système philosophique, pp. 268 ff.

⁷⁶ See n. 50.

⁷⁷ The Mu'tazilah denied the attributes of Allāh (see "attributes," Glossary).

⁷⁸ The Mu'tazilah claimed that the Qur'ān was created.

⁷⁹ Some authorities spell this name al-Dimishqī.

and because of whom it was spread and made known.⁸⁰ Al-Šilḥī⁸¹ said that 'Isā died during the year two hundred and twenty-six [A.D. 840/41].

Al-Khayyāt remembered him, saying, "When he met one of his friends he told him, 'We did not show sincere friendship when we met, but when we agreed.'" When Abū Muḥammad al-Yazīdī⁸² addressed al-Ma'mūn, he referred to 'Isā ibn Šabīḥ [in the following verse]:

Oh, king, whose God is oneness,
Your judge Bishr ibn al-Walid is a jackass;
He rejects the testimony of him who believes
What the Book has proclaimed and the Ḥadīth handed down.
He considers to be correct the man who says that his deity
Is a ghost, his body surrounded by the regions [of the world],
According to al-Marīsī, who believed in his lord,
Even though his [doctrine of] oneness was that of the Ajbār [Mujbirah].⁸³

He was one of those who were fond of Bishr ibn al-Mu'tamir. Among his books there were:

Oneness (Al-Tawḥīd); Refutation of the Mujbirah; Justice (Al-'Adl); Questions and Answers; Kindness (Al-Luṭf); Refutation of the Christians; against Abū Qurrah, the Christian; Refutation of the Heretics (al-Mulḥidūn); Considering What Is Lawful and Permitted (Al-Ta'dīl ⁸⁰ Bishr founded the Mu'tazilī movement at Baghdād, A.D. 825/26. See "al-Mu'tazila," Enc. Islam, III, 790.

⁸² As Abū Muḥammad al-Yazīdī died A.D. 817/18 and Bishr ibn al-Walid was appointed as judge A.D. 824/25, this is probably meant for the son, Muḥammad al-Yazīdī, who was an intimate associate of al-Ma'mūn.

⁸³ This poem is given in Ṭabarī, Annales, Part III, p. 1067. Page 1126 also throws light on it. Ṭabarī evidently makes bad mistakes, but, as he omits the two last lines, they may not belong to the poem. Al-Yazīdī was probably making fun of 'Isā ibn Šabīḥ, because 'Isā was unable to persuade the friendly scholar Bishr ibn al-Walid to accept his heretical ideas and those of Bishr ibn Ghiyāth al-Marīsī. Al-Marīsī was influenced by the Murji'ī doctrine that Allāh does not wish believers to condemn sinners, but rather to leave their punishment for the Day of Judgment. The reference to the Book evidently is connected with the Mu'tazilī claim that passages from the Qur'ān itself prove that it was created. See Steiner, Mu'taziliten, p. 30; Galland, Essai sur les Mo'tazélites, p. 67; Nādir, Système philosophique, p. 99. Mention of the ghost probably refers to the heresy which held that although Allāh could be seen in Heaven, He would be without form; see Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 172.

wa-al-Tajwīz); against the Aḥbār⁸⁴ and Magians, in connection with justice and legalizing ('Alā al-Aḥbār wa-al-Majūs fī al-'adl wa-al-tajwīz); Refutation of the Jahmīyah; The Sources of Religion; The Created [the Qur'ān], against al-Najjār; Justice (Al-'Adl), against the Mujbirah; Dialectic Theology (Al-Kalām) of the Learned and the Ignorant; Instruction (Al-Ta'lim); Substitution (Al-Badal), against al-Najjār;⁸⁵ Knowledge (Al-Ma'rifah), against Thumāmah.

Knowledge, against al-Shahhām; Creation of the Qur'ān (Khalq al-Qur'ān); Power over Injustice (Al-Qudrah 'alā al-Zulm), against al-Nazzām;⁸⁶ What Took Place between Him and the People of al-Baṣrah; The Arts of Dialectic Theology (Funūn al-Kalām); against those who uphold legal interpretation by personal opinion ('Alā Aṣḥāb Ijtihād al-Ra'ī); Justice (Al-'Adl); concerning what the Mujbirah are to be questioned about; Melodious Singing, a reply to the "Book of Repentance";⁸⁷ Counsel (Al-Naṣīḥah); He Who Speaks of the Punishment of Infants;⁸⁸ Piety (Al-Diyānah); Repentance (Al-Tawbah); The Right (Middle) Way (Al-Iqtisād); Traditions of the Qur'ān (Akhbār al-Qur'ān).⁸⁹

Mu'ammār al-Sulamī

He was Abū al-Mu'tamir, the chief of those who upheld al-ma'ānī.⁹⁰ It is also said that he was [called] Abū 'Amr Mu'ammār ibn 'Abbād al-Sulamī [descended] from the Banū al-Sulaym.⁹¹ He was one of the inhabitants of al-Baṣrah, but he went to Baghdād, where he had disputes with al-Nazzām about matters connected with the doctrine (sect). Mu'ammār satirized Bishr ibn al-Mu'tamir, the only poetry which he composed being as follows:

A blond-skinned man, his face overflowing with whiteness,
Considers slander a religion, his heart being diseased.

⁸⁴ These were Hebrew scribes, but the word is perhaps meant to be al-ajbār, another form for the Mujbirah.

⁸⁵ Cf. the heresy mentioned in Baghdādī (Halkin), p. 10, n. 2.

⁸⁶ See Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 138, middle.

⁸⁷ This word is not clearly written in the manuscript, but looks like al-nagham ("melodious singing"). It very likely is intended for al-bagham ("obscure speech"). Book of Repentance ("Kitāb al-Tawbah") is the title of one of the author's own books and also a title used by other scholars.

⁸⁸ See n. 51.

⁸⁹ There is another title, but the text is not clear enough to be deciphered.

⁹⁰ For al-ma'ānī, see Frank, Journal of the American Oriental Society, LXXXVII, No. 3 (July–September 1967), 248–59.

⁹¹ See "Sulaim," Enc. Islam, IV, 518.

He died during the year two hundred and fifteen [A.D. 830/31]. Among his books there were:

Al-Ma'ānī; Al-Istiṭā'ah; Falsifying of Weights, and Deceit ('Allat al-Farastūn wa-al-Murā'ah); The Atom Which Is Not Divided and the Proposition of Accidental and Essential Properties (Al-Qawl bi-al-A'rād wa-al-Jawāhir).

Thumāmah ibn Ashras

He was Abū Bishr Thumāmah ibn Ashras al-Numayrī, whose relationship was with the Banū Numayr.⁹² He was one of the important men among the theologians of the Mu'tazilah and also a writer with an eloquent literary style. He attained an excellent position with al-Ma'mūn, who wished to make him a vizier, but he begged off. In connection with this there was a famous statement presented in an address to al-Ma'mūn, who released him. It was also he who advised him [al-Ma'mūn] to appoint Aḥmad ibn Abī Khālīd instead of himself.

Before the time of al-Ma'mūn he was with [Hārūn] al-Rashīd, who being displeased with him because of the Barmak family,⁹³ placed him in the custody of one of his employees. When he was in custody, he wrote to al-Rashīd from his place of confinement:

I am a slave who confesses, a protégé who has sought
The grace of him about whom nomads and townsmen speak.
You can bestow upon him grace, repeating the grace
Of the past and the present, which will be known among the people.
Although absent, my obedience continues and my loyalty
Has not been marred for an hour by falsehood or shame.
If you pardon, it is a thing which I expect,
And if you give me aid, your Lord [Allāh] will aid you.

Among his books there were:

The Proof; The Particular, the Universal, and the Threat (Al-Wa'id);⁹⁴ Knowledge, Which Is Learning; against all who speak of the created ⁹² See Durayd, Geneal., pp. 178, 184, for the Banū Numayr.

⁹³ Evidently Thumāmah was a protégé of the members of the Barmak family, so that he suffered with them when al-Rashīd persecuted the Barmak family. See Hitti, Arabs, pp. 294-96.

⁹⁴ This evidently deals with the different kinds of sins. For the threat, see Glossary.

[the Qur'ān]; Refutation of the Mushabbihah; The Created [the Qur'ān], against the Mujbirah; Ease (Favors) of the People of Heaven; The Laws (Al-Sunan).

Ja'far ibn Mubashshir

He was Abū Muḥammad Ja'far ibn Mubashshir al-Thaqafī, one of the Mu'tazilah of Baghdād, a jurist, theologian, and authority for the Ḥadīth. He had a place as a speaker with eloquence and leadership among his associates. He was also pious, ascetic, and virtuous. He had a brother named Hubaysh who, although acquainted with theology, did not equal Ja'far or come up to him. Ja'far died during the year two hundred and thirty-four [A.D. 848/49]. Among his books there were:

Drinks; Laws and Judgments (Al-Sunan wa-al-Aḥkām); Legal Interpretation; Narrative and What Is Told; Learning (Al-Ma'ārif), against al-Jāhiz; Tanzīh al-Anbiyā';⁹⁵ The Proof, against the innovators (al-iḥdāth); The Abrogating and the Abrogated; Ritual Purification (Al-Ṭahārah); the large book, Traces (Al-Āthār); The Meaning of Historical Traditions (Ma'ānī al-Akhbār) and Their Disclosure; The Court (Al-Dār); against the people of favor ('alā aṣḥāb al-luṭf);⁹⁶ The Command for Good and Avoidance of Evil (Al-Amr bi-al-Ma'rūf wa-al-Nahy 'an al-Munkar); Questions and Answers; The Land Tax (Al-Kharāj); Refutation of the Book of Ibn Shabīb, about al-irjā'; What Is Certain, against Burghūth about the created [the Qur'ān]; Consensus of Opinion (Al-Ijmā'), What Is It?; Oneness (Al-Tawḥīd), according to the classifications of the Mushabbihah, the Jahmīyah, and the Rāfiḍah; against those who uphold analogy and personal opinion ('alā aṣḥāb al-qiyās wa-al-ra'y).⁹⁷

Al-Jāhiz Abū 'Uthmān⁹⁸

He was Abū 'Uthmān 'Amr ibn Baḥr ibn Maḥbūb, a protégé of Abū al-Qallamas 'Amr ibn Qal' al-Kinānī, then al-Fuqaymī, whose ⁹⁵ This means literally "Purifying of the Prophets," but it more likely should be translated, "The Prophets' Declaration of the Purity of Allāh." See Ash'arī, Al-Ibānah 'an Uṣūl al-Diyyānah, pp. 36, 87 n.

⁹⁶ This is probably an attack on persons who depend upon the grace of Allāh rather than their own free will to choose what is right.

⁹⁷ See Glossary for the terms in this paragraph.

⁹⁸ This account should be compared with those in Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (6), 56, and Baghdādī, Ta'rikh, Part XII, p. 213. See also Pellat, Le Milieu basrien, p. 51.

ancestor was one of the Nasāh (Nasā'ah). The grandparent of al-Jāhiz was a Negro called Fazārah, who was a porter of 'Amr ibn Qal'.⁹⁹

Abū 'Ubayd Allāh told us that Muḥammad ibn Muḥammad related that Abū al-'Abbās Muḥammad ibn Yazid [al-Mubarrad] the grammarian¹⁰⁰ said:

I never saw anyone more avaricious for learning than these three: al-Jāhiz, al-Faṭḥ ibn Khāqān, and Ismā'il ibn Ishāq al-Qāḍī (the Judge). Whatever book came into the hands of al-Jāhiz, he read it from start to finish, while al-Faṭḥ carried a book in his slipper and if he left the presence of al-Mutawakkil [the caliph] to urinate or pray, he took up [the book] as he walked, looking it over until he reached his destination. Then he did the same thing again while returning, until he regained his seat. As for Ismā'il ibn Ishāq, whenever I went in to him there was in his hand a book which he was reading, or else he was turning over some books so as to choose one of them to read.¹⁰¹

Abū 'Ubayd Allāh [also] said, "Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā said to me, 'I heard Abū Mūsā al-Hāshimī relate that al-Jāhiz said, 'I am about the age of Abū Nuwās and older than al-Jammāz.''" Al-Jāhiz was ⁹⁹ The name Qal' is also written Qila'. In the Beatty MS there is probably an error, as it is given as Qaṭ'. The significance of the name "al-Fuqaymī" is not clear. Probably 'Amr ibn Qal' was given this name as well as "al-Kinānī" because of some connection with the Fuqaym Tribe. Al-Anbārī quotes a tradition that 'Amr ibn Qal' was called al-Kinānī al-Fuqaymī. For the tribes of Kinānah and Fuqaym, see "Kināna," Enc. Islam, II, 1017, and Durayd, Geneal., p. 150.

The ancestor of 'Amr ibn Qal' was called Abū al-Qallamas; see Ma'sūdī, III, 116. He was the first of the Nasāh (Nasā'ah), who were members of the tribe of Kinānah engaged in supervising observance of the sacred months. During these months raiding ceased, making it safe to conduct trade and go on the pilgrimage. For the Nasāh, see Birūnī, Chronologie orientalischer Völker, p. 12, l. 1, or Birūnī, Chronology, p. 13 l. 19.

Fazārah was evidently the grandfather of al-Jāhiz. Either his name was Maḥbūb and his nickname was Fazārah, or else he was the maternal grandfather and Maḥbūb was the paternal grandfather. It is also possible that the names have been given erroneously, confused with those of other ancestors. Fazārah may have been a porter (hamāl) or a camel herder (jammāl); the texts differ.

¹⁰⁰ Abū 'Ubayd Allāh was evidently a friend of the author of Al-Fihrist. Muḥammad ibn Muḥammad may have been a son of al-Mubarrad.

¹⁰¹ See Chap. III, sect. 2, near n. 12, where the same anecdote is told.

substituted for Ibrāhīm ibn al-'Abbās al-Ṣūlī in the secretariat for a time.¹⁰²

Al-Ṣūlī¹⁰³ said:

Aḥmad ibn Yazid al-Muhallabī passed on to me from his father, [who said] that "[The Caliph] al-Mu'tazz said, 'Oh, Yazid, news of the death of al-Jāhiz has come!' Then I [Yazid] said to the Commander of the Faithful, 'The long-lasting of existence and the duration of glory!'"¹⁰⁴ He [Yazid] said that this was during the year two hundred and fifty-five [A.D. 869]. [Yazid continued,] "Al-Mu'tazz [once] said, 'I desired to bring him to me and to have him remain with me,' but I replied to him that even before dying he was crippled by paralysis."

Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Muḥammad, known as Ibn Abī Ja'far, said to me, "One day al-Jāhiz said to a physician, while complaining to him about his illness, 'I have experienced contrary reactions in my body, for when I ate something cold it affected my foot, whereas if I ate something hot it affected my head.'"

Abū 'Ubayd Allāh said to me that Muḥammad ibn al-'Abbās the grammarian related:

I heard al-Jāhiz say, "I am paralyzed on my left side, so that even if I pinch with scissors I do not feel it, whereas on my right side there is a swelling of the joints [neuritis], so that even if flies pass over it I feel the pain. I also have stones because of which my urine does not flow, but the most oppressive thing for me is ninety-six years [of age]."¹⁰⁵

Al-Jāhiz said:

When al-Ma'mūn read my books about the imamate, he found them to be in accordance with what I had been ordered to undertake. When I went to him, after he had instructed al-Yazidī¹⁰⁶ to inspect them and to tell him about them, al-Ma'mūn said to me, "A man whose intelligence we respect and who gives information accurately has submitted a report ¹⁰² Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (6), 58, says that al-Jāhiz worked in the government secretariat of al-Ma'mūn for three days and then left. Abū Mūsā al-Hāshimī cannot be identified. Cf. Aḥmad ibn Ibrāhīm al-Hāshimī.

¹⁰³ Probably Abū Bakr Muḥammad al-Ṣūlī. These anecdotes are translated freely.

¹⁰⁴ In Arabic without case endings: tūl al-baqā' wa-dawām al-'izz.

¹⁰⁵ Khallikān, II, 408, gives this interpretation, but the words might also be understood with a somewhat modified meaning.

¹⁰⁶ See the Yazidī family in the Biog. Index. It is impossible to be sure which member of the family is indicated here.

to us about these books, with precise details about the workmanship and abundance of useful material. He said to us,¹⁰⁷ 'The evaluation [of the books] might have been more favorable than what [actually] appears, but when I looked into them, I saw that what I found was even better than the evaluation. Then when I examined them carefully, the investigation disclosed even more than what had appeared [at first reading], just as what [actually] appeared amounted to more than the [preliminary] evaluation. For these books, moreover, there is no need for the author or for anyone else to be present in order to explain them, for the author has combined a study of the significant implications with a study of all of the rights [of the caliphate, expressed] in eloquent phrasology, with the easy manners of speech of the market place, of the kings, the populace, and special classes.'¹⁰⁸

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I suppose al-Jāhīz elaborated this statement, glorifying himself and honoring his composition, for how could al-Ma'mūn have spoken these words, praising the composition and commending the authorship?

He [al-Ma'mūn] wrote to the king of the Burghar¹⁰⁹ a letter over one hundred pages in length, but although he did not seek anyone's aid or quote any verse from the Book of Allāh, may His name be exalted, or any word from any wise man preceding him, al-Jāhīz cajoled his tongue into saying, "This letter we have regarded as being taken in a favorable way from a discourse of al-Jāhīz." In his [al-Jāhīz's] epistle to Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik he said:¹¹⁰ Benefit involves love, harm involves hatred, opposition involves enmity, ¹⁰⁷ The Arabic form is abbreviated, while the sentences which follow are given in such a colloquial way that it is difficult to be sure of the original meaning. "Evaluation" is ḥisāb, "more favorable" is arḥā, "appears" is ṭayān. The translation is given freely, so as to make sense, but it may not be entirely accurate, as the structure is somewhat confused.

¹⁰⁸ The books about the caliphate undoubtedly tried to prove that it was the 'Abbasid caliphs who had the divine right to rule the Islāmic theocracy. Al-Jāhīz put these words into the caliph's mouth to show that his arguments were not only sound, but were not exaggerated, and were told in a clear way, showing a wide knowledge of language.

¹¹⁰ This was probably an epistle from al-Jāhīz to one of his patrons, Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Zayyāt.

incompatibility involves vexation, whereas agreement involves friendship, trustworthiness involves peace of mind, perfidy involves controversy about honor, justice involves a joining of hearts, oppression involves dissension, being good natured involves comradeship, withdrawal involves incivility, haughtiness involves hate, humility involves love, liberality involves praise, miserliness involves contempt, lassitude and being easy going involves impatience, good management involves delight, reprimanding involves repentance, caution involves preparations, efficiency of administration involves prosperity, disdain involves coolness, strife forms the preliminaries of evil and is the cause of destruction.

Moreover, for each one of these qualities there may be excess or deficiency. The results are realized when the limits are overstepped. Thus excess of liberality involves waste, excess of humility involves contempt, excesses of self-importance involve hate, excesses of faithlessness involve lack of trust in a person to whom there is access, excess of familiarity involves blending with what is wrong, whereas excess of withdrawal renders a man of good counsel uncivil.

In a passage of one of his books, he [al-Jāhīz] said:

When I was writing these two books, [one] about [the doctrine of] the creation of the Qur'ān, which was the tenet given importance and honor by the Commander of the Faithful,¹¹¹ and [a second] about superiority in connection with the Banū Hāshim, the 'Abd Shams, and Makhzūm,¹¹² what was my due but to sit above the Simākān, Spica and Arcturus, or on top of the 'Ayyūq,¹¹³ or to deal with red sulphur, or to conduct the 'Anqā by her leading string to the Greatest King.¹¹⁴

¹¹⁴ The 'Anqā was a fabled bird, also called Simurgh, that reigned as queen on Mount Qāf. The Ṣūfis sometimes used the bird as an allegorical symbol of divine truth, so that the "Greatest King" probably refers to God. See Richardson, Dictionary, p. 1032, and Browne, Literary History of Persia, II, 33 n., 512-14.

Al-Jāhiz died during the year two hundred and fifty [A.D. 869], during the caliphate of al-Mu'tazz. Among his books there were:

The Animal (Kitāb al-Ḥayawān).¹¹⁵ It is well known that it has seven sections and that there is appended to it another book entitled The Women (Kitāb al-Nisā), about the differences between male and female. There is another book, The Mules (Kitāb al-Bighāl).¹¹⁶ I saw these two books written in the handwriting of Zakariyā' ibn Yahyā ibn Sulaymān, surnamed Abū Yahyā, who was the warrāq of al-Jāhiz. Added to these there was The Camel (Kitāb al-Ibil), which was not in the style of al-Jāhiz and did not resemble it.

He composed this book [Kitāb al-Ḥayawān] in honor of Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Zayyāt.¹¹⁷ Maymūn ibn Hārūn related:

I said to al-Jāhiz, "Do you have an estate at al-Baṣrah?" He smiled and said, "Verily, there is myself, a concubine, the handmaid who serves her, a manservant, and a donkey. I presented The Book of the Animal (Kitāb al-Ḥayawān) to Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik [al-Zayyāt], who gave me five thousand gold coins (s., ḍīnār); I presented The Book of Eloquence and Exposition (Kitāb al-Bayān wa-al-Tabayīn) to Ibn Abī Dā'ūd, who gave me five thousand gold coins; and I presented The Book of Sowing and the Palm Tree (Kitāb al-Zar' wa-al-Nakhl) to Ibrāhīm ibn 'Abbās al-Ṣūlī, who gave me five thousand gold coins.¹¹⁸ Then I went to al-Baṣrah and had an estate which did not require renovation or fertilizing."

Order of the Sections of the Book¹¹⁹

The first:

Its beginning: "Allāh has kept you clear of doubt, guarded you from perplexity, and established a relationship between you and learning."

¹¹⁵ See the Bibliography for a modern edition of this famous book.

¹¹⁶ This title is evidently given incorrectly by Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (6), 75. For a modern edition of this book, with the title Al-Qawl fī al-Bighāl ("The Saying about the Mules"), see the Bibliography.

¹¹⁷ Kitāb al-Ḥayawān is assumed to be the book meant because of its mention in the statement which follows.

¹¹⁸ Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (6), 76, gives Kitāb al-Zar' wa-al-Nahl ("The Book of Sowing and the Bees"), but the Beatty MS gives the title as translated.

Its ending: "To men of the Khawārij, [when] one strikes an open wound, healing it is like [mending] the border of striped cloth."¹²⁰

The second:

Its beginning: "Abū al-Yaqṣān said about comparison of this derivation."¹²¹

Its ending: "And by Allāh I do not know where I put it," about the cutting (ḥazz) of Sahl ibn Hārūn.¹²²

The third:

Its beginning: "We begin it, and with Allāh there is success, by mentioning the dove and what Allāh has bestowed upon it."

Its ending: "In that there is praiseworthy work, benefit with great usefulness and with manifest good effects."¹²³

The fourth:

Its beginning: "The discussion about the ant and the grub."¹²⁴

Its ending: "Kurdūs al-Murādī said."¹²⁵

The fifth:

Its beginning: "We begin in the name of Allāh by completing the statement about the fires of the Arabs and Persians."

Its ending: "As though when we came to it we encamped at the side of the garden spot, its freshness quenching thirst."¹²⁶

The sixth:

Its beginning: "We have spoken about scripts, their benefits and their advantages in general."¹²⁷

¹²⁰ Jāhiz, Kitāb al-Ḥayawān, I, 3, main text.

¹²¹ Ibid., II, 10. This passage has to do with an analysis of the word for "dog" (kalb), giving examples.

¹²² Ibid., II, 375. This refers to an amusing anecdote about Sahl ibn Hārūn, telling about the cutting off of a rooster's head and its disappearance.

¹²³ Ibid., III, 5 nn., p. 59. The ending refers to the meat of bats.

¹²⁴ Ibid., IV, 5. The word translated "grub" (al-dharrah) may also be the egg of the ant.

¹²⁵ Ibid., IV, 492. The proper name cannot be identified.

¹²⁶ Ibid., V, 5, 604.

¹²⁷ Ibid., VI, 5. For the statement about scripts referred to here, ibid., I, 62.

Its ending: "Abū al-Muthannā prospered in al-ʿIrāq and taught his people to eat al-khabīṣ."¹²⁸

The seventh:

Its beginning: "Knowing the animals. Oh, our God, verily we seek Thy protection from Satan."¹²⁹

Its ending: "Clad with encirclement of iron as though."¹³⁰

[Additional Books by al-Jāhiz]

Explanation and Exposition (Kitāb al-Bayān wa-al-Tabyīn)¹³¹—there are two manuscripts for this book, the first and the second, the second being the more accurate and excellent;¹³² Sowing and the Palm Tree (al-Zarʿ wa-al-Nakhl);¹³³ The Difference between a Prophet and One Claiming to Be a Prophet (Al-Farq bayn al-Nabī wa-al-Mutanabbī); Knowledge (Al-Maʿrifah); The Replies of the Book of Knowledge;¹³⁴ Questions of the Book of Knowledge; Refutation of Those Who [Claim to] Have Divine Inspiration; Order of the Qurʾān, three copies (Naẓm al-Qurʾān, thalāthat nusakh); Questions in the Qurʾān;¹³⁵ Excellence of the Muʿtazilah; Refutation of the Mushabbihah; The Imamate, according to the Doctrine of the Shīʿah. Statement about the Declaration of the Branches of the Zaydiyyah (Ḥikāyat Qawl Aṣnaf al-Zaydiyyah); The ʿUthmāniyah;¹³⁶ Historical Traditions and How They Are Valid; Refutation of the Christians; The Heavy-Spoken Man of al-Mirbad;

¹²⁸ Ibid., VI, 510. The translation follows this passage cited, as the Beatty MS has the preposition ʿalā instead of ʿallam ("taught"). Al-khabīṣ is a dish of dates with butter.

¹²⁹ Ibid., VII, 5. In al-Jāhiz's own text, the first phrase is "Knowing the species of animals."

¹³⁰ Ibid., VII, 263. This line comes at the end of a poem and is metaphorical, following a simile about a mountain.

¹³¹ For this translation of the title, see Nicholson, Literary History of the Arabs, p. 347 top. The titles in the following list should be compared with the ones given in Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (6), 76, 77.

¹³² The following incomplete statement is found at this point; it is not translated in the text: "The beginning of the first section of the second."

¹³³ See n. 118.

¹³⁴ In the Beatty MS the word jawabāt ("replies") followed by several letters has been inserted under the word for book. Flügel gives the singular, "reply."

¹³⁵ The passage of Yāqūt (see n. 131) omits fī ("in").

¹³⁶ This refers to the adherents of ʿUthmān, the third caliph.

Refutation of the ʿUthmāniyah;¹³⁷ The Caliphate of Muʿāwiyah; The Caliphate of the ʿAbbāsids (Imāmat Banī al-ʿAbbās).

The Two Youths (Al-Fityān);¹³⁸ The Leaders (Military Chiefs, Al-Quwwād); The Robbers (Al-Luṣūṣ); Mention of What There Is [Shared] between the Zaydiyyah and the Rāfiḍah; Discourse about Oneness (Al-Tawḥīd); The Art (Formation) of Speech;¹³⁹ Praising of ʿAlī, about giving authority to the judges (Taṣwīb ʿAlī fī taḥkīm al-ḥakamīn);¹⁴⁰ Things Necessary for the Caliphate (Wujūb al-Imāmah); Idols (Al-Aṣnām); Deputies and Guardians (Al-Wukalāʾ wa-al-Muwakkalīn);¹⁴¹ The Drinker and What Is Drunk (Al-Shārib wa-al-Mashrūb); The Glory of Winter and Summer (Iftikhār al-Shitāʾ wa-al-Ṣayf); The Teachers (Al-Muʿallimīn);¹⁴² Slave Girls (Al-Jawārī) (or Associates [Al-Ḥawārī]); Rare Forms of Goodness (Nawādir al-Ḥusn) (or Rare Anecdotes about al-Ḥasan [Nawādir al-Ḥasan]); The Misers (Al-Bukhalāʾ);¹⁴³ The Difference between the Banū ʿAbd Shams and Makhzūm;¹⁴⁴ The Lame and the Lepers (Al-ʿUrjān wa-al-Burṣān);¹⁴⁵ Nobility of the Members of Qaḥṭān and ʿAdnān;¹⁴⁶ Making a Quadrangle and a Circle (Al-Tarbiʾ wa-al-Tadwīr).¹⁴⁷

¹³⁷ Yāqūt (see n. 131) gives ʿIṣām al-Murīd, which might refer to a man called ʿIṣām the Seeker (after knowledge). The translation is taken from the Beatty MS, which seems to indicate either ʿAbām al-Mirbad or, if a consonant point is placed over the first letter of the Arabic, Ghannām al-Mirbad. ʿAbām is a person with heavy speech, probably a nomad. Ghannām is "sheep owner." Al-Mirbad was the market place of al-Baṣrah, where al-Jāhiz used to talk with the nomads who came to sell their animals, so as to learn the tribal vernaculars. See Pellat, Le Milieu baṣrien, p. 63.

¹³⁸ This very likely refers to al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn, the two grandsons of the Prophet, although it might signify "day" and "night."

¹³⁹ The Arabic is Ṣināʾat al-Kalām, from the Beatty MS. Yāqūt (see n. 131) gives Ṣiyāghat al-Kalām, which would imply Goldsmithing Speech and must be wrong.

¹⁴⁰ The last word may be al-ḥakamayn. This may refer to the appointment of arbitrators to settle the famous dispute between ʿAlī and Muʿāwiyah.

¹⁴¹ The final word may be muwakkilīn ("those who appoint deputies") instead of muwakkalīn.

¹⁴² This may be instead The Instructed ("Al-Muʿallamīn").

¹⁴³ For a modern French translation, see Jāhiz, Le Livre des avares.

¹⁴⁴ ʿAbd Shams was the ancestor of the Umayyads, while Makhzūm was a noble family of Makkah. See Hitti, Arabs, p. 189; "Makhzūm," Enc. Islam, III, 171. Yāqūt (see n. 131) has al-fakhr ("glory"), whereas the Beatty MS has al-farq ("difference").

¹⁴⁵ The translation follows the Yāqūt passage (see n. 131). Instead of al-ʿurjān ("lame"), the Beatty MS has a word which seems to be an error in copying.

¹⁴⁶ These were the two original divisions of the Arabian tribes; see Hitti, Arabs, p. 32.

¹⁴⁷ Reference to a modern edition of this book will be found in the Bibliography. To understand the significance of this book, see Pellat, Le Milieu baṣrien, p. 51 ff.

¹⁴⁹ Al-istiṭā'ah is man's ability to appropriate a foreordained action; see Glossary for references. Khalq al-af'āl is the divine "creation of actions," before man appropriates them.

¹⁵⁰ Yāqūt (see n. 131) omits al-'āshiq ("the amorous"). The other words mean literally, "increasing and vanishing."

¹⁵¹ Yāqūt (see n. 131) has al-muzāh wa-al-jadd, which might be translated as "humorous and serious speech."

¹⁵² Sticks with bent ends used for a game of ball on horseback, which was probably the origin of polo.

¹⁵³ Yāqūt (see n. 131) has āl ("family of") instead of ilā ("to") before Ibrāhīm.

What Has Been Regarded as an Epistle among the Works of al-Jāhīz¹⁵⁵

His epistle to Abū al-Faraj ibn Najjāh about examining the wise ideas (minds) of the ancients (imtiḥān 'uqūl al-awliyā'); his epistle to Abū al-Najm about the land tax (al-kharāj); his epistle about the pen (script, al-qalam); his epistle about excellence in choice of books (faḍl ittikhādhi al-kutub¹⁵⁶); his epistle about keeping a secret (kitmān al-sirr); his epistle about praise of wine (madḥ al-nabīdh); his epistle about the reproach of wine (dhamm al-nabīdh); his epistle about forgiveness and pardon (al-'afw wa-al-ṣafḥ); his epistle about the offense of drunkenness (ithm al-sukr); his epistle about hope and the hoped-for (al-amal wa-al-ma'mūl); his epistle about ornament (elegance of literary style, al-ḥilyah); his epistle about the reproach of secretaries (dhamm al-kuttāb); his epistle about praise of the warrāqūn; his epistle about reproaching them; his epistle about who among the poets was named 'Umar;¹⁵⁷ his epistle about the excess of the ignorance of Ya'qūb ibn Ishāq al-Kindī; his epistle about generosity (al-karm), addressed to Abū al-Faraj ibn Najjāh; his epistle about the unique (al-yatīmālī);¹⁵⁸ his epistle about the death of Abū Ḥarb al-Ṣaffār al-Baṣrī; his epistle about inheritance (al-mirāth);

¹⁵⁴ Abū al-Najm may be one of the men of this name listed in the Biog. Index, or the character in a story, or perhaps a friend of al-Jāhīz.

¹⁵⁵ See Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (6), 77-78, for these epistles.

¹⁵⁶ This might be al-kutub, an unusual plural for "secretaries."

¹⁵⁷ For this epistle, the translation follows Yāqūt (see n. 155).

¹⁵⁸ This was a popular title for books, the most famous one being The Unique Pearl ("Al-Durrah al-Yatīmāh") by Ibn al-Muqaffā'; see Hitti, Arabs, p. 401 top.

his epistle about kīmiyā 'wa-al-kīmiyā;¹⁵⁹ his epistle about obstinate arbitrariness and consultation in war (al-istibdād wa-al-mushāwarah fī al-ḥarb); his epistle about refutation of the qawliyah.¹⁶⁰

The Lion and the Wolf (Al-Asad wa-al-Dhi'b);¹⁶¹ The Kings and the Nations: Those Extinct and Those Surviving (Al-Mulūk wa-al-Umm: al-Sālifah wa-al-Bāqiyah); Judges and Governors (Al-Qudāh wa-al-Wulāh); The Wise and the Ignorant (Al-Ālim wa-al-Jāhil); Al-*Nard*¹⁶² and Chess (Al-Nard wa-al-Shatranj); Adulteration of the Crafts (Ghashsh al-Shina'āt); Dispute between the Cross-Eyed Man and the Man Blind in One Eye (Khuṣūmat al-Hūl wa-al-Ūr); Stricken by Blights (Dhawī al-Āhāt); The Singers (Al-Mughannīyin); The Manners of Those Who Pester Their Friends (Akhlaq al-Shuttār).¹⁶³

I have found written in the handwriting of Ibn al-Furāt, near the epistles of al-Jāhiz, what has not been mentioned and is added to al-Nadīm ———.¹⁶⁴

Epistle to Aḥmad ibn Isrā'īl; epistle to Aḥmad ibn al-Munajjim,¹⁶⁵ about care of speech (ḥifẓ al-lisān); another epistle to Aḥmad ibn al-Munajjim; epistle to Sulaymān ibn Wahb; epistle to al-Ḥasan ibn Wahb; epistle to Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Malik, about anger and satisfaction (al-ghaḍab wa-al-riḍā); epistle about thanks (praise, al-shukr); epistle about earnestness and joking (al-jidd wa-al-hazl); epistle about the description of the important matters concerning the creation of the Qur'ān, about which there are also five other epistles; epistle to Muḥammad al-Yazīdī; four epistles to Ibn Najāh [Abū al-Faraj], about the mind, judgment, and other things (al-aql al-ḥukm wa-ghayrihi); epistle to Abū 'Amr Aḥmad ibn Sa'īd, to whom three other epistles were also addressed.

¹⁵⁹ Yāqūt (see n. 155) gives Kitāb al-Kīmiyā ("The Book of Alchemy"). The repetition of the word kīmiyā, in the Beatty MS, may be an error in copying, or meant to be "elixir," or have some other significance. See "al-Kīmiyā," Enc. Islam, II, 1010.

¹⁶¹ This second paragraph is a list of book titles.

¹⁶² An old game similar to backgammon or checkers. See Chap. III, sect. 3, n. 186.

¹⁶³ Yāqūt (see n. 155) ends his list at this point, omitting the epistles which follow.

¹⁶⁴ This is an attempt to translate what is legible in a marginal note of the Beatty MS. The list which follows was evidently added to the text by some scribe.

¹⁶⁵ Probably Aḥmad ibn 'Alī ibn Yahyā al-Munajjim.

Epistle to 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Yahyā [ibn Khāqān]; epistle to Ibn Abī Dā'ūd about the book "Order of the Qur'ān" (Naẓm al-Qur'ān); also an epistle addressed to him about the qualities of the book "The Judicial Interpretation (Al-Futūyā);¹⁶⁶ epistle to Abū al-Walīd ibn Aḥmad about cauterization (al-kayy); epistle to 'Abdān ibn Abī Ḥarb, to whom he also addressed two other epistles; epistle about the reproach for what is plagiarized;¹⁶⁷ epistle to Aḥmad ibn Ḥamdūn al-Nadīm about the qualities of a court companion (ṣifāt al-nadīm); epistle to Aḥmad ibn al-Mudabbir; epistle to Aḥmad ibn al-Mudabbir 'Awn,¹⁶⁸ about guarding a secret and [use of] the tongue (ḥifẓ al-sirr wa-al-lisān); epistle to the Commander of the Faithful al-Muntaẓar bi-Allāh [Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan]; epistle to Aḥmad ibn al-Khaṭīb, which was the last [epistle] that I found [listed] in the handwriting of Ibn al-Furāt.

Aḥmad ibn Abī Duwād¹⁶⁹

Although no book of his is recorded, we mention Ibn Abī Duwād because he was one of the superior members of the Mu'tazilah, unsullied, a part of the pure living of the sect, upholding his people and his responsibility for them.¹⁷⁰

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Aḥmad ibn Abī Duwād ibn Jarīr ibn Mālik ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abbād ibn Salām ibn Mālik ibn 'Abd Hind ibn Lakḥm ibn Mālik ibn Qamas¹⁷¹ ibn Man'ah (Manā'ah) ibn Daws ibn al-Dīl ibn¹⁷² Umayyah ibn Ḥudhafah ibn Zuhīr ibn Iyād ibn Nizār ibn Ma'add.

¹⁶⁷ "What is plagiarized" is written al-manḥūlah, but perhaps al-manḥūl is the word meant.

¹⁶⁸ In the marginal note in the Beatty MS the name al-Mudabbir is crossed out, and the name Abī 'Awn is inserted underneath. See Biog. Index, Abū 'Awn, Aḥmad ibn al-Najm.

¹⁶⁹ Some authorities spell the last element "Du'ād."

¹⁷¹ The Beatty MS is not clear; "Qamas" is taken from Khallikān, I, 61, and Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 31 top.

¹⁷² The Beatty MS has min ("from") instead of ibn.

His birth was at al-Baṣrah and he was one of the protégés of Yaḥyā ibn Aktham, who introduced him to al-Ma'mūn. Then, through al-Ma'mūn he became associated with al-Mu'taṣim. Among the sons of the people of his kind, there was never seen a more honorable, excellent, or liberal person. It is said that he was adopted by Iyād, his status being recorded in the book Faults (Kitāb al-Mathālib). Mukhallad ibn Bakkār said, lampooning him:

With me thou art of Iyād, this is not mere talk.¹⁷³

An Arab art thou, an Arab in truth, not by coercion.¹⁷⁴

The hair of your legs and thighs is khuzāmā and thumām,¹⁷⁵

Your chest bones show with moles.

If you make a motion, there will not flee from you even an ostrich,

Or prolific gazelles with large loins.

What fault of mine is it if people lie about thee?

For verily they say that he is a Ḥām of the Banū Anbāṭ.¹⁷⁶

Verily a true Arab art thou in lineage; So farewell.¹⁷⁷

Aḥmad had a number of sons with Arabicized names and surnames. The most distinguished of the group was Abū al-Walīd, who served as a judge during his father's lifetime, but died about a month before his father's death. Abū al-Walīd wrote a number of books about the law, agreeing in point of view with Abū Ḥanīfah. We will give a thorough account of him in his proper place.

Aḥmad ibn Abī Duwād died during the year two hundred and forty [A.D. 854/55], during the caliphate of al-Mutawakkil, due to a paralysis which befell him. No compositions or books of his are known.

¹⁷³ The phrase translated "this is not mere talk" is literally "there is not a word." For the tribe, see "Iyād," Enc. Islam, II, 565; Khaldūn, Muqaddimah (Rosenthal), I, 266; II, 379; III, 343.

¹⁷⁵ Khuzāmā is lavender (Lavandula spica) and thumām is the herb Panicum dichotomum. This simile implied that he was truly an Arab.

¹⁷⁶ Ḥām of the Banū Anbāṭ would be a Nabataean Ḥamite, and therefore not a true Arab.

¹⁷⁷ "In lineage" is a free rendering of ḥāsim ("consecutive"). The last word is abbreviated, but evidently meant for al-salām ("peace"), which was often used to say farewell.

Ja'far ibn Ḥarb

He was Abū al-Faḍl ibn Ḥarb al-Hamadhānī from Hamadhān, to whom the leadership passed during his time. He was an ascetic, who abstained from the unlawful, fearing Allāh. He was also an anchorite.

It is said that he once attended a session of [the Caliph] al-Wāthiq for controversial discussion. When the time came to pray, those in attendance arose, al-Wāthiq leading and praying with them. But Ja'far, going aside and removing his slippers, prayed by himself. It was said that Yaḥyā ibn Kāmil was the nearest to him among them and that tears dripped down his cheek, fearing death for Ja'far. It was also said that when Ja'far put on his slippers and returned to the gathering, al-Wāthiq regarded him with disapproval.¹⁷⁸

Then they resumed their controversy, but after they had departed Aḥmad ibn Abī Du'ād said to Ja'far, "This lion [al-Wāthiq] does not tolerate this kind of behavior. If you are persistent with it, don't attend the audience." Ja'far replied, "I don't want to attend it, unless you take me there!" So he [Aḥmad] told him, "Then don't attend!" It is said, moreover, that when al-Wāthiq was at a second session he remarked, after observing those present and failing to find Ja'far, "Where is the righteous shaykh?" Aḥmad replied to him, "As he has tuberculosis he has to lie down, a thing to which the audience of the Commander of the Faithful is superior." Then al-Wāthiq said, "May he be a ransom for you!" But he did not attend to Ja'far.

Ja'far died during the year two hundred and thirty-six [A.D. 850/51], when he was fifty-nine years old. Among his books there were:

Allegorical Interpretation of the Qur'ān (Mutashābih al-Qur'ān); The Thorough Investigation (Al-Istiqṣā); The Sources (Al-Uṣūl); Refutation of Those Upholding the [Concept of] Natures (Aṣḥāb al-Ṭabā'i).¹⁷⁹

Al-Iskāfī

Al-Balkhī said that he was Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Iskāfī, whose origin was from Samarqand. He had an ¹⁷⁸ This is a free translation, which may not be entirely correct, as the Arabic use of pronouns is not very definite. It was insulting for Ja'far to refuse to pray with the caliph, so his friend probably feared that the caliph might execute him.

¹⁷⁹ See Nādir, Falsifat al-Mu'tazilah, Part II, pp. 74-86.

extraordinary degree of learning, intelligence, and knowledge, as well as self-control, superiority of purpose, and purity from defilement.

He reached a point of old age not reached by his companions, so that [the Caliph] al-Mu'taṣim, marveling at him with great astonishment, advanced and enriched him. I have been told that when he spoke, he [the Caliph] paid attention to him, while those in the audience kept silence. They did not utter a word until, when he finished, al-Mu'taṣim turned to them saying, "Who can deviate from this opinion and explanation?" He [the Caliph] used to say to him, "Oh, Muḥammad, declare this doctrine to the judges (al-mawālī) and inform me about any one of them who refuses [to accept it], so that I may deal with him and take action."¹⁸⁰

Al-Iskāfī died during the year forty [A.H. 240: A.D. 854/55]. When news of his death reached Muḥammad ibn 'Isā Burghūth, he prostrated himself. Six months later he, too, died.

Al-Iskāfī was at first a tailor. His father and mother prevented him from going often to seek theology,¹⁸¹ imposing upon him the necessity of earning his living. But Ja'far ibn Ḥarb took charge of him,¹⁸² sending his mother twenty silver coins (s., dirham) each month, in lieu of his earnings. Among his books there were:

The Delightful (Al-Laṭīf); The Substitute (Al-Badal); against al-Nazzām, about the tenet that the two different natures (al-ṭabī'ayn al-mukhtalifayn) are formed together as one agent;¹⁸³ The Sessions, about giving superiority to 'Alī, for whom may there be peace; Confirmation of the Creation of the Qur'ān (Athbāt Khalq al-Qur'ān); Refutation of the ¹⁸⁰ The last clause is literally, "so that I will deal with him what I shall do." This passage refers to the inquisition (al-mihnah), which was begun A.D. 833, but maintained by al-Mu'taṣim. Any judge who did not subscribe to the doctrine of the creation of the Qur'ān was liable to be discharged from his office. See "Miḥna," Enc. Islam, III, 483; Hitti, Arabs, p. 429. As the inquisition was directed especially against the judges and religious authorities, the word al-mawālī is translated "judges," although usually it is used for "masters" and "lords," or else for "slaves" and "protégés."

¹⁸¹ This probably meant that the boy wished to leave his work in the tailor's shop, to attend classes and lectures at some mosque.

¹⁸² It was the custom for a scholar to have a boy work for him, in return for some pay and instruction.

¹⁸³ See Baghdādī (Seelye), pp. 139 bottom, 140.

Mushabbihah; The Created [the Qur'ān], against the Mujbirah; Explanation of the Obscure (Bayān al-Mushkil), against Burghūth; Explanation of Falsifying, invalidating the book of Ḥafs (Bayān al-Tamwīh, naqd kitāb Ḥafs); Refutation of the Book of al-Ḥusayn al-Najjār; Refutation of Whoever Has Denied (Ankar) the Creation of the Qur'ān.

Explanation of the Declarations of the Mujbirah (Sharḥ Aqāwīl al-Mujbirah); Making Void the Statement of Anyone Who Has Spoken of the Punishment of Infants (Ibtāl Qawl man qāl bi-Ta'dhīb al-Aṭfāl);¹⁸⁴ A Compendium of the Dogma of the People of Truth (Jumal Qawl Ahl al-Ḥaqq);¹⁸⁵ Grace (Al-Na'im); about what the theologians disagree on; against al-Ḥusayn [al-Najjār] about al-istiṭā'ah; The Virtues of 'Alī, for Whom May There Be Peace; Drinks (Al-Ashribah); Al-Quṭb;¹⁸⁶ against Hishām;¹⁸⁷ Refutation of the Book of Ibn Shabīb about the Threat (Al-Wa'id).

Ibn al-Iskāfī

He was Abū al-Qāsim Ja'far ibn Muḥammad al-Iskāfī, a secretary with good literary style, to whom al-Mu'taṣim assigned one of his government offices and who was superior to many of the secretaries. Among his books there was The Standard of Measure and Balance (Al-Mi'yār wa-al-Muwāzanah).

Mention of the Persons among the Mu'tazilah Who Adopted Innovations and Individual Doctrines

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: We mention these men at this point of time, after which we shall return to mentioning the sincere members of the Mu'tazilah, whom we shall record in sequence until our own time. In Allāh is confidence.¹⁸⁸

¹⁸⁴ This evidently refers to the foreordaining of infants to go to hell.

¹⁸⁵ In this paragraph, Qawl ("saying") and aqāwīl ("sayings") are translated in different ways to fit the context.

¹⁸⁶ This word is used for the Prophet Muḥammad, but may also mean the Pole Star or that upon which an affair depends, among other meanings. See also Sprenger, pp. 1166 ff.

¹⁸⁷ Almost certainly Hishām ibn al-Ḥakam.

¹⁸⁸ Further mention of the "sincere members of the Mu'tazilah" is not made in the Beatty MS, the pages referring to them having been lost. Some of them are mentioned in the Tonk MS, following the termination of the Beatty MS.

Al-Aṣamm

It is related that Thumāmah once described Abū Bakr [al-Aṣamm] to al-Ma'mūn with eloquence of portrayal. Thumāmah said [about this incident], "One day I said to him [al-Ma'mūn], 'Oh, Commander of the Faithful, you are the caliph, whereas he [al-Aṣamm] is a subject. If you should see him, you would treat him generously.' When he [the caliph] came to al-'Irāq he said, 'Where is your friend, whom you were describing. Present him, that we may give him patronage.'¹⁸⁹ Then he went on to relate, "I said, 'He has gone before you, oh, Commander of the Faithful, for he died before your arrival.'"

He was poor, bearing his poverty with great patience. His friends said to him, "All have benefited by their companions, who have given property and other worldly things, but we do not give you anything." It is related that he replied, "By Allāh, I have not expected that your companionship would bring me the world!"¹⁹⁰

In his time he was counted as one of the Mu'tazilah, but because he turned against the Commander of the Faithful 'Alī, for whom may there be peace, he was slandered and ruled out from the sincere group of the Mu'tazilah.¹⁹¹ He died during the year of the Hijrah two hundred [A.D. 815/16], but it is also said [during the year], one [A.H. 201]. Among his books there were:

Commentary on the Qur'ān (Tafsīr al-Qur'ān); Creation of the Qur'ān (Khalq al-Qur'ān); Oneness (Al-Tawhīd); The Proof and the Apostles;¹⁹² The Things about Which the Mu'jibrah Ask;¹⁹³ An Explanation of the Names of Allāh, May His Name Be Glorified; The Imamate; Division of the People and Dissention of the Partisans (Iftirāq al-Ummah wa-Ikhtilāf al-Shi'ah); The Command for Good and Prohibition of Evil (Al-Amr bi-al-Ma'rūf wa-al-Nahy 'an al-Munkar); Refutation of *Hishām*¹⁹⁴ regarding al-Tashbih; The Created [the Qur'ān]; Motions; The Compendium, against the Rāfiḍah.

¹⁸⁹ The Arabic word translated as "give him patronage" (istakaff) probably implies that the caliph will benefit by the presence of al-Aṣamm if he includes him in the entourage of the court.

¹⁹⁰ This passage is translated freely.

¹⁹¹ See Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 170.

¹⁹² Instead of al-hujjah ("proof"), this may be al-hijjah ("pilgrimage").

¹⁹³ The word translated "things" is al-āy, which may also mean "signs" or "verses."

¹⁹⁴ Probably Hishām ibn al-Hakam.

Refutation of the Mu'jibrah about the created [the Qur'ān]; Refutation of the Dahriyah; against the heretics (al-mulhidah); Refutation of the Jews; Refutation of the Magians; Knowledge (Al-Ma'rifah); Epistles of the Imams about Justice (Rasā'il al-A'immaḥ fī al-'Adl); Refutation of Whoever Has Spoken with the Sword (al-Sayf); against those who give legal interpretations ('alā ahl al-fatwā); The Compendium about the Apostles (Al-Mūjaz fī al-Rusul); Refutation of the Zanādiqah; Knowledge of Aspects of Theology (Ma'tifat Wujūh al-Kalām); What Is Directed by the Book and the Sunnah, with a Description of the Great and the Small.¹⁹⁵

Al-Fūfī

He was Hishām ibn 'Amr al-Fūfī, the second letter being quiescent as is required in Arabic. He was one of the friends (disciples) of Abū al-Hudhayl, though he deviated from him [his teachings]. The Mu'tazilah were uncertain with regards to him and, according to what Ibn al-Ikshid recorded, they turned away from him. He was one of the people of al-Baṣrah, but traveled to numerous lands of the sea.¹⁹⁶

A group of people from the cities accepted his call to the Mu'tazilī doctrine [al-i'tizāl]. Hishām asserted that Satan does not enter into a man, but whispers to him from outside. Allāh is greater than this, for his whispering reaches the heart of a son of Adam, to test him. Among his books there were:

The Created [the Qur'ān]; Refutation of al-Aṣamm, about rejecting of motions (fī nafy al-ḥarakāt); Creation of the Qur'ān; Oneness (Al-Tawhīd); Answer of the People of Khurāsān; To the People of al-Baṣrah; The Five Sources (Al-Uṣūl al-Khams);¹⁹⁷ against the Bakriyah; against Abū al-Hudhayl, about grace (al-na'im).

Dirār ibn 'Amr

He was surnamed Abū 'Amr and was one of the persons claimed by the Mu'tazilah. It is said that it was the custom of Abū Yūsuf, ¹⁹⁵ The Book refers to the Qur'ān and "great" and "small" to different types of sins.

¹⁹⁶ Instead of "sea" (al-baḥr) this might be "trade" (al-tajr).

the friend of Abū Ḥanīfah, to pass by [the house of] Ḍirār when he wished to go to the place of prayer.¹⁹⁸ It happened that when he passed by him, seeking to observe the prayer for the feast on the Day of Sacrifice (Yawm al-Nahr), Ḍirār was with the sacrifice (body) of his sheep, which was being skinned. So Abū Yūsuf said to him, "Oh, Abū 'Amr, what does this mean, you are slaughtering before the imam (prayer leader) prays!" It is said that Ḍirār replied to him, "I thought that the sessions of the scholars (al-'ulamā') had already educated you, so who is this imam here, for whose prayer I should wait?" Among his books there were:

Oneness (Al-Tawḥīd); Refutation of All the Heretics (al-Muḥīdīyah); The Created [the Qur'ān]; Contradiction of the Ḥadīth (Tanāquḍ al-Ḥadīth); The Inducement (Al-Mad'awah);¹⁹⁹ Guidance, about the occurrence of things (Al-Dalālah, 'alā ḥadath al-ashyā'); Refutation of the Heretics (Al-Muḥīdīn); combining thirteen books (chapters) about a refutation of the Mushabbihah; combining six books about a refutation of the heretics (al-muḥīdīn); combining ten books about a refutation of the people of sects (sectarians); Equation (Comparison, Al-Musāwāh); Al-Kharā'it;²⁰⁰ Confirmation of the Apostles.

Refutation of Aristotle, about essential and accidental properties (al-jawāhir wa-al-a'rād); four epistles against innovators (ahl al-ahwā');²⁰¹ The Two Governments (Al-Dawlatayn);²⁰² Incitement and Impulses (Al-Taḥrīsh wa-al-Ighrā'); to whoever among the Muslims matures (attains knowledge); Friday (Al-Jum'ah); Kindness and Gratitude (Al-Ma'rūf wa-al-Shukr); Commentary on the Qur'ān; Refutation of the Zanādiqah; The Threat (Al-Wa'id); The Enemy Who Is a Reconciler (Al-'Adw al-Muṣliḥ); Thought about Allāh on the Day of Judgment (Al-Fikr fī Allāh 'alā al-Wāqī'ah), which has five books (chapters); against the Murji'ah, about intercession (al-shafā'ah).

¹⁹⁸ For the two men almost certainly referred to in this passage, see Biog. Index, Abū Yūsuf Ya'qūb ibn Ibrāhīm and Abū Ḥanīfah; see also Pellat, Le Milieu bagdadien, p. 91.

¹⁹⁹ This word is given as "inducement" which seems to be what is intended, although in the Beatty MS it is written, perhaps incorrectly, as al-mad'ūwah, an unidentified form.

²⁰⁰ This is used for leather strips bound together, often in the form of an official briefcase. It might be an unusual form for the plural of "purge."

²⁰² The two governments were almost certainly the Umayyad and 'Abbāsīd dynasties.

Disagreements about Atoms (Ikhtilāf al-Ajzā'); Refutation of Those Upholding the [Concept of] Natures (Aṣḥāb al-Ṭaba'i');²⁰³ Refutation of the Christians; Epistle of the Ṣūfīs (Risālat al-Ṣūfiyyīn); Disagreement of the People and Confirmation of the Proof (Ikhtilāf al-Nās wa-Itḥbāt al-Ḥujjah); Refutation of the Khawārij; Predestination; The Desire (Al-Irādah); Similitude (Allegory); Assistance, about the Forsaken (Al-Ma'ūnah fī al-Khadlān); Possessions, Property, Periods (Deaths), and Children (Al-Arzāq wa-al-Mulk wa-al-Ājāl wa-al-Aṭfāl); The Copied (The Quoted, Al-Manqūlin); Historical Traditions (Al-Akḥbār).

Reasons and Knowledge in Connection with Prophecy (Al-Asbāb wa-al-'Ilm 'alā al-Nabūwah); against the Fuḍayliyah and the Muḥakkimah, in connection with their assertion that people belong to the Faith, even if there appears among them wrongdoing; against the Murji'ah in connection with the names [of Allāh]; The Middle Position (Al-Manzilah bayn al-Manzilatayn); Interpretation of the Qur'ān (Ta'wīl al-Qur'ān); The Two Regimes (Al-Hukmayn);²⁰⁴ Morals of the Theologians (Ādāb al-Mutakallimīn); against the Azāriqah, the Najadāt, and the Murji'ah.

Refutation of the Wāqifah, the Jahmīyah, and the Ghaylānīyah; Refutation of the Rāfiḍah and the Ḥashawīyah; Refutation of the One Who Thinks That the Prophets Disagreed about an Attribute of Allāh, Glorified and Exalted; Refutation of Mu'ammār about His Saying That Muḥammad Is Lord;²⁰⁵ The Imamate; The Will; Refutation of the Muḡlūrīyah and the Maṣūūrīyah, about their saying that the earth is never without a prophet; Refutation of the Ḥashawīyah, about their saying that if the Prophet was asked forgiveness for a man, he would pardon him; against anyone who thinks that the Prophet omitted anything from the Faith (al-Dīn), or understood²⁰⁶ the invisible (al-ghayb); that the names [of Allāh] are not compared (al-asmā' la tuqās).

'Abbād ibn Sulaymān

Abū Sahl 'Abbād ibn Sulaymān ibn 'Alī is counted among the Mu'tazilah of al-Baṣrah. He was one of the inhabitants of al-Baṣrah and an associate (pupil) of Hishām ibn 'Amr [al-Fūfī], but he ²⁰³ See Nādir, Falsifat al-Mu'tazilah, Part II, pp. 74-86.

²⁰⁴ Al-Hukmayn must refer to the Umayyad and 'Abbāsīd dynasties.

²⁰⁵ Mu'ammār probably refers to either Mu'ammār ibn 'Abbād or Mu'ammār ibn al-Ash'athī. "Lord" (al-rabb) is used for Allāh, but not Muḥammad.

²⁰⁶ The word translated "understood" might be "knew" or "taught."

disagreed with the Mu'tazilāh about some points, having particular ideas which he himself invented. Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'i described him as skillful in theology, but then he said, "If it were not for his craziness!"

When 'Abbād was speaking with a Sophist, it is related that the Sophist said to him, "A thirsty man once came to drink what he supposed to be water, but he found it to be something else. How can you deny that this is the way of all suppositions?"²⁰⁷ 'Abbād replied to him, "If this man, who desired a drink which he supposed to be water but found to be some other beverage, had come to the Tigris, he would have supposed that it also contained that other beverage. But by his experience he would have learned from the Tigris and the water in it what the truth really was, just as he learned previously about that other beverage, recognizing the difference between water and the beverage by his sense perceptions." Thereupon the man stopped [talking].²⁰⁸

Among the books of 'Abbād there were:

Denial That Men Create Their Actions (Al-Inkār ann Yakhliq al-Nās Af'alāhum); Determining Guidance for Accidents (Tathbit Dalālat al-A'rād²⁰⁹); Confirmation of the Atom Which Does Not Divide (Ithbāt al-Juz' al-Ladhī La Yatajuzza').

Abū Sa'id al-Huṣrī al-Ṣūfī

He was one of the Mu'tazilāh, but he confused and invented [doctrines]. Among his books there were:

Oneness (Al-Tawhīd); Al-Istiṭā'ah; The Created [the Qur'ān], against the Mujbirāh; Oaths (Al-Aymān);²¹⁰ The Virtues (Faḍā'il) of 'Alī, for Whom May There Be Peace.

²⁰⁷ In the Beatty MS the word "thirsty" (al-aṭshān) is crossed out and on the margin there is given the word "mistaken" (sādir).

²⁰⁸ This passage has been translated freely. The point is that the Sophists denied reality. The word translated "beverage" (al-sharāb) is often used for "syrup" or "wine."

²⁰⁹ Instead of "accidents" this may refer to "bodies."

²¹⁰ This may be The Faith (Al-Imān).

Abū Ḥafṣ al-Haddād

Although he was one of those who invented new doctrines, he was a Mu'tazilī, among whose books there was Al-Ḥārūf,²¹¹ in connection with sufficiency of proofs, concerning which he was refuted by Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'i, al-Khayyāt [Abū al-Ḥusayn], and al-Ḥārith al-Warrāq.

'Isā al-Ṣūfī

He was Abū Mūsā 'Isā ibn al-Haytham, who was one of the important members of the Mu'tazilāh, but who after a time confused [his doctrines]. Ibn al-Rāwandī received information from him. He died during the year two hundred and forty-five [A.D. 859/60]. Among his books there were: ———.

Abū 'Isā al-Warrāq

Abū 'Isā Muḥammad ibn Hārūn ibn Muḥammad al-Warrāq was one of the brilliant theologians who was a Mu'tazilī, but confused [the doctrines] until his confusion caused him to be accused of belonging to the sect of the adherents of dualism. Ibn al-Rāwandī drew upon [his ideas]. Among his books there were:

Discourses; The Event (Al-Ḥadath); the large book, The Imamate; the small book, The Imamate; The Unusual Eastern in Rhyme (Al-Gharīb al-Mashraqī fī al-Nawḥ), against "The Book of the Animal" (Kitāb al-Ḥayawān);²¹² A Recounting about the Sects of the Adherents of Dualism (Iqtisāṣ Madhāhib Aṣḥāb al-Itimayn), with a refutation of them; the large book, Refutation of the Christians; the medium-size book, Refutation of the Christians; the small book, Refutation of the Christians; Refutation of the Magians; Refutation of the Jews.

Ibn al-Rāwandī

In the book The Virtues of Khurāsān (Maḥāsīn Khurāsān), al-Balkhī said, "He was Abū al-Ḥusayn Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā al-

²¹¹ Al-Ḥārūf lacks consonant signs and the letter at the end might be q instead of f. It is, therefore, very likely meant for al-khāzūq. In later times this was used for "a stake for impaling," whereas in modern slang it means "a thorny problem." What the meaning was in the tenth century is not certain.

²¹² This was evidently a criticism of the famous Book of the Animal by al-Jāhiz. The word "eastern" is the only translation which fits the form in the Beatty MS, but it may not be correct.

Rāwandī²¹³ from among the people of Marw al-Rūz.²¹⁴ He was one of the theologians, and during his time there was no one among his peers who was keener than he was in theology or better acquainted with its subtlety and importance.²¹⁵

During the first part of his life he was straightforward, sound in doctrine, and exceedingly modest. Then he was divested of all this because of influences affecting him and because his learning was greater than his intelligence. Appropriate to him was the saying of the poet:

Who developed righteously in his childhood,
But became concealed when repudiated.²¹⁶

A group reported that he repented of what he had been doing, at the time of his death, so that penitence and his confession purified him. He encountered, however, scorn and disdain directed toward him, because of the cruelty of his companions and their expelling him from their meetings.²¹⁷

He wrote most of his heretical books for Abū 'Isā al-Yahūdī al-Ahwāzī, and it was at the home of this man that he died. Among the cursed books composed for him, which are known, there are:

The Crown (Al-Tāj), in which he argues for the eternity of the world;²¹⁸ The Emerald (Al-Zunnurud), in which he argues about the apostles and the falsity of apostleship; The Description of Wisdom in the Scripture of Allāh, May His Name Be Glorified (Na't al-Hikmah bi-Ṣifr Allāh), about requiring from his creation what he has ordered and forbidden

²¹³ The Beatty MS omits the long alif. The correct spelling of the name Rāwandī, from which this word is taken, is found in Yāqūt, Geog., II, 741.

²¹⁴ Ibid., IV, 506.

²¹⁵ It is possible that this phrase should be translated, "or more known for precision and honor."

²¹⁶ This very likely refers to the fact that when the companions of Ibn al-Rāwandī wanted to have him executed, he hid in the home of his Jewish patron at al-Kūfah; see Murtaḍā, p. 92, l. 14.

²¹⁸ This was a book upholding dualism and the eternity of matter. For this title and several others which follow, see Murtaḍā, p. 92.

(fī taklīf khalqihī amrahu wa-naḥyahu);²¹⁹ The Striker, in which he speaks ill of the order of the Qur'ān (Al-Dāmigh, yaṭ'an fīhī 'alā mizām al-Qur'ān);²²⁰ The Branch, in which he shows that the knowledge of Allāh about things is an event, and that He was without knowledge until He created for himself knowledge;²²¹ The Unique, about accusation of the Prophet (Al-Farīd, fī al-ta'n 'alā al-Nabī), for whom may there be peace;²²² The Coral (Al-Marjān);²²³ The Pearl, about denial of motions (Al-Lu'lu'ah, manāhī al-ḥarakāt).

Ibn al-Rāwandī said:

I passed by a shaykh who was seated with a Qur'ān in his hand. He was reading, "To Allāh is the waterspout (al-mizāb) of the heavens and the earth." I saluted and said, "Oh, shaykh, why do you read that the Qur'ān says 'To Allāh is the waterspout of the heavens and the earth'?" He said, "This is the rain which you see." Then I said, "A mistake in pronunciation only exists when it is explained. It is not like that, but is 'The heritage (al-mirāth) of the heavens and the earth.'" He then said, "Our God is forgiving; for forty years I have read it and in my confusing it is thus."²²⁴

Ibn al-Rāwandī died ————. Among his books there were:

The Names and the Decrees: The Days of Righteousness (Al-Asmā wa'l-Aḥkām: Ayyān Ṣalāḥah); Commencing and Recommencing (Al-Ibtadā' wa-al-I'ādah); The Inamate; Creation of the Qur'ān; Continuation and Annihilation (Al-Baqā' wa-al-Fanā);²²⁵ Al-Waqf; ²¹⁹ Murtaḍā (ibid.) says that this book is about dualism.

²²⁰ Murtaḍā (ibid.) also speaks of this book, and says that it deals with a refutation of the Qur'ān.

²²¹ In the Beatty MS the title Al-Qadīb ("The Branch") has a line through it with some letters inserted after it, but the text is not clear enough to decipher them. In the Qur'ān 2: 117, it explains how Allāh creates: "When He decreeth a matter, He says to it Be and it is."

²²² Murtaḍā, p. 92, says that this book is a refutation of the prophets. In the Beatty MS it is clearly written al-farīd ("the unique"), but in Khayyāt, Intiṣār (Nādir), p. xxix and in the Cairo Appendix it is given as al-farand (al-firand), meaning "sword."

²²³ In the Beatty MS some words are inserted on the margin, but they are not legible.

²²⁴ The word translated "confusing" is given in the Beatty MS as taṣḥīf ("mistaking of words").

²²⁵ Although the mystics used the word al-fanā' for "ecstasy," it probably means "annihilation" here. See Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 181 bottom.

The Red Stone, the Days of Its Corruption (Al-Ḥajar al-Aḥmar Ayyām Fasādiḥ);²²⁶ The Black Stone (Al-Ḥajar al-Aswad) likewise; There Is Nothing unless It Is Existing (Mawjūd); Al-Istiḥāḥ; Disgraceful Acts of the Mu'tazilah (Faḍā'il al-Mu'tazilah).

Careful Examination (Al-Rawīyah);²²⁷ The Proving (Al-Ihtijāj), addressed to Hishām ibn al-Ḥakam; Man (Al-Insān); The Particular and the Universal (Al-Khāṣṣ wa-al-'Ām); Refutation of One Who Has Spoken of Fulfilling a Motion by Its Perception (Al-Radd 'alā man Qāl bi-Wafī al-Ḥarakah bi-Baṣriḥ);²²⁸ Totals (Al-Jumal); Confirmation of the Apostles (Athbāt al-Ruṣl); Corruption of the Court and Prohibition of Earnings (Fasād al-Dār wa-Taḥrīm al-Makāsib); Refutation of One Who Has Denied Actions and Accidents (Nafā al-Af'āl wa-al-A'rād);²²⁹ Questions (Al-Masā'il), against the Hishāmīyah; The Manner of Proving (Kifīyat al-Istidlāl); Accidents (Al-A'rād); Refutation of the Zanādiqah.

An Account of the Statement (Qawl) of Mu'ammār [ibn 'Abbād al-Sulamī] and His Proof (Ihtijāj) in "Al-Ma'ānī"; Subtlety and Answers (Al-Nukat wa-al-Jawābāt);²³⁰ The Method of Consensus and What Its Form Is;²³¹ Confirmation of the Power of the One (Athbāt Jabr al-Wāḥid);²³² Refutation of the Mu'tazilah, concerning the threat and the middle position (fī al-wa'id wa-al-manzilah bayn al-manzilatayn); Al-Adrāk (Punishments, The Lowest Hell); Statement about the Defects (al-'Ilal) of Hishām in Connection with Body and Appearance (fī al-Jism-wa-al-Ru'yah); Historical Traditions (Al-Akhbār) and a Refutation ²²⁶ If the title which follows refers to the famous Black Stone in the Ka'bah at Makkah, it is possible that the Red Stone refers to the idol of that name at Mount Ajā', worshipped by the Tayyī' Tribe; see Kalbī, Aṣṣūm, p. 51. This idol was called al-Fals. It was a red stone which protruded from the rock like a human face. As, however, the word translated "corruption" (fasād) more literally means "decomposition," it is likely that the black and red stones were substances used for alchemy. The term Kibrīt al-Aḥmar was used for the Philosopher's Stone. Black often indicated lead. See "al-Kimiyā," Enc. Islam, II, 1010.

²²⁷ This is perhaps meant to be Vision ("Al-Ru'yah").

²²⁸ This title may not be given correctly, as the words in the text are carelessly written. Cf. Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 185.

²²⁹ The word al-a'rād, in this title and in the third one following, can have several meanings other than "accidents."

²³⁰ After this title there is the word "against" followed by what looks like "al-Manāmiyah," but is very likely meant to be al-thanauiyah ("the dualists").

²³¹ This title evidently signifies a book describing in what way consensus of opinion is to be used for legal interpretation.

²³² Instead of jabr ("power"), especially in connection with preordination, the word may be khayr ("good") or khubr ("information," "knowledge").

of Anyone Who Has Invalidated Reliable Traditions (al-Tawātur); The Morals of Disputation (Adab al-Jadal); Refutation of the Book "The Emerald" (Naqḍ Kitāb al-Zumurrud), against himself;²³³ Refutation of "The Coral" (Naqḍ al-Marjān); Refutation of "The Striker" (al-Dānigh) he did not finish it.

Al-Nāshī al-Kabīr²³⁴

Abū al-'Abbās 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Malik al-Nāshī, known as Shirshīr, was one of the people of al-Anbār. After living in Baghdād he moved to Egypt, where he died. He was a theologian, poet, and deliberate speaker, with good training. He wrote a poem of four thousand verses, each terminating with the same ending and rhyme.²³⁵ It was about theology, but in it he pursued the method of philosophy. He fell out with the theologians of his generation, it being said that he was a dualist.

I have read written in the handwriting of al-Ḥijāzī, [surnamed] Abū al-Qāsim:

The reason for this nickname, I mean "al-Nāshī," was his going to a session in which there were persons engaged in disputation. When he spoke as a youth, young in years, about the doctrine of the Mu'tazilah, one of the shaykhs among them approved, interrupting the discussion. Then standing up he raised his head saying, "Oh, Allāh, don't let us lose anyone like this one who is maturing (al-nāshī), so that he may be among us and that those like him may come²³⁶ to us at all times." So Abū al-'Abbās approved the name and with it he was nicknamed, according to what Ibn al-Junayd told me.²³⁷

²³³ This book and the two which follow were written for an unbeliever, Abū 'Isā the Jew. Before he died, Ibn al-Rāwandī repented of his heresy and evidently wrote these books to prove his sincere penitence.

²³⁴ Al-kabīr can mean "the great," but more likely means "the elder." The Cairo Appendix omits the account of al-Nāshī, but adds some of his lines of poetry.

²³⁵ For this poem, see Mas'ūdī, VII, 88, 89.

²³⁶ The word translated "may come" is crossed out in the text and the correction on the margin is not clearly enough written to be sure of its meaning.

²³⁷ The Beatty MS ends at this point. After this, there is at least one manuscript page which has been lost from all sources (see following note). Then follows material which is found only in the Tonk MS, from this point until the account of al-Wāsiṭī, where the Flügel text resumes and MS 1934 begins (n. 266). See Fück, ZDMG, New Ser., XV, No. 2 (1936), 298-321, where the Tonk text is printed.

[Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Khayyāt]²³⁸

—, against Ibn al-Rāwandī; Refutation of "The Emerald" (Naqḍ al-Zumurrud), against al-Rāwandī; Refutation of the Book of 'Abbād ibn Salmā, about the opposite (al-'aks);²³⁹ Refutation of "The Crown" (Al-Tāj), against [Ibn] al-Rāwandī; Refutation of "The Striker" (Al-Dāmigh), against [Ibn] al-Rāwandī; Refutation of "The Proof" (Al-Burhān).

Al-Bardha'ī

He was Abū al-Ḥasan ibn 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Bardha'ī, whose origin was at Bardha'ah in Ādharbayjān.²⁴⁰ He was one of the great men among the Mu'tazilah of Baghdād.

Al-Shaṭawī

He was Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn 'Alī al-Shaṭawī, one of the notables among the Mu'tazilah, but miserly and jealous. He died, strangled, during the year seventy-nine [A.D. 892/93].²⁴¹ His son and daughter strangled him, because when his daughter asked him to marry her to a man whom she chose, he refused her request, increasing her confinement. So she and his son agreed that they would come with a slaughterer (butcher) from Bāb Muḥawwal, and they hanged him. He was dwelling at Darb al-Qibāb in al-Karkh.²⁴²

²³⁸ Between the end of the Beatty MS and this heading, there is at least one page of material lacking from all sources. This may have contained an account of Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Jubbā'ī, since it would have been unreasonable to omit such a well-known theologian from this section. And the missing material evidently contained an account of Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Khayyāt which is completed by the mention of the following six titles.

The word kitāb ("book") is omitted from some of the titles, but they evidently refer to books written by al-Khayyāt. Murtaḍā, p. 92, says that al-Khayyāt wrote books refuting many of those of Ibn al-Rāwandī, including The Emerald, The Crown, and The Striker. The famous heretic is sometimes called al-Rāwandī and sometimes Ibn al-Rāwandī. The first a is not always indicated as being long.

²³⁹ Perhaps 'Abbād ibn Sulaymān is the name meant, although Murtaḍā, ibid., does not mention Al-'Aks as a title in dealing with the books written by that scholar.

²⁴⁰ See Yāqūt, Geog., I, 558.

²⁴¹ This is probably a mistake for ninety-seven (A.D. 909/10).

²⁴² Bāb Muḥawwal was west of the Round City of Baghdād, and the Karkh Quarter was south. See Le Strange, Baghdad, pp. 47 map, 65, 146. As the text is not perfectly clear, the translation may not be entirely accurate.

Al-Ḥārith al-Warrāq

In the book Al-Maḥāsīn, al-Balkhī²⁴³ said, "He was Abū al-Qāsim al-Ḥārith ibn 'Alī, one of the inhabitants of Khurāsān and altogether a man of religion, humility, and piety, as well as a chief among the leaders of persons with discernment, with few equals during his period."

His composition was in good style and he wrote excellent and famous books and refutations of a number of the books of Ibn al-Rāwandī. He was a contemporary of Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'ī, with whom he had controversies. They met at the Sūq al-Ahwāz.²⁴⁴ It was said that he was a warrāq, who sold books and acted as a warrāq for the people of Qaṣr al-Waḍḍāḥ on the left bank.²⁴⁵ Among his books there were:

The Created [the Qur'ān]; Names and Judgments (Al-Asmā' wa-al-Aḥkām); The Imamate; Refutation of "The Striker" (Naqḍ al-Dāmigh);²⁴⁶ Refutation of "The Emerald" (Naqḍ al-Zumurrud); Refutation of "Arousing Wisdom" (Naqḍ Ba'th al-Ḥikmah); Refutation of "The Crown" (Naqḍ al-Tāj); Allegorical Interpretation of the Qur'ān (Mutashābihāt al-Qur'ān); Emergence of the World and Its Evidence (Ḥudūth al-'Ālam wa-al-Adillah 'Alayhā).

Abū al-Qāsim [al-Balkhī]

He was Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Maḥmūd al-Balkhī, known as al-Ka'bī. He was a scholar and dialectic theologian, the leader of the men of his period. He served as secretary to one of the generals, Naṣr ibn Aḥmad, and was acquainted with Aḥmad ibn Sahl [ibn Hāshim]. When Aḥmad ibn Sahl turned against Naṣr ibn Aḥmad, he lived at Nīsābūr. Then when he [Naṣr] gained control over Aḥmad, he took al-Balkhī along with a ²⁴³ This title is not mentioned with the books of either Abū al-Qāsim al-Balkhī or Aḥmad ibn Sahl al-Balkhī.

²⁴⁴ Sūq al-Ahwāz was probably a market street near Qaṣr al-Waḍḍāḥ, which was a palace a short distance southeast of the Round City of Baghdād; see Le Strange, Baghdad, pp. 58, 92, 97 map.

²⁴⁵ This man is a good example of a well-educated book dealer, who by selling manuscripts and stationery to the people at the palace was able to make enough money to write books of his own.

²⁴⁶ The books mentioned in this and the three following titles were written by the heretic Ibn al-Rāwandī.

group of men, whom he seized and kept in confinement.²⁴⁷ When his [al-Balkhī's] situation became known to 'Alī ibn 'Isā, the vizier, he was released from this predicament. This was during the vizierate of Ḥāmid ibn al-'Abbās.

Al-Balkhī went to the session of Abū Aḥmad Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī, whose sessions were attended by theologians coming together.²⁴⁸ They elevated and exalted him [al-Balkhī] so that there was no one over whom he did not have authority. It happened that a Jew came in while some of them were theorizing about abrogation of the law (shar'). When they reached a subject in their discussion about which they were passing judgment on Abū al-Qāsim [al-Balkhī], it was the Jew's turn to speak. So Abū al-Qāsim said, "It is for you to speak." The Jew then said to him, "What do you know about this?" Abū al-Qāsim replied to him, "Wait for this! Do you acknowledge that there is a theological session at Baghdād more important than this?" He [the Jew] said, "No." Then he [Abū al-Qāsim] said, "Do you know of anyone among the theologians who does not attend it?" He said, "No." He [Abū al-Qāsim] said, "Have you seen anybody among them who does not rise up for me and exalt me?" He said, "No." So he [Abū al-Qāsim] said, "Do you see them doing this when I am absent?"

Al-Balkhī died on the first day of Sha'ban [eighth Muslim month] during the year three hundred and nine.²⁴⁹ Among his books there were:

The Treatises (Al-Maḡālāt), in which he related the sources of questions and their answers; The Most Excellent and the Rare (Al-Ghurur wa-al-Nawādir); The Means of Demonstrating the Concealed with Evidence (Kayfiyat al-Istidlāl bi-al-Shāhid 'alā al-Ghā'ib); Disputation (Al-Jadal), the Training of Those Engaged in It and Correction (Taṣṣīḥ) of Its Defects ('Ilāl); The Sunnah and al-Jamā'ah; the large book of sessions;

²⁴⁷ See "Naṣr b. Aḥmad," Enc. Islam, III, 871.

²⁴⁸ As Abū Aḥmad Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī was a court favorite, he may have organized these sessions on theology at the court of the caliph, as many of the rulers liked to spend their leisure time in listening to learned discussions, as well as in hearing their slave girls sing. Compare the story which follows with Murtaḍā, p. 88.

²⁴⁹ The Tonk MS has 309 (A.D. 921/22), but Baghdādī, Khaṭīb-Ta'rikh, Part IV, p. 384, has 319 (A.D. 931/32) which is probably correct. The rendering in Fück, ZDMG, New Ser., XV, No. 2 (1936), 298-321, corrects what seem to be errors in the Tonk MS.

the small book of sessions; Refutation of the Book of al-Khalīl²⁵⁰ against Burghūth; the second book against Abū 'Alī [al-Jubbā'i] about Heaven; Questions of al-Khujandī, about how he disagreed with Abū 'Alī [al-Jubbā'i]; Confirmation of the Treatises of Abū al-Hudhayl (Ta'yīd Maḡālāt Abī al-Hudhayl), about the atom.²⁵¹

The Resembling (Al-Muḍāhāh), against Burghūth; the large commentary on the Qur'ān; Qualities (Fuḍūl) (or Divisions [Fuṣūl]) of Public Speakers (al-Khuttāb); against the man pretending to be a prophet in Khurāsān; The Ultimate in the Right (Al-Nihāyah fī al-Aṣḡah); against Abū 'Alī [al-Jubbā'i] and the refutation of him by al-Saymarī; Dialectic Theology among the Lower Classes (Al-Kalām fī al-Ummah), against Ibn Qutaybah;²⁵² Refutation of al-Rāzī, about divine knowledge (al-'ilm al-illāhī).

Theologians Contemporary with [Abū al-Qāsim] al-Balkhī

Abū Bakr al-Ḥalaqānī.

Abū Ishāq al-Wāhibī.

Al-Saymarī

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn 'Umar al-Saymarī, from the people of al-Saymarah,²⁵³ and was counted among the Mu'tazilah of al-Baṣrah because he claimed to have learned from Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'i. After the death of Abū 'Alī [about A.D. 916], the leadership culminated with him. He was of the same age as Abū 'Alī, or close to it. He died during the year three hundred and fifteen [A.D. 927/28].

It was related about Abū 'Alī that he said, "Our shaykh is Abū 'Abd Allāh [al-Saymarī], from whom the Shaykh Abū Sa'īd al-Sirāfī learned the science of theology, and who was also the ²⁵⁰ This may be the al-Khalīl known as Ibn Jank.

²⁵¹ The Tonk MS has al-hazz ("incision," "notch"), but this word is very likely meant to be al-juz' ("atom"), a subject in which the metaphysicians were interested.

²⁵² This name is too carelessly written to be sure that it is correctly interpreted.

²⁵³ See Yāqūt, Geog., III, 442. On the margin of the Tonk MS at this point there is the note, "During the period of al-Balkhī among the theologians, Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'i."

teacher of Abū Bakr ibn al-Ikhshīd.²⁵⁴ Among his books there were: Questions and Answers. He also wrote Refutation of the Book of Ibn al-Rāwandī about Temperaments (Innate Qualities, Al-Ṭabā'i); Refutation of the Book of al-Balkhī Known as "The Ultimate in the Right" (Kitāb al-Nihāyah fī al-Aṣḥāḥ), against Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'ī.

Al-Bāhili

Abū 'Umar Muḥammad ibn 'Umar ibn Sa'id al-Bāhili al-Baṣrī belonged to the Bāhilah.²⁵⁵ His birthplace was at al-Baṣrah, where there was for him a source of technical excellence in the science of theology, according to the school of thought of the scholars of al-Baṣrah.

He was a judge, whose session the theologians attended. It was said that Abū 'Alī [al-Jubbā'ī] went to his session, and that because of the excellence of his recountings and the poignancy of his interpretation, the people and the theologians used to weep. Among his books there were:

Sublimity (I'jāz) of the Qur'ān; The Sources, about oneness; Oneness, separate from "The Sources."

Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā al-Munajjim

Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī ibn Yaḥyā ibn Abī Maṣṣūr al-Munajjim was beautifully cultured and well acquainted with theology, about which he wrote books, in addition to those about other cultural subjects. We have dealt with him thoroughly in the accounts about the court companions. Among his books about theology there were:

Proofs of the Prophecy of Muḥammad, for Whom May There Be Peace; Oneness (Al-Tawḥīd) and a Refutation of the Mushabbihah.

I have read [what was written] in the handwriting of Abū Aḥmad Yaḥyā ibn 'Alī [al-Munajjim], that Abū al-Qāsim al-Balkhī said:

After [the time of] Wāṣil ibn 'Aṭā', the leaders of the Mu'tazilah who

²⁵⁵ For this tribe, see "Bāhila," Enc. Islam, I, 576; Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 39; Pellat, Le Milieu baṣrien, p. 186.

composed books and made known the the i'tizāl were:²⁵⁶ Abū al-Hudhayl, al-Nazzām, Mu'ammār ibn 'Abbād, Hishām al-Fuṭī ibn 'Amr, Bishr ibn al-Mu'tamir, Thumāmah, al-Jāhiz. Then after those: Bishr ibn Khālid, 'Alī al-Aswārī, 'Isā ibn Ṣabīḥ, Ja'far ibn Ḥarb, Ja'far ibn al-Mubashshir, al-Qāsim al-Dimashqī, al-Iskāfī [Abū Ja'far], 'Isā ibn al-Haytham, Abū Shu'ayb al-Ṣayrafī, al-Shahhām, al-Adamī, Abū Zufar,²⁵⁷ Muḥammad ibn Suwayd, Abū Mujālid, Abū al-Ṭayyib al-Balkhī, Muḥammad ibn 'Alī al-Makkī,²⁵⁸ Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Khayyāt, al-Shaṭawī, Muḥammad ibn Sa'id Nisābūr,²⁵⁹ Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb, al-Manānī,²⁶⁰ al-Balkhī,²⁶¹ al-Ḥārith al-Warrāq, al-Ṣaymarī.

The Names of a Group of Theologians

It has not been confirmed whether they belonged to the Mu'tazilah or the Murji'ah. They were:

Ḥumayd ibn Sa'id ibn Bakhtyār, the Theologian

Among his books there were:

Creation of the Qur'ān; Superiority (Al-Faḍl), about refuting the Mushabbihah; Denial of the Formation of Matter from God (al-Tajsīm 'an Allāh);²⁶² Refutation of Yūsha' Bakht, Maṭrān Fāris;²⁶³ Refutation of the Magians; Refutation of Adherents of the Dogma of Material Substances and Their Eternity (al-Ajram wa-Azaliyatuhā); Ḥirrat Ahl al-Falak;²⁶⁴ Proofs of Change in the Ḥadīth (Ithbāt al-Taḥrīf fī al-Ḥadīth); Correlation of the Sciences (Idāfat al-'Ulūm); against the ²⁵⁶ Cf. this list of names with Fück, ZDMG, New Ser., XV, No. 2 (1936), 307-8.

²⁵⁷ This was very likely Abū Zufar al-Hudhayl ibn al-Hudhayl.

²⁵⁸ This might also have been the scholar Abū Zufar Muḥammad ibn 'Alī al-Makkī.

²⁵⁹ Murtaḍā, p. 93, says that he was the imam of Nisābūr.

²⁶⁰ This was probably a converted Manichaean, so that the name must be kept separate from the one which precedes it and which refers to a scholar of Muslim ancestry named Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb al-Jubbā'ī.

²⁶¹ This name may indicate that Abū al-Qāsim al-Balkhī included his own name in this list of his. For other possibilities, see al-Balkhī in the Biog. Index.

²⁶² Cf. Baghdādī (Seelye), p. 158 top.

²⁶³ The words "Maṭrān Fāris" are not correctly written in the Tonk MS, but they evidently refer to the metropolitan bishop named Yusha' Bakht; see Fück, ZDMG, New Ser., XV, No. 2 (1936), 308, 313.

²⁶⁴ Ḥirrat may be a plural form for "rain clouds," or the word may be some other, such as hazzāt ("particular times" or "particular conditions"). Ahl al-falak almost certainly means "astronomers."

Christians, with reference to ease, food, and drink in the hereafter (fī al-na'im wa-al-akl wa-al-shurb fī al-ākhirah) and against all speaking in opposition to these things; The Theologians of the People of Islām (Mutakallimūn Ahl al-Islām); Answer of the Heretic of al-Baṣrah (Jawāb al-Mulhid al-Baṣrī), Who Cursed the People of the Sects and Sought Islām;²⁶⁶ How Some of the Muslims Made Innovations in the [Qur'ānic] Readings and Their Significations (Fimā Aḥdath Ba'd al-Muslimīn min al-Qirā'at wa-Wujūhiha).

Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Karīm

He was one of the theologians. Among his books there were:
The Created [the Qur'ān], against Burghūth; Knowledge (Al-Ma'rifah).

Abū 'Affān al-Raqqī

His name was 'Abd al-Rahmān ibn Muslim and he was one of the theologians. Among his books there were:

Against Burghūth, about the resemblances (al-musāwāh) between him and the heretics (al-mulhidūn); the questions which arose between him and al-Iskafī in the session of Ibn Abī Dā'ūd; Al-Tawallud, against al-Iskafī.

Al-Wāsiṭi²⁶⁶

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Zayd al-Wāsiṭi was one of the important and eminent theologians. He learned from Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'i, to whom he was related. In his prime he had a strong voice²⁶⁷ and many associates (pupils). It is said that he was one of the theologians of Baghdād, being counted among them, which is the truth, though he lived at al-Faṣil.²⁶⁸

²⁶⁶ Fück, ZDMG, New Ser., XV, No. 2 (1936), 298-321, omits this title.

²⁶⁷ Both the Tonk MS and MS 1934 have 'ālī, indicating that the voice was "exalted" or "strong."

²⁶⁸ See Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 431, l. 20, for a region near al-Rayy with this name. It may, however, refer to some now forgotten place near Baghdād.

He was one of the most lighthearted persons in God's world and so he composed a poem in which he lampooned Naṣṭuwayh, saying:

His intention is to see no man who is evil,
So let him refrain from seeing Naṣṭuwayh,
Whom Allāh burns with half his name
And causes the rest to be calling to him.²⁶⁹

A refreshing remark of his about Naṣṭuwayh was, "Whoever wishes to go the limit in ignorance, let him learn theology according to the school of al-Nāshī,²⁷⁰ law according to the code of Dā'ūd ibn 'Alī, and grammar according to the system of Naṣṭuwayh." Then he went on to say, "Naṣṭuwayh presents theology according to the school of al-Nāshī, law according to the code of Dā'ūd and he himself is Naṣṭuwayh, so accordingly he is the consummation of ignorance."

He died four years later than Abū 'Alī [al-Jubbā'i died], it is said in the year three hundred and six [A.D. 918/19]. Among his books there were:

Sublimity of the Qur'ān, about its order and composition; The Imamate, which was well done.

Among the Pupils (Aṣḥāb) of al-Wāsiṭi

Abū al-'Abbās . . .²⁷¹ Among his books there was *Refutation of the Book "Will Is an Attribute of Being."*²⁷²

Ibn al-Ikshīd

He was Abū Bakr Aḥmad ibn 'Alī ibn Ma'jūr al-Ikshād,²⁷³ one of the Mu'tazilah. He was honored, virtuous, and pious. He

²⁶⁹ The point of this poem is that naṣṭ is "naphtha," giving the idea of burning, while wayh signifies "come along."

²⁷⁰ The Flügel edition of Al-Fihrist, p. 172, n. 6, says that this was al-Nāshī al-Akhbar.

²⁷¹ Here there is a word inserted which is very likely confused with the word for "book" (kitāb) preceding the title at the end of the sentence.

²⁷² This was a book written by al-Najjār; the Flügel edition gives the title clearly.

²⁷³ Both forms of spelling, Ikshīd and Ikshād, are used in connection with the scholar mentioned here. Brockelmann, Islamic Peoples, p. 159, says that al-Ikshād was an honorary title. Tabarī, Annales, Part III, pp. 2184, 2190, 2193, 2196, says Ibn al-Ikshād was governor of Tarsus, A.D. 898-900.

owned an estate from which he derived his wealth, over half of its revenue going to learning and its scholars (people). He had a good literary style and was learned in Arabic and the law, writing a number of books about the law.

His house was by Sūq al-‘Aṭash, on a street known as Darb al-Ikhshād.²⁷⁴ Because of his love of learning and his piety, he used to say to his estate agent, “Don’t tell me anything about the property, so as to embitter my last breath, for it does not enrich me [for the hereafter]. Let me be, that I may devote myself to learning and the life hereafter.”

Abū Bakr died on Sunday, the eighth day before the end of Sha‘bān [the eighth Muslim month], during the year three hundred and twenty-six [A.D. 937/38]. Among his books there were:

Knowledge, about the sources, which he did not finish;²⁷⁵ The Beginner;²⁷⁶ Transcription of the Qur’ān; Consensus of Opinion (Al-Ijmā’); Refutation of al-Khālīdī, about al-irjā’; Abridgment of the “Commentary” of al-Ṭabarī.²⁷⁷

Al-Ḥuṣaynī

He was Abū al-Ḥusayn ‘Abd al-Wāhid ibn Muḥammad al-Ḥuṣaynī, one of the pupils (aṣḥāb) of Abū ‘Alī al-Jubbā’ī, from whom he learned. Among his books there were: ———.

Among the Pupils of Ibn al-Ikhshīd

Abū al-‘Alā’, Abū al-Ḥasan ‘Alī ibn ‘Īsā [al-Rummānī], Abū ‘Imrān ibn Rabāḥ, and Abū ‘Abd Allāh al-Ḥabashī.²⁷⁸

²⁷⁵ The Tonk MS has al-ma‘rifah (“knowledge”). Flügel gives al-ma‘ūnah (“assistance”).

²⁷⁶ In reference to grammar, this would be translated The Subject.

²⁷⁷ See Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, in the Bibliography.

²⁷⁸ This final name is taken from the Tonk MS; Flügel gives al-Ḥunashī.

The Names of the Theological Books Which Abū al-Ḥasan ‘Alī ibn ‘Īsā Composed²⁷⁹

He was al-Rummānī, and as this Abū al-Ḥasan has already been mentioned in the chapter on the grammarians and language students, we shall cite in this passage only the names of his books about theology. Among these there was the book ———.

Among the Mu‘tazilah about whom we know nothing except his being mentioned there was:

Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad ibn ‘Ayyāsh

He was a Mu‘tazilī. Among his books there was Refutation of the Book of Ibn Abī Bishr,²⁸⁰ about Elucidation of the Proof.

Al-Ḥasan ibn Ayyūb, One of the Theologians

Among his books there was a book addressed to his brother ‘Alī ibn Ayyūb—a refutation of the Christians, with an exposition of the corruption of their treatise (doctrine) and a confirmation of the prophecy.

Ibn Rabāḥ²⁸¹

Abū ‘Imrān Mūsā ibn Rabāḥ is a theologian of the school of thought of Abū ‘Alī al-Jubbā’ī. He studied under the direction of Abū Bakr Ibn al-Ikhshīd of al-Ṣaymarī and other theologians. It is said that he is living in our own time, in a city of Egypt, being over eighty years old. His birth was ——— and among his books there are: ———.

Ibn Shihāb

Abū al-Ṭayyib Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad ibn Shihāb learned from al-Balkhī and al-Khayyāt, as well as from others in addition to them. He died after three hundred and fifty [A.D. 961/62] of old age. His birth was ——— and among his books there was Sessions of the Legal Authorities and Their Controversies, nearly four hundred pages in length.

²⁷⁹ This was probably the Mu‘tazilī heretic ‘Alī ibn ‘Īsā Abū al-Ḥasan al-Rummānī. He should not be confused with the great vizier, ‘Alī ibn ‘Īsā Abū al-Ḥasan.

²⁸⁰ This was the name of the great theologian al-Ash‘arī, one of whose well-known books was Elucidation of the Proof (“Idāḥ al-Burhān”).

²⁸¹ After a break (see n. 274) MS 1934 resumes the text, beginning with Ibn Rabāḥ.

Ibn al-Khallāl al-Qāḍī (the Judge)

Abū 'Umar Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Ḥafṣ al-Khallāl came from al-Baṣrah, where he was born. He fell in with al-Ṣaymarī and Abū Bakr Ibn al-Ikhshīd, learning from them both. He was judge of the city of Ḥarrah, which is al-Ḥadīthah, later there being turned over to him the judgeship of Takrīt, where he is up to the present time.²⁸² Among his books there were:

Sources; Allegorical Interpretation.

Abū Hāshim and His Pupils

Abū Hāshim 'Abd al-Salām ibn Muḥammad al-Jubbā'ī arrived at the City of Peace [Baghdād] during the year three hundred and fourteen [A.D. 926/27]. He was intelligent, of good understanding and with penetrating discernment. He was also industrious and capable in theology, defending it. He died during the year three hundred and twenty-one [A.D. 933]. Among his books there were: The large compendium; the large book, Subjects (Abwāb); the small book, Subjects (Abwāb); the small compendium; Man; Compensation (Al-Ṭwaḍ) (or Accident [Al-'Arāḍ]); Military Questions; Refutation of Aristotle in connection with "De Generatione et Corruptione"; Al-Ṭabā'ī; Legal Interpretation.

Ibn Khallād al-Baṣrī

Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn ——— ibn Khallād was one of the pupils (aṣḥāb) of Abū Hāshim. Going to him at al-'Askar,²⁸³ he learned from him and became outstanding among his pupils.

Among Those Who Learned from Abū Hāshim, but Have No Books Which Are Known

A man known as Qashūr,²⁸⁴ whose name was Ibn Sahalwayh, surnamed Abū al-Qāsim, and 'Abd Allāh ibn Khaṭṭāb, known as "The Camel"²⁸⁵ of 'Ā'ishah."

²⁸² For al-Ḥadīthah and Takrīt, see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 861; II, 222; "Ḥadīthah," Enc. Islam, II, 194.

²⁸³ For several places with this name, see "al-'Askar," Enc. Islam, I, 488; Yāqūt, Geog., III, 675-77. The Flügel edition adds that he wrote a book entitled Sources (Al-Uṣūl).

²⁸⁴ Qashūr is a medicine and qushūr, another possibility, means "skins."

²⁸⁵ The Tonk and 1934 MSS have maḥmal or ḥaml. Ḥaml means "embryo in the womb." But jamal ("camel"), perhaps having some reference to the Battle of the Camel, seems the most likely word.

Al-Baṣrī, Known as al-Ju'al

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Husayn ibn 'Alī ——— ibn Ibrāhīm, known as al-Kāghidī,²⁸⁶ and was one of the people of al-Baṣrah, where he was born. His teacher was Abū al-Qāsim ibn Sahalwayh, nicknamed Qashūr. He belonged to the school of thought of Abū Hāshim, the leadership of whose associates (pupils) culminated with him during his lifetime. He was virtuous, a legal authority and a theologian, lofty in intelligence, exerting enlightened influence, and learned in his school of thought, disseminating mindfulness [of God] in the districts and cities, especially in Khurāsān.

He interpreted the law in accordance with the codes of al-'Irāq, studying under Abū al-Ḥasan al-Karkhī. In this connection we shall mention his books on theology, and later we shall list his books about the law in the chapter on the legal authorities, if Allāh so wills.

He also studied under Abū Ja'far al-Ṣaymarī al-'Abbādani,²⁸⁷ known as 'Sahak Lām."²⁸⁸ He was a pupil (associate) of Abū 'Alī ibn Khallād and studied under Abū Hāshim 'Abd al-Salām ibn Muḥammad. His birth was during the year three hundred and eight [A.D. 920/21] and he died in the City of Peace [Baghdād] in the year three hundred and sixty-nine [A.D. 979/80].²⁸⁹ Among his books there were:

Refutation of the Statement of [Ibn] al-Rāwandī that Substance Cannot Be Created from Nothing; also his rebuttal to the refutation of al-Rāzī, replying to the statement of al-*Balkhī*²⁹⁰—This was against al-Rāzī; Refutation of the Book of al-Rāzī, about [the idea that] it would be impossible (not fitting) for Almighty God to act after there was another agent of action; The Reply, concerning the two questions of the Shaykh Abū Muḥammad al-Rāmahurmuzī; statement [on the subject] that God Almighty exists and that there is nothing else besides Him, until He has created the created; The Faith; Confirmation; Knowledge (Al-Ma'rifah).

²⁸⁶ Al-kāghidī or al-kāghidhī is "the paper worker."

²⁸⁷ The Flügel version spells this name al-'Abbādātī, apparently an error.

²⁸⁸ The nickname "Sahak Lām" means "Strong Smell," given to him because he had a public latrine by his house; see Khallikān, III, 629.

²⁸⁹ Flügel gives an incorrect date; see Murtaḍā, pp. 105-6.

²⁹⁰ This was probably Abū al-Qāsim al-Balkhī.

The Second Section of the Fifth Chapter

of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed. This section includes accounts of the theologians of the Shī'ah, the Imāmīyah, and the Zaydiyyah.

Mention of the Reason Why the Shī'ah Are Called by This Name

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: When Ṭalḥah [ibn 'Ubayd Allāh] and al-Zubayr [ibn al-'Awwām] opposed 'Alī, for whom may there be peace,¹ rejecting the demand [for revenge] for the blood of 'Uthmān ibn 'Affān, 'Alī, for whom may there be peace, sought them out to fight them, that they might comply with the command of Allāh, may His name be glorified.² Those who followed him in this cause were called al-Shī'ah (the Partisans) and he ['Alī], for whom may there be peace, used to say "my partisans," calling them the Pure (al-Aṣfiyā) Company, the Masters (al-Awliyā) Company, the Guard of the Five (Shurṭat al-Khamīs) Company, the Companions (al-Aṣḥāb) Company.

The meaning of Shurṭat al-Khamīs was that 'Alī, for whom may there be peace, said to his band: "Prove yourselves, for I guarantee for you Heaven. I do not offer you as a condition gold or silver, for a prophet among the prophets once said to his companions, 'Prove yourselves; I do not guarantee for you anything except Heaven.'"³

'Alī ibn Ismā'il ibn Mitham al-Tammār⁴

The first member of the Imāmāh school of thought to speak about theology was 'Alī ibn Ismā'il ibn Mitham al-Tammār. Mitham was one of the important associates of 'Alī, for whom may there be peace. Among the books of 'Alī there were:

The Imamate; What Is Due.

Hishām ibn al-Ḥakam

He was Abū Muḥammad Hishām ibn al-Ḥakam, a protégé of the Banū Shaybān⁵ from al-Kūfah. Going from al-Kūfah to Baghdād he became one of the companions of Ja'far ibn Muḥammad, for whom may there be peace.⁶

He was one of the theologians of the Shī'ah who caused discord over the theology of the imamate, disrupting the doctrine and opinion.⁷ He was keen in the science of theology and quick with repartee. Once Hishām was questioned about Mu'āwiyah: "Did he witness [the Battle of] Badr?" He replied, "Yes, on the other side."

He was attached to Yahyā ibn Khālid of the Barmak family. He was his deputy, speaking and appearing at the [palace] audiences. He lived in the Karkh [Quarter] of the City of Peace [Baghdād],⁸ and died some time of unknown interval after the tragedy of the Barmak family, it is said during the caliphate of al-Ma'mūn. Among his books there were:

The Imamate; Guides to the Emergence of Phenomena; Refutation of the Zanādiqah; Refutation of Upholders of Dualism; Oneness; Refutation of Hishām al-Jawaliqī; Refutation of Those Who Uphold

³ "Prove" and "guarantee" are free translations of forms of sharafa, which implies imposing a condition. For al-khamīs, see Glossary. For the paragraph, see Qur'ān 47:18(20).

⁴ This means "date vendor." The name is misspelled in the Flügel text.

⁵ For this tribe, see Hitti, Arabs, pp. 149, 155.

⁶ The Flügel edition has, "may Allāh be well pleased with him." This was al-Ṣādiq, the 6th Shī'ī imam. As he died when Hishām was about twenty, it may be more correct to say "pupils" instead of "companions."

⁷ He formed his own sect; see al-Hishāmīyah in the Glossary.

⁸ The Karkh Quarter was on the left bank of the Tigris at Baghdād; see Le Strange, Baghdad, pp. 63, 320.

the Forms (Natures); The Old Man and the Young Man (The Shaykh and the Youth); Management (Freeing the Slaves after the Master's Death); The Scales (Al-Mizān);⁹ The Field (Al-Maydān); Refutation of Anyone Who Speaks about the Imamate of the More Excellent;¹⁰ Disagreement of the People about the Imamate.

The Will¹¹ and a Refutation of Whoever Denies It; about compulsion and predestination (al-jabr wa-al-qadar); The Two Arbiters;¹² Refutation of the Mu'tazilah in Connection with Talḥah and al-Zubayr;¹³ Predestination; Pronunciations (Dialects); Knowledge (Al-Ma'rifah); Al-Istiṭā'ah; The Eight Abwāb;¹⁴ against Shayṭān al-Ṭāq; Historical Traditions, How They Are Verified;¹⁵ against Aristotle, about oneness (al-tawḥīd);¹⁶ another book about the Mu'tazilah.

Shayṭān al-Ṭāq

He was Abū Ja'far al-Aḥwal, whose name was Muḥammad ibn al-Nu'mān, nicknamed Shayṭān al-Ṭāq, but called by the Shī'ah Mu'min al-Ṭāq. He was a friend of Abū 'Abd Allāh Ja'far ibn Muḥammad,¹⁷ for whom may there be peace. He was an acute theologian, among whose books there were:

The Imamate; Knowledge (Al-Ma'rifah); Refutation of the Mu'tazilah, about the imamate of the more excellent; The Affair of Talḥah, al-Zubayr, and 'Ā'ishah.¹⁸

⁹ These were the scales used to weigh souls on the Day of Judgment. See Qur'ān 42:17; 55:7-9.

¹⁰ The word translated "more excellent" is mafdūl. Although it usually means "surpassed," it can also mean "surpassing" or "more excellent." As al-Nadīm was a Shī'i, he evidently approved of speaking of the Shī'i imams in the latter way.

¹¹ See Glossary.

¹² These were Abū Mūsā al-Ash'arī and 'Amr ibn al-'Aṣ, chosen to arbitrate the quarrel between 'Alī and Mu'āwiyah; see Mas'ūdī, IV, 391; Hitti, Arabs, p. 181.

¹³ As these two Companions of the Prophet opposed 'Alī, they were greatly disliked by the Shī'ah.

¹⁴ This probably refers to the first eight Shī'i imams; see Hitti, Arabs, p. 442.

¹⁵ Flügel gives another word, but "verified" is in the Tonk and 1934 MSS.

¹⁶ The Muslims believed in the oneness of the universe, refuting Aristotle's tenet of the eternity of both the material and spiritual worlds.

¹⁷ The 6th Shī'i imam, known as al-Ṣādiq.

¹⁸ This was the Battle of the Camel; see Glossary. In the Flügel edition the pious phrase "may Allāh be well pleased with them" has been added by some Sunnite scribe. The 1934 MS evidently omits this epithet, as al-Nadīm was a Shī'i, who never would have invoked God's blessing for the opponents of 'Alī. These titles should be compared with the passage in Tūsī, p. 323, sect. 698.

Al-Sikāl

He was a pupil of Hishām ibn al-Ḥakam. His name was Muḥammad ibn Khalīl¹⁹ and he was a theologian, one of the pupils of Hishām ibn al-Ḥakam, with whom he disagreed except in connection with the origin of the imamate. Among his books there were: Knowledge (Al-Ma'rifah); Al-Istiṭā'ah; The Imamate; against whoever denies the necessity of [confirming the right to] the imamate with a [Qur'ānic] text.²⁰

Ibn Qibbah

He was Abū Ja'far ibn Muḥammad ibn Qibbah, one of the theologians and clever scholars of the Shī'ah, among whose books there were:

Adjusting Equitably (Al-Inṣāf), about the imamate; The Imamate.

*Abū Sahl al-Nawbakhtī*²¹

Abū Sahl Ismā'īl ibn 'Alī ibn Nawbakht was one of the great men of the Shī'ah. Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Nāshī said that he was his teacher. He was a virtuous and learned theologian, who presided over a session (class) for a group of theologians. He had an idea about the *qā'im*²² of the family of Muḥammad which no one had before him.²³ This was what he used to say: "I tell you that the [rightful] imam was Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan²⁴ and that, although he died in concealment, there has arisen in the cause²⁵ during the ¹⁹ The translation follows the Tonk and 1934 MSS for the spelling of this name. Flügel and Shahrastānī (Haarbrücker), Part 1, p. 219, give al-Shikāl. Tūsī, p. 292, sect. 634, has a garbled form. Al-sikāl is one who inquires, and al-shikāl means "hobble" or "deceit." Two other possibilities are al-shakāl ("jackal") and al-sakāl ("nightingale").

²⁰ For the final title, one must bear in mind the fact that the Shī'ah used verses of the Qur'ān to prove the right of 'Alī to be the caliph.

²¹ For another spelling of the name, see references in Biog. Index.

²² This refers to the lawful caliph of Islām, believed by the Shī'ah to be a lineal descendant of the Prophet.

²³ This is probably the meaning, although the Arabic idiom could be translated "which he did not adopt hastily."

²⁵ For this phrase the translation follows the Tonk MS, which is clearer than the other versions.

concealment his son, and so it will be with his son's issue, until God consummates his dominion by causing him to appear."

Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn 'Alī al-Shalmaghānī, known as Ibn Abī al-'Azāqir, sent to him to summon him to opposition, offering him the miraculous and visions of the supernatural. On the forehead of Abū Sahl there was a bare spot like baldness, so he said to the messenger: "I know of only one miracle, which is that your master should make hair to grow on my forehead; then I can believe in him." After that the messenger did not return to him.²⁶ Abū Sahl died ———. Among his books there were:²⁷

The Fulfillment, about the imamate; Warning (Prophecy), about the imamate; Refutation of the Ghulāt; Refutation of al-Ṭāṭarī, concerning the imamate; Refutation of 'Īsā ibn Abān, about legal interpretation;²⁸ Refutation of the Epistle of al-Shāfi'i; Ideas; Sessions;²⁹ Knowledge; Confirmation of the Epistle (Confirmation of the Prophetic Mission); Refutation of Those Upholding the Attributes; Emergence of the World;³⁰ Refutation of Whoever Speaks of the Created [the Qur'ān]; The Word, about man;³¹ The Vanity of Analogy;³² Narrative and What Is Told; Refutation of the Book, "Arousing Wisdom" (Ba'th al-Ḥikmah), against [Ibn] al-Rāwandī; Refutation of "The Crown" (Al-Ṭāj), against [Ibn] al-Rāwandī—it is known as Kitāb al-Shibk;³³

²⁶ The Tonk MS has "He returned to his master, but did not come back to him," that is, to Abū Sahl.

²⁷ Compare with the titles in Ṭūsī, pp. 57–58.

²⁸ Both MS 1934 and the Flügel edition have al-libās ("clothing"), but Ṭūsī cited above is almost certainly correct in giving al-ijtihād ("legal interpretation"); this form is used in the translation.

²⁹ Al-Ṭūsī, pp. 57–58, adds two extra titles: His Sessions with al-Jubbā'i and Sessions with Thābit ibn Qurrah.

³¹ Flügel and MS 1934 have al-insān ("man"), whereas al-Ṭūsī, p. 58, has al-ansāb ("idols").

³³ Al-Ṭūsī, p. 58, makes the form of this title clear. The Book of the Crown ("Kitāb al-Ṭāj") was about the world and eternity. Kitāb al-Shibk means "The Book of the Whirl" or "The Book of Entanglement," evidently referring to the constellations. Flügel gives Kitāb al-Sabak, al-sabak being a word used for the melting of metals.

Refutation of Legal Interpretation by Personal Opinion, against [Ibn] al-Rāwandī; Attributes.

Abū Sahl [al-Nawbakhtī] Had a Brother Surnamed Abū Ja'far

He was a theologian of his [al-Nawbakhtī's] doctrine. Among his books there were: ———.

Al-Ḥasan ibn Mūsā al-Nawbakhtī

He was Abū Muḥammad al-Ḥasan ibn Mūsā, the son of the sister of Abū Sahl ibn Nawbakht, a theologian and philosopher. A group of translators of books about philosophy, such as Abū 'Uthmān al-Dimashqī, Ishāq [ibn Hunayn], Thābit [ibn Qurrah], and others besides them, used to meet with him. Although the Mu'tazilah claimed him, the Shī'ah also claimed him and he inclined towards the Shī'ah, for the family of Nawbakht was openly known to support the rule of 'Alī and his descendants, for whom be peace. Accordingly, we mention him in this place.

The collection of books which he transcribed in his own handwriting was very large. He also wrote compositions and made compilations about theology, philosophy, and other subjects. He died ———. Among his books there were:³⁴

Doctrines and Religions, which he did not finish; Refutation of Upholders of Transmigration (al-Tanāsukh);³⁵ Oneness and the Beginning of Causes; Refutation of the Book of Abū 'Īsā about the Unusual Eastern;³⁶ Abridgment of Aristotle's "De Generatione et Corruptione"; Proof by 'Umar ibn 'Abbād and a Defense of His Doctrines;³⁷ The Imamate, which he did not finish.

Al-Susanjirdī

He was one of the young men (pupils) of Abū Sahl al-Nawbakhtī. His name was Muḥammad ibn Bishr. He was surnamed Abū al-Ḥusayn and known as al-Ḥamdūnī, because he was related to the Ḥamdūn family.³⁸ Among his books there was Achievement, about the imamate.

³⁴ Cf. Ṭūsī, p. 98, sect. 208.

³⁵ See "Tanāsukh," Enc. Islam, IV, 648.

³⁶ This was Al-Gharīb al-Mashraqī fī al-Nawḥ by Abū 'Īsā al-Warrāq.

³⁷ It is not clear whether "proof" is the title of a book by 'Umar ibn 'Abbād, or whether it refers to proving something to him.

³⁸ See Khallikān, III, 90–92; Ṭabarī, Annales, Part III, p. 1314 ff.

Among the Eminent:³⁹

Al-Ṭāṭarī

He was a Shī'ī whose name was ———. He was converted to the Shī'ī sect. Among his books there was The Imamate.⁴⁰

Ḥishām [ibn Sālim] al-Jawālīqī⁴¹

Abū Mālik al-Ḥaḍramī

Ibn Mumlak al-Iṣbahānī

Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn Mumlak al-Iṣbahānī was a theologian of the Shī'ah. He held a session (class) with Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'ī dealing with the imamate and its clarification which Abū Muḥammad al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad al-Karkhī attended.⁴² [His books:]

The Imamate; Refutation of the Imamate, against Abū 'Alī [al-Jubbā'ī], which he did not finish.

Abū al-Jaysh ibn al-Khurāsānī

His name was al-Muẓaffar and among his books there were:

He was ———.

Al-Nāshī al-Saghīr

He was Abū al-Ḥusayn 'Alī ibn Waṣīf. He was an excellent poet, dealing with the Ahl al-Bayt [members of the Prophet's family], for whom may there be peace. He was a distinguished theologian, among whose books there were: ———.

³⁹ The Arabic is al-qudamā', which often means "the ancients," but here probably means "the eminent," as the men cited were of the tenth century.

⁴⁰ The Imamate is followed by a word which appears to be ḥasan ("good") which may mean it was a good book, or may be part of a name or phrase which is missing.

⁴¹ The translation follows MS 1934.

⁴² This may have been a session for discussion and debate, or a class.

Ibn al-Mu'allim

He is Abū 'Abd Allāh,⁴³ who is living in our own time and with whom culminates the leadership of the Shī'ī theologians. He is preeminent in the science of theology, according to the doctrine of his associates, subtle in intelligence and quick-witted. I have recently seen him. I met him and found him to be distinguished.⁴⁴ Among his books there are: ———.

The Zaydiyyah⁴⁵

The Zaydiyyah, who claim the imamate for Zayd ibn 'Alī, for whom may there be peace, and then after him support the imamate of anyone of the living descendants of Fāṭimah who meets the conditions of the imamate. Most of the traditionalists of this doctrine, such as Sufyān ibn 'Uyaynah, Sufyān [ibn Sa'id] al-Thawrī, and Ṣāliḥ ibn Ḥayy, together with his sons, and others, too, with accounts of these men. Then with the topics with which I deal, there will be statements about their learning and religion, if Allāh so wills.

Abū al-Jārūd

Among the scholars of the Zaydiyyah there was Abū al-Jārūd, surnamed Abū al-Najm, who was Ziyād ibn al-Mundhīr al-'Abdī.⁴⁶ It is related that when Ja'far ibn Muḥammad, for whom may there be peace, was asked about him, he said, "What has Abū al-Jārūd done? Did he hope that after he had chosen an imam he would not die except in appearance?" Then he said, "May Allāh curse him, for he is blind in heart and blind in vision."⁴⁷

⁴³ The Tonk MS calls him Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn al-Nu'mān, but for the proper rendering of his name, see the Biog. Index.

⁴⁴ The Tonk MS adds a number of words which are not in the other Arabic versions, but which have been included in this translation.

⁴⁵ The phrases in this paragraph seem to serve as an introduction to the material which follows.

⁴⁶ For al-'Abdī, see "'Abd al-Kais," Enc. Islam, I, 45 bottom. The Tonk MS gives a different name.

⁴⁷ Flügel adds "ibn 'Alī" to this name. This was the sixth Shī'ī imam. Ja'far of course believed that his father was the true fifth imam and heir to the caliphate, rather than his uncle Zayd, whom the Zaydiyyah, among them Abū al-Jārūd, upheld; see Hitti, Arabs, p. 442. Ja'far was probably making fun of Abū al-Jārūd, saying that he hoped Zayd would not die, but would hide and reappear.

Muḥammad ibn Sinān said about him, "Abū al-Jārūd did not die until he had drunk intoxicants and designated authority to unbelievers."

Among the Theologians of the Zaydiyyah

Fuḍayl al-Risān, who was ibn al-Zubayr, and was an associate of Muḥammad ibn 'Alī;⁴⁸ Abū Khālīd al-Wasīṭī; Manṣūr [ibn Ḥāzim] ibn Abī al-Aswad.

Al-Ḥasan ibn Ṣāliḥ ibn Ḥayy

Al-Ḥasan ibn Ṣāliḥ ibn Ḥayy was born during the year one hundred [A.D. 718/19] and died in concealment during the year one hundred and sixty-eight [A.D. 784/85]. He was one of the important, great, and learned men of the Zaydiyyah branch of the Shī'ah, an authority for the law and a theologian. Among his books there were:

Oneness; The Imamate of the Descendants of 'Alī by Fāṭimah; The Compilation, about the law.

Al-Ḥasan had two brothers, one of whom was 'Alī ibn Ṣāliḥ and the other Ṣāliḥ ibn Ṣāliḥ. They belonged to the school of thought of al-Ḥasan, their brother, 'Alī also being a theologian.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: Most of the scholars among the authorities on the Ḥadīth⁴⁹ belonged to the Zaydiyyah, as did also a group of jurists and traditionalists such as Sufyān ibn 'Uyaynah, Sufyān ibn al-Thawrī, and leading authorities on the Ḥadīth.

Muqātil ibn Sulaymān

He was one of the Zaydiyyah, and also an authority on the Ḥadīth and a [Qur'ānic] reader. He died ———. Among his books there were:

⁴⁸ For the person most likely referred to by this name, see Biog. Index, al-Bāqir Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn 'Alī.

The large commentary, which was quoted; The Abrogating and the Abrogated; a commentary about the five hundred verses; [Qur'ānic] Readings; Allegorical Interpretation of the Qur'ān; Rare Forms of Commentary; Appearance and the Similar (High Rank and Headmen); Answers, about the Qur'ān; Refutation of the Qadariyah; Divisions and Languages; Putting Before and Behind; Verses and Allegorical Interpretations.

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Third Section of the Fifth Chapter

*of the book Al-Fihrist with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed, including accounts of the theologians of the Mujbirah and the Nābitah al-Ḥashwīyah, with the names of their books.*¹

Al-Najjār

Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥusayn ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Najjār was a weaver in the factory of al-'Abbās ibn Muḥammad al-Ḥāshimī and a leader among the Mujbirah and their theologians. It was said that he used to make weights, being one of the people of Bamm,² and that when he spoke his voice was like the sound of a bat. He was one of the people with discernment,³ and he held meetings and arguments with al-Nazzām.

The death of al-Ḥusayn al-Najjār came about because he met Ibrāhīm al-Nazzām at the house of some of his intimates (brothers).⁴ After al-Ḥusayn had greeted him, Ibrāhīm said to him, "Sit down so

² Bamm was a Persian city known for its weaving; see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 737. MS 1934 spells the name incorrectly. The weights which al-Najjār made were probably used for holding the threads taut in weaving.

³ "People with discernment" is in Arabic ahl al-nāẓirīn; see "Naẓar," Enc. Islam, III, 888.

⁴ To understand the dialogue which follows, it is necessary to know something about one of the doctrines held by al-Najjār. He stated that God creates the actions of mankind, both good and bad. Then a man himself can carry out such of these created acts as he chooses. In other words, God creates the actions of a man, but the man himself can appropriate the divine will, so as to perform that which God has created. In this passage the word for "creation" is khalq, and for "carry out" or "perform," fa'al. The passage has been translated freely.

that I may speak to you." Upon his sitting down Ibrāhīm said to him, "Is it fitting for you to perform the creation of Allāh?" Al-Ḥusayn replied, "It is fitting for me to carry out that [act] which is the creation of Allāh."

Then Ibrāhīm said, "That [act] which is the creation of Allāh, is it Allāh's creation, or something not created by him?" Al-Ḥusayn said, "It is the creation of Allāh." Ibrāhīm continued, "You have carried out the [act] created by Allāh. Then why is it wrong for you to create what Allāh creates, when it is right to carry out what Allāh creates?"

Al-Ḥusayn said, "I do not perform the [process of] creation of Allāh, but I carry out that [act] which has been created by Allāh." Ibrāhīm said, "That which is the creation of Allāh, is it Allāh's creation, or is it not a creation of his?" Al-Ḥusayn replied, "It is the creation of Allāh." Then Ibrāhīm kicked him saying, "Get up. Allāh confound anyone connecting you with any knowledge or understanding." He went out feverish, which was the cause of the illness from which he died.

Among his books there were:

Al-Istiṭā'ah;⁵ It Was, It Is; The Created [the Qur'ān]; The Attributes and Names [of God]; Confirmation of the Apostles; Considering Lawful and Permitting; Will Is an Attribute of Being;⁶ Al-Ḥijā'; Forms (Acts) of Worship; Desire of Importance [in connection with future reward and punishment]; Judgment and Predestination (Al-Qaḍā' wa-al-Qadar); Allegorical Interpretations; Al-Mustaṭī'ah,⁷ against Ibrāhīm; The Summary; Causes (Defects), about al-istiṭā'ah; Demands; Witticisms; The Substitute; Refutation of the Heretics; The Turk (Abandoning); Kindness and Strengthening (Assisting); Reward and Punishment;⁸ Abwāb;⁹ Knowledge, about consensus of opinion.

⁵ See Glossary for this doctrine which was upheld by al-Najjār.

⁶ For previous mention of this title, see translation, Chap. V, sect. 1, n. 272.

⁷ Probably meaning the voluntary appropriation by man of an act created by God, or the action so appropriated; istiṭā'ah (see Glossary) is the doctrine which claims this ability for man.

⁸ MS 1934 leaves a space between these three last titles and the title which precedes them.

⁹ Abwāb means "doors." It is used for sections of the Qur'ān, but here very likely signifies the Shī'ī imams.

Hafṣ al-Fard

Hafṣ al-Fard was one of the Mujbirah, in fact one of their greatest scholars, equal to al-Najjār. He was surnamed Abū ‘Amr, and was one of the people of Egypt who went to al-Baṣrah, where he heard [the lectures of] and met with Abū al-Hudhayl, becoming his equal. Then Abū al-Hudhayl broke with him.

At first he was a Mu‘tazilī, and later he subscribed to [the doctrine of] the creation of actions.¹⁰ He was nicknamed Abū Yaḥyā. There were among his books, according to [what is written in] the handwriting of the nephew [son of the brother] of al-Iskāfī, the protégé of the Banū Jusham.¹¹

Al-Istiṭā‘ah; Oneness; The Created [the Qur’ān], against Abū al-Hudhayl; Refutation of the Christians; Refutation of the Mu‘tazilah; Abwāb, about the created [the Qur’ān].

Theologians of the Mujbirah of Whom No Book Is Known

Sābālān, Nusayān, Rakān, Al-Ḥusayn ibn Kūrān, all of whom were protégés. Also Abu al-Ḥasan al-Samarī and Ibn Waki‘ al-Bunānī.¹²

Ibn Kullāb

He was ‘Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Kullāb, the cotton worker (al-qatṭān), one of the Nābitah al-Ḥashwīyah. He had controversies with ‘Abbād ibn Sulaymān and stated that the word (kalām) of Allāh was Allāh, so that ‘Abbād used to say that because of this statement he was a Christian.

Abū al-‘Abbās al-Baghawī related:

We visited Pethiōn,¹³ the Christian, who was in Dār al-Rūm on the West Side [of Baghdād]. The conversation flowed on until I asked him about Ibn Kullāb. Then he said, “God be merciful to ‘Abd Allāh. While he ¹⁰ Cf. istiṭā‘ah, Glossary.

¹¹ For this tribe, see Qutaybah, Ma‘ārif, p. 46. The man named al-Iskāfī may be one of the men of that name listed in the Biog. Index.

¹² These are unimportant scholars who have not been identified in any source except Al-Fihrist. The first four were evidently non-Arabs.

¹³ The interpretation of this name is a guess and may not be accurate. Cf. Arabic form given in the Flügel edition, p. 244, l. 9. Dār al-Rūm was a Christian quarter in Baghdād.

was sitting beside me in this cloister, he pointed in the direction of the church and learned this saying from me.¹⁴ If he had lived we would have overcome the Muslims.”

Al-Baghawī went on to say, “Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Ṭālaqānī asked him, ‘What have you to say about the Christ (al-Masīḥ)?’ He replied, ‘What the Sunnites (Ahl al-Sunnah) among the Muslims say about the Qur’ān.’”

Among the books of ‘Abd Allāh there were:

Attributes; Creation of Actions;¹⁵ Refutation of the Mu‘tazilah.

Among the Kullābīyah [Followers of Ibn Kullāb]

Abū Muḥammad, a judge of the Sunnites, among whose books there was The Sunnah and the Jamā‘ah.

Al-‘Aṭawī

His name was Muḥammad ibn ‘Aṭīyah, also said to be Muḥammad ibn ‘Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Abī ‘Aṭīyah. He was made a protégé of the Banū Layth ibn Bakr ibn ‘Abd Manāh ibn Kinānah.¹⁶ He was one of the keen theologians, and was surnamed Abū ‘Abd al-Raḥmān. Although he belonged to the school of thought of al-Ḥusayn al-Najjār, he differed with him concerning the ordinances.

He was also a poet, gifted by nature. He was from al-Baṣrah, but moved first to the City of Peace [Baghdād] and then from there to Sāmarrā. Among his books there were:

Creation of Actions;¹⁷ Perceptions (Consequences of Actions).

Salām al-Qārī

He was surnamed Abū al-Mundhir, but the Ahl al-‘Adl¹⁸ nicknamed him Abū al-Mudabbir. When his slave boy abducted his concubine, he said to him, “What’s this! Woe to you!” Then he

¹⁴ The saying was probably, “The word of Allāh is Allāh.”

¹⁵ This probably refers to the belief held by al-Najjār and other heretics that God creates the actions for man to appropriate; see istiṭā‘ah, Glossary.

¹⁶ For this tribe, see Qutaybah, Ma‘ārif, p. 32 middle; Durayd, Geneal., p. 105.

¹⁷ See n. 15.

¹⁸ For this subject and its relations with the Mujbirah, see Khayyāt, Intiṣār, (Nyberg), main text, pp. 24–25, 126.

[the slave] replied, "It was thus that Allāh foreordained." So he [Salām] exclaimed, "Thou art free because of thine knowledge of judgment and predestination (al-qaḍā' wa-al-qadar)," and he married him to the concubine. Among his books there were: ———.

'Abd Allāh ibn Dā'ūd

He was one of the Mujbirah. As he was passing by a group of his friends, who happened to know where he was going, they said, "Have you made matters right between so-and-so and so-and-so?" He replied, "We've managed it so that Allāh has not been corrupt, may Allāh be exalted for that."¹⁹ Among his books there was Judgment and Predestination (Al-Qaḍā' wa-al-Qadar).²⁰

Al-Karābīsī

He was Abū 'Alī al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Alī ibn Yazīd al-Muhallabī al-Karābīsī, one of the Mujbirah, learned in the Ḥadīth and the law. I mention him here as he was more inclined to the *ijbār*²¹ than to other [doctrines]. When he died there were among his books:

The Untrustworthy in Connection with the Ḥadīth; The Imamate, in which he showed malice towards 'Alī, for whom may there be peace.

Among His Young Men

Fustuqah, whose name was Muḥammad ibn 'Alī; Ibn Nājiyah; and Shamkhshah. Fustuqah wrote The Strange in the Ḥadīth and Verification of the Traditions, which he did not finish; it was lengthy.

Ibn Abī Bishr [al-Ash'arī]²²

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Ismā'il ibn Abī Bishr al-Ash'arī, from among the people of al-Baṣrah. At first he was a Mu'tazilī, but later he repented of subscribing to justice (al-'adl) and creation

¹⁹ It would have been a corrupt event, if God had foreordained that two friends should quarrel with one another.

²⁰ This title is given only in the Tonk MS.

²¹ This probably refers to the doctrine of the Mujbirah.

of the Qur'ān.²³ When he was in the congregational mosque of al-Baṣrah on a Friday, he arose from his chair²⁴ calling out at the top of his lungs:

Whoever has known me has known me and whoever has not known me, to him I make myself known. I am so-in-so, the son of so-in-so, who used to proclaim the creation of the Qur'ān and that Allāh will not be seen through the eyesight [of men] and that if I do wrong things, it is I who do them. Behold, I am repenting, uprooted, committed to refuting the Mu'tazilah, casting off their disgraces and shameful errors.

About him there was a great deal of jesting and joking. Ibn Abī Bishr died ———. Among his books there were:

Flashes (Al-Lumma'); The Abridgment; Elucidation of the Proof; Explanation, concerning theology (uṣūl al-dīn);²⁵ Exposition and Analysis Refuting the People of Deceit and Error.

Among His Associates

Al-Dimnānī and Hammawayh, both of whom were from among the people of Sīrāf.²⁶ He [al-Ash'arī] sought their help in connection with reproaches and defamation. Both of them were learned in accordance with his doctrine, but no book of theirs is known.

One of the Mujbirah

Al-Kūshānī, whose name was ———, had discussions with al-Ṣāliḥī. He wrote a number of books which were in accord with the doctrines of his associates, and among which there were:

Creation of Actions;²⁷ The Vision.²⁸

²³ See Glossary, Mu'tazilah.

²⁴ This very likely refers to the top step of a pulpit on which the leader sat when conducting the Friday service, but it might also refer to the chair which a professor used when he lectured or taught his class.

²⁵ Compare this title with Al-Ibānah 'an Uṣūl al-Diyānah ("Explanation from the Sources of Religion"), the usual form of the title, in the Bibliography.

²⁶ An important city of southern Persia; see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 211.

²⁷ See n. 15. Instead of af'al ("actions"), Flügel has aflāk ("celestial spheres").

²⁸ This refers to the question of whether or not a believer might have a vision of God in Paradise by means of his own eyesight. See Ash'arī, Theology of al-Ash'arī, Chap. IV.

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Fourth Section of the Fifth Chapter

*of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed. It includes accounts of the theologians of the Khawārij, with the names of their books.*¹

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: Although the leaders of this group [the Khawārij] were numerous, not all of them composed books. Furthermore, we may not have received information about some of them who, though not known to have written books, did actually write them, for their books were concealed and guarded.

Among Their Theologians: Al-Yamān ibn Ribāb

He was one of the leaders and chiefs of the Khawārij. He started as one of the Tha'ālibah, but later changed to the doctrines of the Bayhasīyah.² He was a debator, a theologian, and a writer of books, among which there were:

The Created [the Qur'ān]; Oneness; Judgments of the Believers; against the Mu'tazilah, about predestination; Discourses; Proofs of the Imamate of Abū Bakr; Refutation of the Murji'ah; against the Mu'tazilah, about predestination; Refutation of Hammād ibn Abī Hanīfah.

Yahyā ibn Kāmil

Abū 'Alī Yahyā ibn Kāmil ibn Tulayḥah al-Jahḍarī³ was at first an associate of Bishr al-Marrīsī and one of the Murji'ah. Then he changed over to the doctrine of the Ibādīyah. Among his books there were:

² For these sects see the Glossary.

³ This word is not clearly written in the Tonk and 1934 MSS, but evidently comes from the Jahḍar Tribe; see Durayd, Geneal., p. 213.

The questions transmitted from him to Ja'far ibn Ḥarb, entitled The Magnificent (Al-Jalīlah); The Created [the Qur'ān]; Oneness, a refutation of the Ghulāt and the sects of the Shi'ah.

Al-Ṣayrafi

He was Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn Ḥarb, one of the theologians of the Khawārij and a Hilālī from the Banū Hilāl.⁴ Among his books there were: ———.

'Abd Allāh ibn Yazīd al-Ibādī

He was one of the greatest of the Khawārij and one of their theologians. Among his books there were:

Oneness; against the Mu'tazilah; Al-Istiṭā'ah; Refutation of the Rāfiḍah.

Ḥafṣ ibn Ashaym

He was one of the Khawārij, among whose books there was Schisms and Their Refutation, quoted from Jubayr ibn Ghālib.

Among Their Men Who Were Dialectic Metaphysicians

Ṣāliḥ, Dā'ūd, and Ziyād al-A'ṣam. They wrote controversial epistles, but no book of theirs is known.

Among the Leaders of the Ibādīyah Who Did Write Books

Ibrāhīm ibn Ishāq al-Ibādī, among whose books there were:

Refutation of the Qadarīyah; The Imamate.

Ṣāliḥ al-Nāji

He was one of the important men of the Banū Nājiyah.⁵ Among his books there were:

Oneness; Refutation of Those Who Disagree.

⁴ See Khallikān, I, 241, for this tribe.

⁵ For this tribe, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 146 bottom; Qutaybah, Ma'arīf, p. 55.

Al-Haytham ibn al-Haytham

He was also a Nāji from the Banū Nājiyah.⁶ Among his books there were:

The Imamate; Refutation of the Heretics.

Khaṭṭāb ibn ———

Among his books there were: ———.

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Fifth Section of the Fifth Chapter

of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed. It includes accounts of the pilgrims, the ascetics, the devotees, and the Ṣūfis who were theologians by means of mental seizures and hallucinations.¹

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I have read written in the handwriting of Abū Muḥammad Ja'far al-Khuldī, who was one of the leaders of the persons who became Ṣūfis, a pious man and an ascetic, and I have also heard him relate this same statement, the one I read written in his handwriting, and which was as follows:

I took [the following list of ascetics] from al-Junayd Abū al-Qāsim ibn Muḥammad, who said to me, "I took it from Abū al-Ḥasan al-Sarī ibn al-Mughallis al-Saqāṭī, and al-Sarī from Ma'rūf al-Karkhī, Ma'rūf al-Karkhī having taken it from Farqad al-Sanjī, and Farqad in turn from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī. Al-Ḥasan took it from Anas ibn Mālīk. Al-Ḥasan, furthermore, met with seventy of the men who fought at the Battle of Badr."

The Names of the Devotees, Ascetics, and Ṣūfis, as Listed in the Handwriting of Ja'far ibn Nuṣayr al-Khuldī²

Al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, already mentioned; Muḥammad ibn Sīrīn; Harīm ibn Ḥayyān; 'Alqamah al-Aswad; Ibrāhīm [ibn Yazīd] al-Nakhā'i; al-Sha'bi; Mālik ibn Dīnār; Muḥammad ibn Wāsi'; 'Aṭā al-Sulamī; Mālik ibn Anas; Sufyān al-Thawrī, mention of whom will follow; al-Awzā'i, mention of whom will follow; Thābit al-Bunānī; Ibrāhīm al-Taymī; Sulaymān al-Taymī, already mentioned; Farqad al-Sabakhī; Ibn al-Sammāk; 'Utbah [ibn Sallām] al-Ghulām; Ṣāliḥ al-Murrī, who was a villager; Ibrāhīm ibn Adham; 'Abd al-Wāḥid ibn Zayd; Ibn al-Munkadīr; Muḥammad ibn Ḥabīb al-Fārisī; al-Rabī' ibn Khuthaym; Abū Mu'āwiyah al-Aswad; Ayyūb al-Sakhtiyānī; Yūsuf ibn Asbāṭ; Abū Sulaymān al-Darānī; Ibn Abī al-Ḥawārī; Dā'ūd al-Ṭā'i; Faṭḥ al-Mawṣilī; Shaybān al-Rā'i; al-Mu'āfā' ibn 'Imrān; al-Fuḍayl ibn 'Iyād.

Yaḥyā ibn Mu'ādh al-Rāzī

He was one of the ascetics who practiced nighttime prayer and was a devotee with a number of disciples. He died during the year two hundred and six [A.D. 821/22]. Among his books there was Desire of the Desirous (Murād al-Murīdīn).³

Al-Yamānī⁴ 'Umar ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, surnamed Abū Ḥafṣ

He was one of the ascetics who engaged in Ṣūfī practices. Among his books there was Rising at Night and Nighttime Prayer.

Bishr ibn al-Ḥārith

He was a devotee and ascetic who died during the year two hundred and twenty-seven [A.D. 841/42]. Among his books there was Asceticism.

The Names of the Authors among the Ascetics and Ṣūfīs, with Mention of the Books Which They Composed ³ In the Flügel edition the title is incomplete.

⁴ The Tonk MS omits the passage about al-Yamānī and gives the paragraphs preceding and following in a different order.

Al-Ḥārith ibn Asad

He was [called] al-Muḥāsibī al-Baghdādī.⁵ He was one of the ascetics and theologians who taught piety with asceticism in the world (worldly affairs). He was also a preacher. He was, moreover, a legal authority and a theologian who produced books about the Ḥadīth and was acquainted with the schools of thought of the ascetics. He died during the year two hundred and forty-three [A.D. 857/58]. Among his books there was Reflection and Consideration.

Al-Khaṭīb [al-Baghdādī] said, "He wrote many books about asceticism, the fundamentals of religion, and refutation of the Mu'tazilah."⁶

'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Yaḥyā al-Makkī

He belonged to the group of al-Ḥārith [ibn Asad]. He was 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Yaḥyā ibn 'Abd al-Malik ibn Muslim ibn Maymūn al-Kinānī, a theologian and leader (in the forefront), an ascetic and devotee. He wrote books about theology and asceticism. He died ——. Among his books there was The Turning Aside, about what occurred between him and Bishr al-Marīsī.

Manṣūr ibn 'Ammār

He was surnamed Abū al-Sarī and was an irreproachable ascetic. The [writings] by Manṣūr he called sessions, not naming them books.⁷

About the concealed; Embellishment (Al-Dibāj); Description of the Camel;⁸ The Way;⁹ about mention of death; about the excellence of thought with (knowledge of) Allāh; about the choice and religion;¹⁰

⁵ MS 1934 omits al-Baghdādī.

⁶ In MS 1934 this paragraph is an insertion in a different handwriting. It is a quotation from Baghdādī, Ta'rikh, VIII, 211 l. 18 (see Bibliography). Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī was almost certainly born about twelve years after the death of al-Nadīm.

⁷ The word majlis ("session") rather than kitāb ("book") precedes each title in this list.

⁸ This may be al-ibl ("camel") or al-aball ("hypocrite").

⁹ Flügel gives al-sabīl ("way"), whereas MS 1934 has a word like al-nayl ("reaching," "acquiring") or al-nīl ("azure"). The last two forms also have other meanings.

about affliction;¹¹ The Clouds over the People in (of) the Fire;¹² about 'Wait for us, that we may borrow from your light';¹³ about plunging into the fire; The Assignment to Allāh, Exalted and Sublime;¹⁴ Following Tracks in the Raid;¹⁵ The Covered, about mention of death.

Al-Burjulānī

He was Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn, surnamed Abū Ja'far. He was one of those who composed books about asceticism and abstinence. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Companionship (Communion); The Enslaved by Love;¹⁶ Bountifulness and Generosity (Al-Jūd wa-al-Karam); Holy Aspiration (Al-Himmah); Patience (Al-Ṣabr); Obedience (Al-Ta'ah).

'Utbah [ibn Sallām] al-Ghulām

He was one of the ascetics, among whose books there was his epistle about rites of the pilgrimage.

Ibn Abī al-Dunyā

His name was 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Ubayd,¹⁷ surnamed Abū Bakr. He was from the Quraysh, from the offspring¹⁸

¹¹ The Arabic for "affliction" is al-balā. For a better understanding of this word, see 'Alī B. 'Uthmān, p. 388.

¹² This evidently refers to Judgment and Hell, but no reference has been found in the Qur'ān to identify the metaphor.

¹³ This quotation is from the Qur'ān 57:13. In the clause which follows, MS 1934 gives "into the fire." Flügel erroneously has "into the fire" with "that we may borrow from your light" in the wrong position, and as a separate "session."

¹⁴ "Assignment to" is in Arabic al-faraḍ 'alā, from MS 1934. It might also mean "payment to." Flügel gives al-'araḍ 'alā, which might mean "request to," or one of many other meanings.

¹⁶ This refers to the love of God. For the Ṣūfī terms in the four titles which follow, see 'Alī B. 'Uthmān as follows: al-jūd, p. 317; al-himmah, pp. 155, 235; al-ṣabr, p. 86; al-ta'ah, pp. 203, 226, 287.

¹⁸ Flügel gives walā ("relationship"), whereas the 1934 and Tonk MSS have wuld ("offspring").

of ———. He served as tutor to al-Muktafī bi-Allāh and was also a devotee and an ascetic, acquainted with historical traditions and quotations. He died on Tuesday during the fourteenth night of Jumādā al-Ākhirah [the sixth Muslim month], in the year two hundred and eighty-one [A.D. 894/95]. Among his books there were:

The Deceits of Satan; The Dream (Magnanimity); Understanding (Fiqh) of the Prophet, for Whom Be Peace;¹⁹ The Reproach of Amusements; The Reproach of Obscenity; Pardon (Compassion); The Reproach of Intoxicating Liquor; Affirmation; The Excellence of the Month of Ramaḍān; Charity of al-Fiṭr;²⁰ The Marrying of Fāṭimah, for Whom May There Be Peace;²¹ [Qur'ānic] Reading; Voices (Sounds); Command for Good and Interdiction of Evil; Solicitude, Sorrow, and Grief.

Sincerity and Resolution; Pestilences; Patience and Civilities of Speech; Rare Forms (Unusual Anecdotes); Desired Aims; Followers;²² Traditions of the Quraysh; Reproach of the World; Description of the Scales (al-Mizān);²³ Description of al-Ṣiraṭ;²⁴ Al-Mawqif;²⁵ The Tree of Ṭūbā;²⁶ Sidrah al-Muntahī;²⁷ The Noble Qualities of Good Dispositions; Mention of Death and the Tombs; Action of al-Munkar;²⁸ Piety; The Rites of the Pilgrimage of Mālik ibn Dīnār.

¹⁹ For the Ṣūfī use of fiqh ("understanding") see 'Abd Allāh, Al-Lumā, p. 6.

²⁰ It is the custom for Muslims to give alms at the feast called I'd al-Fiṭr at the end of Ramaḍān. For the Ṣūfī idea of charity, ibid., p. 42.

²¹ Fāṭimah was the Prophet's daughter married to 'Alī. The translation follows MS 1934 for the pious phrase. Flügel gives "May Allāh be well pleased with her."

²² At this point the Tonk MS introduces a title which is not given in this translation because it is not found elsewhere and is probably an error.

²³ These were the scales used to weigh souls on the Day of Judgment. See Qur'ān 42:17; 55:7-9.

²⁵ This probably refers to the place of the Last Judgment, but may also refer to a pilgrimage station, especially the stopping place by Mount 'Arafāt.

²⁶ A legendary tree in Heaven. It is not mentioned in the Qur'ān, but the Qur'ān 13:29 speaks of ṭūbā as the blessedness of the hereafter.

²⁷ A tree in the seventh Heaven. See Richardson, Dictionary, p. 817.

²⁸ One of the two angels of death who examined and sometimes punished the dead in their graves. See "Munkar," Enc. Islam, III, 724.

Ibn al-Junayd²⁹

His name was ———. Among his books there were:³⁰

Love (Al-Maḥabbah); Fear (Al-Khawf); Abstinence from Evil (Al-Wara'); The Pious (Al-Rahbān).

Al-Misrī, Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad

He was by origin from Sāmarrā, but he moved to Egypt, later returning to Baghdād. His birth was at Sāmarrā during the year two hundred and fifty-seven [A.D. 870/71], and there he was brought up. He was pious and an ascetic. He was a jurist acquainted with the Ḥadīth. He died during the year three hundred and thirty-eight [A.D. 949/50]. Among his books about asceticism there were:

The Great Book, which included forty chapters, among which there were: Rising at Night [for prayer]; Bound by Mutual Love; Constant Awareness [of God]; Silence; Fear; Repentance; Patience; Portents and Persons Possessed by Spirits;³¹ The Small Compendium for Morals; The Ḥadīth about Asceticism;³² the new book about reconciliation; Sincerity.

He also wrote [books] about the law:

Rites of the Pilgrimage; Ritual Purification; Prayer; Shares of Inheritance; Intention [probably for prayer]; The Poor Tax; Fasts; Superiority of Poverty over Riches.³³

Another Group of Persons Who Became Ṣūfis

Ghulām Khalīl

His name was 'Abd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Ghallāb ibn Khālīd ibn Farās al-Bāhili, known as Ghulām Khalīl.³⁴ He died ———. Among his books there were:

²⁹ This was not the famous Ibn al-Junayd surnamed Abū al-Qāsim.

³⁰ To understand the titles, see 'Alī B. 'Uthmān, pp. 157, 178, 305, for al-maḥabbah; p. 371 for al-khawf, p. 17 for al-wara'. Al-rahbān means excessively fearful of Hell and is evidently the word intended here rather than al-ruhbān ("monks").

³¹ The Tonk MS has al-āyāt ("signs," "portents"), MS 1934 does not make the word clear, while Flügel has al-ināth ("females").

³² This probably quoted sayings of the Prophet about renunciation.

³³ For transliterations of the Arabic terms for these titles, see 'Alī B. 'Uthmān, Index 2, p. 432. Arberry, Sufism, also explains the rites mentioned in this passage.

³⁴ For ghulām, see Glossary.

Petition (Prayer, Al-Du'a'); Attachment to Allāh, May His Name Be Glorified; Prayer (Al-Ṣalāh); Sermons.

Sahl al-Tustarī

He was 'Abd Allāh ibn Yūnus ibn 'Isā ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Rāfi' al-Tustarī. He became a Ṣūfī. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Moments (Subtilities) of the Lovers [Lovers of Allāh]; Sermons of Those with the Knowledge;³⁵ The Answers of Men of Conviction.

Faṭḥ al-Mawṣilī

He was by origin a mamlūk [white-skinned slave] and was one of the ascetics who became a Ṣūfī. No book of his is known, but his words are remembered and his expressions are still current.

Abū Ḥamzah the Ṣūfī

His name was Muḥammad ibn Ibrāhīm. Among his books there were:

Those Who Succeeded³⁶ among Persons Traveling about Seeking Piety, the Devotees, and Persons Who Became Ṣūfis—it was quoted by a Ṣūfī named Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad al-Dinawarī, and I have seen this as belonging to this man;³⁷ Substitutes; Abodes of the Devotees.

Muḥammad ibn Yaḥyā

He was al-Azdī or al-Ādamī, I am not sure which. Among his books there was Trust, which was quoted by Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn Ma'n ibn Hishām al-Qārī.

Al-Junayd [Abū al-Qāsim]

He was [al-Junayd] ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Junayd, not a descendant of the first one. He was one of the theologians of the Ṣūfī doctrine, and he lived after three hundred [A.D. 912/13].³⁸

³⁵ See 'Alī B. 'Uthmān, pp. 100, 382, for the Ṣūfī use of 'arif ("know").

³⁶ For the word translated "succeeded," Flügel gives al-muntammīn, whereas the Tonk MS has the simpler and perhaps more accurate form, al-mutimmīn. The word probably signifies those who achieved ecstatic union with the Deity.

³⁷ The Tonk MS gives this version, whereas Flügel repeats the words translated as "and among his books there were."

³⁸ Although mentioned briefly, this was a well-known mystic and ascetic; see Biog. Index. The year three hundred is probably an error, as Khallikān, 1,338–39, says he died A.D. 910.

Statement about the Doctrines of the Ismā'īliyah³⁹

What Abū 'Abd Allāh ibn Rizām said in his book in which he refuted the Ismā'īliyah and exposed their schools of thought, I am presenting in Abū 'Abd Allāh's own words, so that I can be free from responsibility for the truth and falsehood of the matter.

He said that 'Abd Allāh ibn Maymūn, this Maymūn being known as al-Qaddāh, was from the people of Qūraj al-'Abbās⁴⁰ near the city of al-Ahwāz. His father was Maymūn, to whom was related the group known as al-Maymūniyah. This [sect] seemed to be attached to Abū al-Khaṭṭāb Muḥammad ibn Abī Zaynab,⁴¹ who declared the divinity of 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, for whom may there be peace.⁴²

³⁹ "Doctrines" (madhāhib) is taken from the Tonk and 1934 MSS. Flügel gives the singular form, madhab. The background of the Ismā'īlī sect is as follows: The Shī'ī branch of Islām claimed that only the direct lineal descendants of the Prophet, through his daughter Fāṭimah and her husband 'Alī, had the right to be the caliphs. The 6th imam or lineal descendant, who died A.D. 765, was Ja'far al-Šādiq (see Hitti, Arabs, p. 442, for a list of the imams). Ja'far al-Šādiq had numerous sons. One of the younger of these was regarded as his father's legal successor. He was Mūsā al-Kāzim, whose followers form the main branch of the Shī'ah in Irān, Southern Irāq, and other places. Another son was Ismā'īl, who died prematurely, but his son known as Muḥammad al-Maktūm claimed the right to the succession for his branch of the family. His followers formed the Ismā'īliyah. This group developed a secret underground movement which for a number of generations threatened the existence of the 'Abbāsid caliphate, their headquarters being at Salamīyah, between Ḥamāh and Palmyra, in Syria. The genius who organized this underground movement was Maymūn. Some scholars think that he was the same person as Muḥammad al-Maktūm, but it is more probable that he was a retainer attached to the descendants of 'Alī. Maymūn and his son 'Abd Allāh organized the Ismā'īlī conspiracy, which had branches in Persia, al-Yaman, and Fāṭimid North Africa. The representatives of the Ismā'īliyah still existing today are the Bohra of India and the Khojas, whose chief is the Āghā Khān. See "Ismā'īliyah," Enc. Islam, II, 549; Shahrastānī (Haarbrücker), Part I, p. 219.

⁴⁰ As the Tonk MS gives a different spelling and the name is not listed by Yāqūt, this was probably an unimportant village.

⁴² The Flügel edition gives a different pious epithet: "May Allāh be well pleased with him." The translation follows the Tonk and 1934 MSS.

Maymūn and his son were Dayṣāniyūn⁴³ and for a long time 'Abd Allāh [the son] propagated the [Ismā'īlī] doctrine as a prophet. He appeared to work miracles, declaring that the earth would roll up for him, or stretch to wherever he wished in the shortest possible time. He also used to give out news about what was happening in distant places. He had agents in the localities where he wished and, as he was kind to them, they helped him with his intrigues. They had birds which they set free to go from different localities to the place where he was, bringing news from their regions; so in this way he deceived them.⁴⁴

He moved to live at 'Askar-Mukram, but he was so hard pressed that he fled from there. Two of his houses in a locality known as Sābāt Abī Nūḥ were demolished.⁴⁵ One of them was rebuilt as a mosque, but the other is a ruin to this day. Upon going to al-Baṣrah to dwell with a group of the descendants of the 'Aqīl ibn Abī Ṭālib,⁴⁶ he was again so hard pressed that he fled to Salamīyah⁴⁷ near Ḥimṣ, where he purchased estates.

When he dispatched propagandists to Sawād al-Kūfah,⁴⁸ there was a [favorable] response from a man of that district known as Ḥamdān ibn al-Ash'ath, nicknamed Qarmaṭ because of the shriveling of his back and leg.⁴⁹ This Qarmaṭ was a farmer and a cattle drover ⁴³ This was the sect found by Ibn Dayṣān and regarded as very heretical by the Muslims.

⁴⁵ 'Askar-Mukram was a city of southwestern Persia and Sābāt Abī Nūḥ was probably a street or locality in the city. See Yāqūt, Geog., III, 676; "'Askar Mukram," Enc. Islam, I, 488.

⁴⁶ For this tribe, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 39; Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 102.

⁴⁸ Sawād al-Kūfah was a region of irrigated lands near the ancient Babylon. The Arabic word for a propaganda agent is al-dā'i, plural al-du'āh. The word for propaganda is al-da'wah.

⁴⁹ For the origin of this name, see Hitti, Arabs, p. 444 n. 3; for the man see Baghdādī (Halkin), p. 110; "Karmatians," Enc. Islam, II, 767; Silvestre de Sacy, I, clxiv n. 1; clxxiv.

in a village known as Qass Bahrām, or Rās Qarmaṭ.⁵⁰ He was a crafty person, who enlisted to take part in his propaganda movement 'Abdān, the [alleged] author of books which were composed and for the most part falsely attributed to him.⁵¹ 'Abdān played his part in the propaganda in Sawād al-Kūfah, while Qarmaṭ stayed at Kalwādhī. 'Abd Allāh ibn Maymūn also assigned one of his sons to al-Ṭālaqān so he could correspond with him.⁵² This was during the year two hundred and sixty-one [A.D. 874/75].

When 'Abd Allāh died, his son Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh succeeded him. Then when Muḥammad died, there was disagreement among their propagandists and the members of their sect.⁵³ Some of them thought that his brother Aḥmad ibn 'Abd Allāh was the successor, while others believed that the person to follow him was his son, also named Aḥmad but nicknamed Abū al-Shalaghlagh (al-Shala'la').

Then after that there arose in the movement Sa'īd ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Maymūn. This Ḥusayn died while his father was alive, but even previous to the time of Sa'īd the [Ismā'īlī] propaganda had spread among the Banū al-'Ulayṣ of the Kalb Tribe.⁵⁴

After leaving al-Baṣrah, 'Abd Allāh and his sons continued to press the claim that they were descended from 'Aqīl⁵⁵ and had determined the genealogy [of his descendants] at al-Baṣrah. Due to the sons of 'Abd Allāh the propaganda spread throughout the land, as the agents went to al-Rayy, Ṭabaristān, Khurāsān, al-Yaman, al-Aḥsā', al-Qaṭīf, and Fāris.⁵⁶

⁵⁰ Qass Bahrām was evidently a hamlet at first named for a Christian and later for Qarmaṭ; see Silvestre de Sacy, I, clxvii n. 1.

⁵¹ For these books, see text near n. 84.

⁵² Kalwādhī was a town east of Baghdād; see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 301. Al-Ṭālaqān was a large city in Khurāsān. See Silvestre de Sacy, III, 491; I, cxcvi.

⁵³ MS 1934 and the Tonk MS make it clear that the word translated "sect" is nihlah.

⁵⁵ As 'Aqīl was a brother of the Caliph 'Alī, relationship with his offspring gave prestige.

⁵⁶ Al-Aḥsā' and al-Qaṭīf are on the east coast of Arabia. The 1934 and Tonk MSS give the final word as Fāris, or southwest Persia, rather than al-Quds, given by Flügel.

Then Sa'īd went to Egypt, propagating the claim that he was a descendant of 'Alī and Fāṭimah, with the name of 'Ubayd Allāh. There he associated with al-Nūsharī [the governor], being honored by the adherents of the sultan. As he consolidated⁵⁷ his activities, information about him reached [the Caliph] al-Mu'taḍid, who ordered his arrest. Accordingly, he fled to al-Maghrib⁵⁸ where his propaganda was successful among two groups of the Berbers,⁵⁹ and where he met with experiences that are well known, the country facilitating things for him.

When he saw that the descendant for whom he laid claim was not accepted, he caused to appear a young man who was a newcomer and whom he asserted to be a descendant of Muḥammad ibn Ismā'īl [al-Maktūm]. This was al-Ḥasan Abū al-Qāsim, who was al-Qā'im bi-al-Amr,⁶⁰ following 'Ubayd Allāh.⁶¹

⁵⁷ MS 1934 and the Tonk MS give taḥazzaq ("consolidated").

⁵⁸ This term is used for North Africa, but in this passage refers to what is today Tunisia.

⁵⁹ See "Berbers," Enc. Islam, I, 698.

⁶¹ As the Fāṭimid, or Ismā'īlī, caliphate almost wrecked the Sunni regime of Baghdād, numerous authors tried to prove that the Fāṭimid caliphs were imposters and not true descendants of the Prophet's daughter Fāṭimah. Other historians defended the authenticity of the Fāṭimid lineage, while some, including the author of Al-Fihrist, were neutral. See Khaldūn, Muqaddimah (Rosenthal), I, 41; Khaldūn, Histoire des Berbères, I, 263; II, 496, 515, 528; Taghrī-Birdī, Part IV, p. 75; Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 694; Khallikān, II, 77; Silvestre de Sacy, I, cccli, translated from al-Nuwayrī; Nizām al-Mulk, Siasat Namah, pp. 269, 288; Baghdādī (Halkin), p. 107 ff; Maqrīzī, Itti'āz al-Hunafā', p. 57; Athīr, Part VIII, p. 212. Other references can be found in Lewis, The Origins of Ismā'ilism, p. 101.

The account in Al-Fihrist confuses the descendants of Muḥammad al-Maktūm with those of Maymūn. See the Appendix to this translation, which is a table of succession which follows a letter written by Sa'īd al-Mahdī; see Hamdānī, On the Genealogy of the Fatimid Caliphs.

As all of these men were pretenders to the throne, they were sought after by the Baghdād police. Muḥammad al-Maktūm may really have been the son of an elder brother named 'Abd Allāh but have pretended to be the son of Ismā'īl, who had died prematurely, and was therefore not taken seriously by the police. He and his heirs lived in secret, first in Persia and later at Salamiyah in Syria.

A great deal of light is thrown on the disputed question of the entrance of Sa'īd al-Mahdī into the line of succession, when it is realized that his father was evidently a younger brother and not the true heir to the imamate. This revealing information is contained in a quotation; see Ḥusayn, Al-Majālīs al-Mustashirīyah, 34th majlis. The passage evidently points to Muḥammad Abū al-Shalaghlagh, who as the elder

During his [al-Qā'im's] lifetime, such a contempt for the Shari'ah⁶² and the basic teachings of prophecy became evident among his followers that there rose up against him a man called Abū Yazīd al-Muḥtasib, whose real name was Makhlad ibn Kaydād. He was a Berber of the Zanātā from the Banū Yifrān,⁶³ an Ibādī and a Nik-kārī.⁶⁴ He was known as Ṣāhib al-Ḥimār. As his following and support grew in strength, he made war against him [al-Qā'im], besieging him in al-Mahdiyyah until al-Ḥasan [al-Qā'im] died during the siege.⁶⁵

Then there ruled in his place his son Ismā'il, who was surnamed Abū Ṭāhir [al-Manṣūr]. As he appeared to uphold the importance of the Shari'ah, at the same time that Abū Yazīd [Makhlad ibn Kaydād] supported the sect of the Ibādīyah, the populace turned brother safeguarded the line of succession to the imamate. The quotation is as follows: "Each one of his own sons whom he appointed to the imamate died, so that not one child was left to this man safeguarding the succession. Accordingly, al-Ḥasan ibn Nūḥ ibn Ḥawshib, the propaganda agent (dā'i) by whom Allāh had opened up al-Yamān, made a mantle upon which he wrote the name of the Imam al-Mahdī —and he sent it to this guardian of the succession whose sons had died. He [Muḥammad Abū al-Shalaghlagh] accordingly bestowed it upon the Imam al-Mahdī [his nephew]."

This ancient record indicates that the son of a younger brother served as the heir during his lifetime. This temporary ruler or Fāṭimid caliph called the imam, was Sa'id ibn al-Ḥusayn 'Ubayd Allāh al-Mahdī, founder of the Fāṭimid dynasty in North Africa. When he died, the succession returned to the grandson of the elder brother, that is, to the grandson of Muḥammad Abū al-Shalaghlagh. This grandson was the second Fāṭimid caliph, known as al-Qā'im. As al-Ḥasan ibn Nūḥ ibn Ḥawshib is not mentioned in Al-Fihrist, his name is not in the Biog. Index.

⁶⁴ For Ibādī, see Glossary, Ibādīyah. MS 1934 gives Bakkāwī, which is evidently an error meant to be Nikkārī, which was a branch which broke off from the Khawārij in North Africa; ibid., pp. 202 ff.

⁶⁵ Al-Mahdiyyah was founded by Sa'id al-Mahdī as a palace city about one hundred miles south of modern Tunis; see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 694 l. 10; "al-Mahdiyya," Enc. Islam, III, 121.

away from him [Makhlad], so that he was killed and crucified. This was during the year three hundred and thirty-six [A.D. 947], but by the year forty the contempt for the Shari'ah throughout the land seemed to be similar to what it had been at the time of al-Ḥasan [al-Qā'im], so Allāh hastened the death of Ismā'il [al-Manṣūr].

His son, Ma'add Abū Tamīm, reigned after him. This Ma'add died during the year — in the city of Miṣr, which he occupied in the year —. There ruled in his place his son, Nizār ibn Ma'add, surnamed Abū Manṣūr [al-'Azīz].⁶⁶

From a Source Other than This Account

During the year eighty-seven [A.H. 287: A.D. 900],⁶⁷ [Sa'id ibn al-Ḥusayn] 'Ubayd Allāh [al-Mahdī] sent Abū Sa'id al-Sha'rānī to Khurāsān, where he gave a false impression to the leaders by professing to be a Shī'ī, leading people astray. When he died, al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Alī al-Marwazī took his place and became well established in the region until he was imprisoned by Naṣr ibn Aḥmad. He died in confinement.

He was succeeded by al-Nasafī, who misled Naṣr ibn Aḥmad, enticing him to join the [Ismā'īlī] movement, so that he approved paying an indemnity for the death of al-Marwazī [equal to] one hundred and nineteen gold coins (s., dīnār) and for each gold coin, a thousand gold coins.⁶⁸ He supposed that he was making this payment for the lord of North Africa, al-Qā'im bi-al-Amr.⁶⁹

When an illness overcame Naṣr, confining him to his bed, he repented of having complied with al-Nasafī, making this publicly known. When he died, his son Nūḥ assembled the legal authorities, making al-Nasafī attend also, so that they could examine, lay bare, and expose him. What is more, Nūḥ brought light upon forty of ⁶⁶ Ma'add Abū Tamīm is better known as al-Mu'izz, the fourth Fāṭimid caliph, whose army invaded Egypt, occupying Miṣr (al-Fuṣṭāt) in A.D. 969. He ordered the city of al-Qāhirah to be built and his son, usually called al-'Azīz, consolidated the regime in Egypt.

⁶⁷ The Flügel edition has thirty-seven, which is an error.

the gold coins (s., dīnār).⁷⁰ Accordingly, he executed al-Nasafī along with the chiefs of the movement and the leaders who were the head men attached to Naṣr, tearing them to pieces with every kind of violence.⁷¹

Another Account

The first one of the sons of [Maymūn] al-Qaddāh to go to al-Rayy, Ādharbayjān, and Ṭabaristān was a cotton carder. When he died his son succeeded him, and when his son also died, he was followed by a man known as Ghiyāth. When he passed away his son succeeded him and also a man known as al-Makhzūm.⁷² He in turn died and there took his place Abū Ḥātim al-Warsnānī, who was a dualist, then a Dahri,⁷³ later becoming a zindīq giving way to doubt.⁷⁴

As for al-Yaman, Fāris, and al-Aḥsā', the propagandists reached those regions either with 'Abdān, the successor and brother-in-law of Ḥamdān [ibn al-Ash'ath] Qarmatī, or there may have been agents preceding him: it is Allāh who knows.

When, however, the ruler's son Nūḥ realized that al-Nasafī was a fraud, he persuaded his sick father to make a public confession of having been cheated and to abdicate. Nūḥ then became the ruler and cleansed the realm of the Ismā'īlī heretics. See Nizām al-Mulk, Siyaṣat Naṣr, pp. 268-81; Blochet, Messianisme, p. 67; "Naṣr b. Aḥmad," Enc. Islam, III, 872; "Sāmānids," IV, 122-23.

⁷² The name is omitted in the Tonk MS. It is written without consonant signs in the Flügel version and MS 1934, but it is evidently meant to be the Ismā'īlī propagandist Ja'far al-Makhzūm. Blochet, Messianisme, is perhaps mistaken in confusing him with Abū Ḥātim al-Warsnānī.

⁷³ See Glossary, Dahriyah.

⁷⁴ MS 1934 and Flügel have ḥaṣal, freely translated "giving way." The Tonk MS has jahil ("was ignorant").

Another Account

Before the period of the sons of [Maymūn] al-Qaddāh, there were persons close to the Magians and their [Sāsānian] regime, for the restoration of which they strove. Sometimes [they worked] openly and sometimes secretly with intrigue, causing things to happen which were illegal in Islām.

It has been said that Abū Muslim, chief of the 'Abbāsīd movement, favored this cause and worked for it, but he was cut off before its attainment.⁷⁵ Among those who were dedicated [to the cause], coming out openly and making themselves known, there was Bābak al-Khurramī, an account of whom will be given in the Ninth Chapter.

One of the persons agreeing with 'Abd Allāh [ibn Maymūn] in connection with his movement was a man known as Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn, nicknamed Daydān, who was from the region of al-Karaj, being a secretary of Aḥmad ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Abī Dulaf.⁷⁶ This man was trained in philosophy and skilled in the science of the stars [astrology]. Belonging to the Shu'ūbiyah, he was bitter against the Islāmic government. He believed with certainty in the Universal Soul (al-Nafs), the Intelligence (al-'Aql), Time (al-Zamān), Space (al-Makān), and Matter (al-Ḥayūlā).⁷⁷ He also supposed that there was control and spiritual action in the stars.

In speaking about him, a reliable person told me that he believed he had discovered in the astral determinations that there would be a transition from the Islāmic regime to the government of the Persians and to their religion, called the Majūsiyah. [This would take place] at the time of the eighth conjunction, as a movement in the Muthal-lathah from the sign of Scorpio, indicating the Faith [of Islām], to the sign of Sagittarius, indicating the Persian religion. He also said that he [Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn] used to exclaim, "Would that I might be the cause of this!"⁷⁸

⁷⁵ See Mas'ūdī, VI, 186.

⁷⁶ For al-Karaj, a city near al-Rustāq in Persia, see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 250 bottom, and Ṭabarī, Annales, Part III, p. 2116. This Abū Dulaf was the governor of Isbahān, A.D. 879, and must not be confused with al-Qāsim ibn 'Isā al-'Ujī, also called Abū Dulaf. Flügel misspells the name.

As he [Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn] had extensive property, exalted enthusiasm, and great craftiness, he facilitated matters for the [Ismā'īlī] movement, giving Ibn al-Qaddāḥ [ʿAbd Allāh ibn Maymūn] authority in connection with it and aiding him with funds. He met him at al-ʿAskar⁷⁹ when he was setting out to seek the sultan's court, before the time of Ḥamūlah,⁸⁰ the vizier of Ibn Abū Dulaf, when he [Abū Dulaf] rose to his rank⁸¹ of the governorship of al-Ḥaramayn,⁸² with attendance upon and admission to the service.⁸³

When he died at the sultan's court, the movement was under the direction of Ibn al-Qaddāḥ. This is what we know about this subject, but it is Allāh who can distinguish the truth regarding it from the falsehood.

The Names of the Authors of the Books of the Ismā'īlīyah and the Titles of the Books

As ʿAbdān, who has already been mentioned,⁸⁴ was the most prolific of the community in producing books and compilations, everyone writing a book attributed it to him. ʿAbdān had a catalogue of the books which he compiled, among which there were:

⁷⁸ The Muthallathah is the term used for the three stars called Δελτωτόν or Τρίγωνον, but here it more probably refers to signs of the zodiac. Here the trilogy is evidently Libra=Scorpio=Sagittarius. Probably several planets met in Scorpio, destined to meet later in Sagittarius. The translation is free. See "Astrology," Enc. Islam, I, 496; "Muthallath," Enc. Islam, III, 794 top.

⁷⁹ This was evidently ʿAskar-Mukram, a city of southwestern Persia; see "ʿAskar Mukram," Enc. Islam, I, 488.

⁸⁰ Flügel gives Ḥammawayh, who was the director of posts about A.D. 807; see Tabarī, Annales, Part III, pp. 712, 718, 764. MS 1934 has Ḥamūlah, who was vizier to the family of Abū Dulaf. Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn very likely left the service of Ibn Abī Dulaf in order to seek service with the caliph. Then Ibn Abī Dulaf was evidently honored as Governor of the Two Holy Cities and given a place at the royal court. Probably it was at this time that Ḥamūlah became his vizier. Both MS 1934 and Flügel omit "Ibn" before Abū Dulaf, apparently an error.

⁸¹ Flügel has khutbah ("sermon"), but the word is probably meant to be hiṣṣah ("rank," "dignity").

⁸² Makkah and al-Madīnah.

⁸³ The word translated "service" is al-tāʿah, probably implying service in the entourage of the caliph, although it may have a religious significance. For references, see n. 16.

⁸⁴ See n. 51, and also Khaldūn, Histoire des Berbères, II, 516.

The Millstone and the Wheel; Ordinances and Supports; The Shining; The Clear; The Field (Al-Maydān).

Among his large books there were:

The Flames (Opinions); The National Events (Al-Malāḥim); The Goal (Purpose).

These are books of attainment (bulghah)⁸⁵ which are extant, being passed from hand to hand. It has, however, been said about the rest of the [books of the] catalogue, "We have never seen them, nor known anyone who has seen them."

They [the Ismā'īlīyah] Have Seven Stages, Which Are:⁸⁶

The First Stage, for the common people; the Second Stage, for persons somewhat more advanced; the Third Stage, for a person who has been with the movement for a year; the Fourth Stage, for a person who has been with the movement for two years; the Fifth Stage, for a person who has been with the movement for three years; the Sixth Stage, for a person who has been with the movement for four years; the Seventh Stage, in which there is the culmination and principal exposition of the movement.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I read this and found in it material weighty in disclosing things that are prohibited, and showing contempt for the laws and those who uphold them.

During the past twenty years the movement has lost momentum and its propaganda agents have become fewer, so that I no longer see books compiled about it. At the beginning of the period of Muʿizz al-Dawlah, however, it was in evidence, accepted and divulged, with propagandists sought after in every region and district.⁸⁷ This is what I have learned in this country [al-ʿIrāq], but it is possible that the movement is continuing in the regions of al-Jabal and Khurāsān.

⁸⁵ Bulghah probably signifies books which helped a convert to be promoted from one stage of attainment to another in the Ismā'īlī system.

⁸⁶ The word translated as "stages" is bālaghāt. This was probably the initiation system for a dāʿī, or propaganda agent, as the ordinary person could not be expected to complete such a long course. This passage should be compared with Maqrīzī, Kitāb al-Khiṭaṭ, Part II, pp. 227-35; Silvestre de Sacy, I, lxx-clxxxvii; O'Leary, Short History of the Fatimid Caliphate, pp. 21-32; Dodge, Muslim World, L, No. 2 (April 1960), 140-41.

⁸⁷ This probably refers to the time when Muʿizz al-Dawlah seized Baghdād, A.D. 945.

In Egypt the situation is obscure, for from the head of the movement ruling the region nothing appears, which explains what is being said about him and his forefathers. The matter is different [from what he claims]. Al-salām.⁸⁸

Among the Compilers (Authors)

There was al-Nasafī, who has already been mentioned. Among his books there were:

Intentions (Titles, Indications, Manners) of Religion; Sources of the Law; The Chosen Movement.⁸⁹

Abū Ḥatīm al-Rāzī

His name was ———. Among his books there were:

The large book, Decoration, about four hundred leaves [in length]; The Compilation, about the law and other subjects.⁹⁰

The Banū (Sons of) Ḥammād

They were from al-Mawṣil and were supporters of the [Ismāʿīlī] movement in al-Jazīrah and of those under its patronage, before [the time when] Abū Yaʿqūb, the successor of the Imam al-Muqīm, was at al-Rayy.⁹¹ They compiled books, which they attributed to ʿAbdān and among which there were:

The Shining Truth; The Manifest Truth; In the Name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate.⁹²

⁸⁸ The Fātimid caliphs did not explain the authenticity of their descent from Muḥammad and his daughter, Fāṭimah, so that there was uncertainty with regards to the matter. Al-salām ("greeting") was a common form for ending a communication.

⁸⁹ Flügel seems to err in this title. The translation is taken from the Tonk and 1934 MSS, which have Al-Daʿwah al-Muntakhabah ("The Chosen Movement"), referring to the Ismāʿīliyah.

⁹⁰ His famous book, Al-Isḥāḥ, is not mentioned here. See Ivanov, Studies in Early Persian Ismailism, pp. 90 ff.

⁹¹ When al-Nasafī was in al-Mawṣil, he evidently heard of the Banū Ḥammād, who are not mentioned elsewhere. The Imam al-Muqīm was almost certainly the Ismāʿīlī leader al-Nasafī, whose place was taken by Abū Yaʿqūb al-Sijistānī, his pupil, when he was killed, A.D. 943. See Ḥamdānī, Ṣulayḥiyyūn, pp. 251, 252. Al-Jazīrah was probably northern ʿIrāq.

⁹² MS 1934 omits "the Compassionate," but the Tonk MS and Flügel version include it.

A Man Known as Ibn Ḥamdān

His name was ———. I saw him at al-Mawṣil, [where] he was [continuing] the movement after the death of the sons of Ḥammād. He wrote many books, among which there were: The Seventh Philosophy;⁹³ ———.

Ibn Nafīs

He was Abū ʿAbd Allāh, a chief of the [Ismāʿīlī] movement, who was to have had the leadership as successor to Abū Yaʿqūb.⁹⁴ But Abū Yaʿqūb changed his opinion of him because of information which reached him. So he sent a company of Persians to kill him treacherously in his house.⁹⁵ No written book of his is known. He was killed during the year ———.

Al-Dabīlī

He was a rival of Abū ʿAbd Allāh [ibn Nafīs], the two of them competing for the leadership. He outlived him by some years, dying ———. He did not write any books.

Al-Ḥasanābādhi

His name was ———. I saw him when I went to him with a group of his adherents. He was dwelling in a quarter between the two palaces⁹⁶ and was elegant in manner, extraordinary in the style of his expression and speech and in what he recounted. He went to Ādharbayjān because of something which happened to him at Baghdād, after the exile of Shaymadī, the Daylānū, with whom he had connections.⁹⁷

⁹³ This may have been about the seventh stage of initiation among the Ismāʿīliyah, which dealt with philosophical matters (see n. 86). If the Banū Ḥammād were leaders before A.D. 943, when al-Nasafī was killed, and Ibn Ḥamdān served as leader after they died, it is likely that the author of Al-Fihrist was a young man when he went to al-Mawṣil and met this Ismāʿīlī leader.

⁹⁴ This is evidently meant to be Abū Yaʿqūb al-Sijistānī, who died soon after A.D. 971.

⁹⁵ MS 1934 gives the form dār ("house"). The Tonk MS says "They beat him treacherously and killed him."

⁹⁶ These were probably on the East Bank of the Tigris at Baghdād; see Le Strange, Baghdād, map opposite p. 231.

⁹⁷ The Tonk MS has, instead of this last phrase, "because he was exiled on account of him."

Al-Hallāj: His Religious Beliefs and Accounts of Him, with the Names of His Books and the Books of His Followers

His name was al-Ḥusayn ibn Maṣṣūr. There is a difference of opinion about his country and place of upbringing. It is said that he was from Khurāsān, from Naysābūr. Then it is said that he was from Marw (Merv), and it is also said that he was from al-Ṭālaqān.⁹⁸ Some of his adherents said that he was from al-Rayy, while others said from al-Jibāl,⁹⁹ but nothing is clear about him or his town (region).

I have read what was written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥusayn 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Abī Ṭāhir:

Al-Ḥusayn ibn Maṣṣūr al-Hallāj was a crafty man and a conjurer who ventured into the Ṣūfī schools of thought, affecting their ways of speech. He laid claim to every science, but nevertheless [his claims] were futile. He even knew something about the science of alchemy (al-kīmīyā). He was ignorant, bold, obsequious, but courageous in the presence of sultans, attempting great things and ardently desiring a change of governments (dynasties). Among his adherents he claimed divinity, speaking of divine union.¹⁰⁰ He presented the tenets of the Shī'ah to the kings, but to the common people the doctrines of the Ṣūfis. In enlarging upon this he claimed that the Divine Power had alighted within him, so that he was He, Almighty God, may He be glorified and sanctified. In connection with this he said "He is my nonexistence, exalted and great."¹⁰¹

He used to travel among the towns. Then when he was arrested, he was turned over to Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā [the vizier], who upon examining him found that he lacked knowledge about the Qur'ān and its sciences,¹⁰² as well as about the law, the Ḥadīth, and also the poetry and sciences of the Arabs. So 'Alī ibn 'Isā said to him, "To learn about your purification and obligations will be more profitable for you than the [writing of] epistles in which you do not know what you are talking about. How ⁹⁸ See Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 857, for Naysābūr; IV, 507, for Marw; III, 491, for Ṭālaqān.

⁹⁹ See Yāqūt, Geog., II, 892, for Rayy; II, 15, 22, for Jibāl.

¹⁰⁰ Ḥulūl ("divine union") is ecstatic union with God; see "Ḥulūl," Enc. Islam, II, 333; Ḥallāj, Akhhār, I, 139, 395; Shehadi, p. 26.

often have you written to the people, 'Woe art thou, for Dhū al-Nūr¹⁰³ the scintillating is about to descend and after his scintillating to shine!' Verily, what a great need thou hast for training!"

So he gave an order concerning him and he was tied up [for public ridicule], first on the East Side in the vicinity of the Majlis al-Shurṭah, and then on the West Side.¹⁰⁴ After that he was taken to the court of the sultan and placed in prison.¹⁰⁵ He was obliged to compromise with them about the Sunnah, but they did not believe that he spoke sincerely. He was quoted as claiming that at the start he used to call upon the favor of the family of Muḥammad,¹⁰⁶ but he was slandered and taken off with a rope,¹⁰⁷ to be beaten with scourges.

It is said that he appealed to Abū Sahl [Ismā'īl] al-Nawbakhtī, who replied to his messenger, "I am the head of a sect with thousands of people backing me, who will follow him if I follow him.¹⁰⁸ So make hair grow on my forehead, for the hair there has disappeared. I do not wish anything else from him." The messenger, however, did not come back to him.¹⁰⁹

One day he moved his hand, scattering musk over the people. Another day he moved his hand, scattering money. Then one of the discerning persons present said to him, "Now I see well-known money, but I shall believe in you, as will the people with me, if you give me money on which there is your own name and that of your father." He replied, "But how? No such thing is made!" Then he [the questioner] said, "Whoever has caused something nonexistent to appear has produced something which is not made."¹¹⁰

¹⁰⁴ It is likely that al-Ḥallāj was tied up in Baghdād for the public to see, first at the east end and then at the west end of the main city bridge, running from the Majlis al-Shurṭah, or police station, to the start of the Khurāsān Highway; see Le Strange, Baghdad, map following p. 106.

¹⁰⁵ See Ḥallāj, Akhhār, I, 231-33.

¹⁰⁶ The phrase translated "used to call upon the favor of the family of Muḥammad" probably means that al-Ḥallāj claimed to be loyal to the Prophet. But they did not believe him and slandered him.

¹⁰⁷ Flügel gives jabal but questions its accuracy, so that MS 1934 is probably right in giving ḥabl ("rope").

¹⁰⁸ Abū Sahl Ismā'īl al-Nawbakhtī was the intellectual leader of the Imāmīyah.

¹⁰⁹ This story should be compared with the similar one told about al-Shalamaghānī; see Chap. V, sect. 2, near n. 26.

¹¹⁰ Cf. Ḥallāj, Akhhār, I, 156.

He was handed over to Naṣr al-Ḥājib,¹¹¹ whom he misled. In his books there was written, "Verily, I am He who drowned the people of Nūḥ (Noah) and destroyed 'Ād and Thamūd."¹¹² When his cause spread and became public, trustworthy information about it was given to the sultan [al-Muqtadir], who declared that he should be beaten with a thousand strokes and his two hands cut off. After that he burned him in the fire, at the end of the year three hundred and nine [A.D. 922].¹¹³

The Reason for His Arrest

I have read what was written in the handwriting of Abū al-Ḥasan ibn Sinān:

The case of al-Ḥallāj became known and talk about it spread during the year two hundred and ninety-nine [A.D. 911/12]. The reason why he was arrested was because the postmaster at al-Sūs passed through a locality in al-Sūs called al-Rabḍ fī al-Qaṭ'ah,¹¹⁴ where he saw a woman in one of the lanes exclaiming, "Leave me alone or I'll tell [about you]." So he said to the Arabs with him, "Seize her!" Then he said to her, "What's the matter with you?" She denied [having spoken], until he brought her to his house and threatened her. Then she said, "Next to my house there has come to live a man who is known as al-Ḥallāj and who has a group of people coming to him secretly every night and day, saying unlawful things."

He forthwith turned to a band of his associates, who were adherents of the sultan, ordering them to raid the place. They did so and found a man with a white head and beard, whom they seized upon along with all that ¹¹¹ Abū al-Qāsim Naṣr was the chamberlain (al-ḥājib) of the Caliph al-Muqtadir.

¹¹² Here al-Ḥallāj identifies himself with Allāh. For the Flood of the time of Noah and the destruction of the Pre-Islāmic tribes, see Qur'ān 7: 59–84.

¹¹³ There are different accounts of how al-Ḥallāj was punished, perhaps due to the fact that the word ṣalb can mean either tied up for public ridicule or crucified. The preceding passage makes it clear that when he was first brought to Baghdād, al-Ḥallāj was tied up on both sides of the Tigris for the public to revile. Then he was placed in prison, where for a time he gained the good will of the chamberlain, members of the court, and the Caliph al-Muqtadir himself. Later the vizier used his influence to have him executed. He was beaten and mutilated. It is likely that he was crucified before his body was burned. As the Muslims believed in bodily resurrection of the dead, this burning was a severe measure to take. Cf. Ḥallāj, Akhbār, I, 232, 304–12; also illustrations: I, 182; II, 622, 770, 916.

¹¹⁴ Sūs was the ancient Susa; see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 188; "al-Sūs," Enc. Islam, IV, 565. MS 1934 has "al-Rabḍ fī al-Qaṭ'ah," which means "the Suburb in the Separated Quarter." Compare this passage with Ḥallāj, Akhbār, I, 228 ff.

he had with him, for there were quantities of coins, musk, clothing, safflower,¹¹⁵ ambergris, and saffron. Then he said, "What do you want from me?" They replied, "You are al-Ḥallāj." He said, "No, I am not he and I don't even know him."

They took him to the home of 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn, the postmaster, and imprisoned him in a house, making sure of him and taking over his notes, books, and cloth, while the news spread about the town, so that the people gathered to look at him. 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn asked him, "Are you al-Ḥallāj?" He denied this. Then one of the men of al-Sūs said, "I know him by a scar made by a blow on his head." So they searched for this and found it.

Now the sultan had arrested one of the young men of al-Ḥallāj known as al-Dabbās, whom he kept in prison for a long time, treating him abominably. Then he released him and, after taking his guarantee and making him swear to look for al-Ḥallāj, he provided him with funds. While he [al-Dabbās] was going after him through the land, he happened to enter Sūs at this time and to learn the news. He hastened to notify the sultan about the affair, confirming it. So he [al-Ḥallāj] was brought [to Baghdād] and there befell him what happened.

The person who sought to have him executed, taking the initiative in the affair, was Ḥāmid ibn al-'Abbās [the vizier]. The sultan was on the point of setting him free, as he [al-Ḥallāj] confused him, the servants, and the women of his court by praying, amulets, and charms. He used to eat little, pray much, and fast for extended periods, so that he misled and captivated them.¹¹⁶

Naṣr [al-Ḥājib] al-Qushūrī called him "the Righteous Shaykh," but he was mistaken¹¹⁷ so that Ḥāmid brought the case to a definite conclusion, accusing some about the matter. Then he [al-Ḥallāj] said, "I invoke curses upon you!" [whereupon] Ḥāmid exclaimed, "Now it is certain that you claim what you are suspected of!" So he was killed and burned.¹¹⁸

¹¹⁶ For his miracles in the palace, see Ḥallāj, Akhbār, I, 235 ff.

¹¹⁷ The Tonk MS adds three extra words here and also shows other variations, probably due to careless copying.

¹¹⁸ It is probable that al-Ḥallāj cursed the vizier in a way which proved that he claimed divinity, thus giving final reason for execution. It is likely that this entire section is quoted from Abū al-Ḥasan ibn Sinān.

Names of the Books of al-Ḥallāj¹¹⁹

Ṭā'(Ṭ) Sin(S). Al-Azal (Eternity) and the Greatest Jewel (Supreme Essence) and the Light-Giving Olive Tree;¹²⁰ Letters of the Ḥadīth, and the Eternal and Universal Names; The Shade Extended, the Water Poured Forth, and the Continuing Life; The Conception (Act of Becoming) of Light, Life, and Spirit; Al-Ṣayhūr;¹²¹ Explanation of 'Say, He Allāh is One';¹²² The Continuing in Eternity and Eternally Continued; Recital of the Qur'ān and the Furqān;¹²³ The Disposition of Man and the Explanation (Khalq al-Insān wa-al-Bayān); The Cunning of Satan and the Command of the Sultan; Roots and Branches.¹²⁴

Secret of the World and the One Sent (Raised from the Dead); Justice and Oneness;¹²⁵ Politics, Caliphs, and Governors (Emirs); Knowledge of Survival (Eternity) and Annihilation;¹²⁶ The Form of Things Which Overshadow; The Light of the Light;¹²⁷ Revelations (Supernatural Communications); Spheres, the World, and the One Who Knows; Praise of the Prophet and the Most Excellent Example;¹²⁸ The Unusual and the Clear [in Good Literary Style]; The [Primordial] Point¹²⁹ and the Beginning of Creation; The Resurrection and the Mystic Ecstasies

¹²⁰ Ṭā' Sin are the letters at the beginning of Sūrah 27, which according to a cryptic system stood for "Divine Apparition" (Ṭā') and "Eternal Glory of Allāh" (Sin). See Massignon, Origines du lexique, pp. 81, 82. Al-Ḥallāj used these two letters for his short writings; see Ḥallāj, Ṭawāsīn. For the light-giving olive tree, see Qur'ān 24:35.

¹²¹ All editions of Al-Fihrist have al-ṣayhūr, perhaps signifying Mt. Zion, but Ḥallāj, Ṭawāsīn, p. 142 n. 1, is probably correct in suggesting al-ṣayhūr, which indicates being scalded in hell; cf. Qur'ān 22:20(21).

¹²² See Qur'ān 112:1.

¹²³ See "Furqān," Enc. Islam, II, 120; Qur'ān 25:1; also Muslim World, XLV, No. 2 (April 1955), 109–12, an unsigned editorial entitled "The Criterion."

¹²⁴ This title probably refers to principles and applications of the law.

¹²⁵ See Glossary, "Mu'tazilah," for this phrase.

¹²⁶ In Arabic this is 'Ilm al-Baqā' wa-al-Fanā', evidently referring to the mystic practice of annihilation of personality in ecstatic union with God, giving a consciousness of the eternal.

¹²⁷ See Qur'ān 24:35.

¹²⁸ The Arabic words translated as "most excellent example" are al-mathal al-a'lā, mentioned in the Qur'ān 30:27 (26).

¹²⁹ The Flügel text seems to be incorrect. The Tonk and 1934 MSS give al-nuqtah ("point"). Cf. Ḥallāj, Ṭawāsīn, p. 29, and Massignon, Origines du lexique, p. 39.

'Abd Allāh ibn Bukayr¹⁴¹

He was one of the Shī'ah. He was quoted by al-Ḥasan ibn ['Alī ibn] al-Faḍḍāl. Among his books there was a book about the sources.

Al-Ḥusayn ibn Mukhāraq

He was one of the leaders of the Shī'ah. Among his books there were:

The Commentary; The Compilation of Science.

¹⁴¹ This name and the seven which follow it are Shī'ī scholars, who are mentioned by al-Ṭūsī but not by other well-known authorities.

Abū al-Qāsim ‘Alī ibn Aḥmad al-Kūfī

He was one of the illustrious members of the Imāmīyah. Among his books there were:

The Wills; a book about the law, according to the system of al-Māzinī.¹⁴²

Ibn Kūrah

Abū Sulaymān Dā’ūd ibn Kūrah was one of the people of Qumm.¹⁴³ Among his books there was Compassion.

Qunbarah

His name was Ismā’īl ibn Muḥammad. He came from the people of Qumm and among his books there was Knowledge.

Al-Ḥasanī

He was Abū ‘Abd Allāh, among whose books there were: Traditions about the Authorities on the Ḥadīth; Traditions about Mu’āwīyah; The Virtues; Investigation (Uncovering).

Al-Balawī

His name was ‘Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad al-Balawī, from Ballī, a tribe of Egypt. He was a preacher, legal authority, and scholar, among whose books there were:

Abwāb; Knowledge; Religion and Its Ordinances.

Ibn ‘Imrān

He was Abū Ja’far Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā ibn ‘Imrān of Qumm, a master of the law,¹⁴⁴ among whose books there was Rare Forms (Al-Nawādir), a large book¹⁴⁵ [properly] called Rare Forms of Learning (Nawādir al-Ḥikmah). This book, Rare Forms ¹⁴² This title is found in the Tonk MS and Ṭūsī, p. 211, sect. 455, but not in MS 1934 or the Flügel edition.

¹⁴³ For Qumm, see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 175. MS 1934 omits the name here, but includes it in the paragraph following.

¹⁴⁴ The words translated “master of the law” are in Arabic ṣāhib al-fiqh. This might also mean “having intelligence,” or with a more technical significance might mean “possessing an understanding of God,” presumably by means of mystic practices.

¹⁴⁵ The rest of this paragraph is not in either MS 1934 or the Flügel text, but is taken from the Tonk MS. It should be compared with Ṭūsī, pp. 273–74, sect. 598.

of Learning, comprises twenty-two chapters. The first one is “Oneness” (Al-Tawḥīd) and the last ones are “Ordinances” (Al-Ḥudūd), “Fines” (Al-Diyāt), “Testimonies” (Al-Shahādāt), “Law Suits” (Al-Qadāyā), and “Judgments” (Al-Aḥkāw). He was one of the people of Qumm who became assimilated among the Arabs.

The Zaydiyyah¹⁴⁶

Al-Dā’i ilā Allāh al-Imām al-Nāṣir li-al-Ḥaqq al-Ḥasan ibn ‘Alī ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Zayd ibn ‘Umar ibn ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, for whom may there be peace, belonged to the schisms of the Zaydiyyah. He was born ——— and died during the year ———. Among his books there were:

Ritual Purification; The Call to Prayer and the Performance of It (Al-Adhān wa-al-Iqāmah); Prayer; Sources of the Poor Tax (Uṣūl al-Zakāt); Fasting; Rites of the Pilgrimage; The Journey (Al-Sayr) (or Ways of Life [Al-Siyar]); Oaths and Vows; The Pledge; Selling the Mothers of Children; Administration of an Oath; The Option to Purchase or Pre-empt Adjoining Property (Al-Shuf’ah); Oppression (Plunder); Ordinances.

These are all of his books that we have seen. Some of the Zaydiyyah believe that he wrote about a hundred books, but we have not seen them. If some observer does see any one of them while we are writing [this book], I will add it in its proper place, if Allāh so wills.

Al-Dā’i¹⁴⁷ ilā al-Ḥaqq al-Ḥasan ibn Zayd ibn Muḥammad ibn Ismā’īl ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Zayd ibn al-Ḥasan ibn ‘Alī, the Lord of Ṭabaristān

He appeared there during the year two hundred and fifty [A.D. 864] and died in Ṭabaristān ruling over it during the year two hundred and seventy [A.D. 883/84].¹⁴⁸ Then there arose in his place

¹⁴⁶ See Glossary for this sect.

¹⁴⁷ The Ismā’īliyah used the term dā’i for a member of their religious and propaganda hierarchy, but here it signifies “the caller to righteousness.” These Zaydī leaders did much to bring the semi-pagan people of Daylam and Ṭabaristān to accept Islām.

¹⁴⁸ For the regions in this sentence and the one which follows, see “Tabaristan,” Enc. Islam, IV, 579; “Dailam,” I, 896.

his brother al-Dā'i ilā al-Ḥaqq Muḥammad ibn Zayd, who ruled al-Daylam. Among the books of al-Ḥasan there were:

Compilation of the Law; The Explanation; The Proof, about the imamate.

Al-'Alawī al-Rassī¹⁴⁹

He was al-Qāsim ibn Ibrāhīm, the lord of Ṣa'dah and one of the Zaydiyyah, from whom was descended the Qāsimīyah¹⁵⁰ branch of the Zaydiyyah. Among his books there were:

Drinks; The Imamate; Oaths and Vows; Self-Discipline (Siyāsāt al-Nafs); Refutation of the Rāfiḍah.

Al-Hādī

He was Yahyā ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn al-Qāsim ibn Ibrāhīm al-Ḥusanī, among whose books there were:

Prayer; Compilation of the Law.

Al-Murādī

Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn Maṣṣūr al-Murādī al-Zaydī was one of the Zaydiyyah among whose books there were:

The Large Commentary; The Small Commentary; Aḥmad ibn 'Isā; Nature of the Justly Appointed Imams (Imams Who Deviated); about ordinances, such as ritual purification, prayer, and other things, according to the [way of] reading books about the law. Then he wrote also, Al-Khamīs [the army with its five parts]; his epistle to al-Ḥasan ibn Zayd in Ṭabaristān, in connection with the speech of some of those who were seeking.¹⁵¹

Al-'Ayyāshī

Abū al-Naḍr Muḥammad ibn Maṣ'ūd al-'Ayyāshī was one of the people of Samarqand. It is also said that he was one of the Banū ¹⁴⁹ Instead of al-Rassī, Flügel gives Bursī, which must be an error. For al-Rassī, see "Rassids," Enc. Islam, III, 1126.

¹⁵⁰ For Ṣa'dah, see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 389. For the Qāsimīyah, see Ḥakīmī, Yaman, pp. 314-15.

¹⁵¹ The Tonk MS has certain variations, but they are probably due to careless copying. This epistle may, perhaps, have been about the dialects of some of the pagan tribes in northern Persia who were seeking acceptance into Islām, so as to escape capture and slavery.

Tamīm¹⁵² and a legal authority belonging to the Imāmīyah branch of the Shī'ah. He was one of those [scholars] of his period and time who was devoted to an abundance of learning, his books being a matter of importance in the regions of Khurāsān.

Junayd ibn Muḥammad ibn Nu'aym, surnamed Abū Aḥmad, wrote to Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Muḥammad al-'Alawī a letter at the end of which there was a copy of the compositions of al-'Ayyāshī. I have made my record in accordance with this arrangement of his adherent.¹⁵³

Commentary; Prayer; Ritual Purifications; Abridgment of "Prayer"; Abridgment of "Menstruation";¹⁵⁴ Fasting; Abridgment of "Fasting"; Funerals; Abridgment of "Funerals"; Rites of the Pilgrimage; Abridgment of "Rites of the Pilgrimage"; The Instructed and the Educated; Maledictions; The Poor Tax; Division of the Poor Tax; The Poor Tax at the Breaking of the Fast; Drinks; Punishment for Drinking; Sacrifices; Al-'Aqiqah;¹⁵⁵ Marriage; The Dowry; Divorce; Piety; Humble Replies; Adoration of the Qur'ān;¹⁵⁶ The Agreement (Saying) between the Two Sayings; Knowledge of the Copyists.

Medicine; The Dream; The Stars, Augury, Following the Traces,¹⁵⁷ and Divination by Flight of Birds; The Lot;¹⁵⁸ The Furqān;¹⁵⁹ The Difference between Legal and Illegal Eatables; Sellers (Buyers); Advanced Payment; Al-Ṣarf;¹⁶⁰ The Pledge; Partnership; Competition; The Option to Purchase or Pre-empt Adjoining Property (Al-Shuf'ah); ¹⁵² See "Tamīm," Enc. Islam, IV, 643.

¹⁵³ Cf. Ṭūsī, p. 317, sect. 290. These must be the titles of chapters or small monographs.

¹⁵⁴ Al-Ṭūsī and Flügel give "menstruation," which seems to be correct, although MS 1934 and the Tonk MS have Abridgment of the Abridgment.

¹⁵⁵ This may mean a sheep slaughtered for a newborn child, or a turban, or the foreskin removed at circumcision.

¹⁵⁶ Flügel suggests that this may be tajwīd ("intonation"), but both MS 1934 and the Tonk MS give clearly sujūd ("adoration" or "worship").

¹⁵⁷ Probably palmistry.

¹⁵⁸ At a shrine an Arab could have an arrow drawn out for him and then his fortune told as indicated by the marking on the arrow. This could also be used for gambling.

¹⁶⁰ As this title is with others about trade, it probably refers to exchange of money or goods, rather than to its meaning in grammar.

Seeking Acquittal; Trade; The Judgments and Training of Judges; Ordinance for Adultery; Ordinance for Stealing; Ordinance of the Accuser.

Ransoms for Murder (Payments of Blood Money); Expiations for Murder; Wanton Amusements (Musical Instruments); Metaphors of Poetry; Horse Racing and Throwing [Javalins]; Division of the Booty and the Spoil; The Debt, Undertaking Responsibility, and the Commission;¹⁶¹ Suretyship (Management) and Giving Out for Planting; Wages (Rentals); The Period of Time; Asceticism; Pious Endowments;¹⁶² Al-Qiblah; The Poll Tax and the Land Tax; Obedience [to Allāh];¹⁶³ Proof of Miracles; Menstruation; Al-'Umrah.¹⁶⁴

Makkah and the Sacred Enclosure; Marriage of Slaves (Mamālik); What Is Disliked about (from) an Assembly among Them; Stories of Sin;¹⁶⁵ Crime of Slaves and Crime against Them; Crime of the Foreigner; Ordinances; Conditions; Blood Money for an Embryo; Wealth;¹⁶⁶ Encouragement for Marriage; Persons Equal and Socially Equivalent and Testimonies in [Connection with] Marriage; Ransom of Captives and Defrauding of Plunder;¹⁶⁷ Rewarding of Combatants; Fighting the Idolaters; The Holy War; The Prophets and the Imams;¹⁶⁸ Executors of a Will.

Treating with Tact (Dissimulation); Indications of the Imams; Fasting and Expiations; Combining Two Prayers; Places of Worship [Mosques]; Sins (Crimes); The Obligation for Obedience of the 'Ulamā; Charity according to (Other than) What Is Prescribed; The ¹⁶¹ This title is given in Arabic by Flügel and MS 1934 as Al-Dayn wa-al-Hawālah wa-al-Hawālah. The second word might mean "tribute" instead of "undertaking responsibility." The Tonk MS has Al-Dayn wa-al-Hawālah wa-al-Qaffālah ("The Debt, the Commission, and the Returning").

¹⁶² Instead of Pious Endowments (Al-Aḥbas), the Tonk MS has Species (Al-Ajnās).

¹⁶³ See n. 16.

¹⁶⁴ The lesser pilgrimage to Makkah; see "Umra," Enc. Islam, IV, 1016.

¹⁶⁵ MS 1934 lacks consonant signs. Flügel has Jazāfāt al-Khaṭā ("Estimates of Error") and the Tonk MS gives Khurāfāt al-Khaṭā ("Stories of Sin").

¹⁶⁶ Flügel has Al-Ghaybah, which would imply abstinence from all but God; see 'Alī b. 'Uthmān, p. 248. MS 1934 has Al-Ghuniyah ("Wealth").

¹⁶⁷ Flügel has al-ghulūl ("defrauding of plunder"); MS 1934 gives the same word without consonant marks, whereas the Tonk MS has al-'ulūj ("infidels").

Ka'bah; Whipping the Drinker;¹⁶⁹ What It Is Lawful for a Pilgrim to Kill;¹⁷⁰ Obligations of the Pilgrimage; Hidden Meanings in Reading of the Qur'ān (Bāṭin al-Qirā'āt); The Garden and the Fire [Heaven and Hell]; Hunting; Sacrificial Victims; Suckling Children; Temporary Marriage.

Preparing (Smoothing) Property; Wills; Inheritances; Beneficence and the Free Gift; Good Qualities of Character; The Rights of Brothers; The Oaths; Vows; Lineage and Relationship (Walā); Asking for Permission; Social Recreation of Women; Witnesses; Conditions; The Oath with the Witness; Manumission and Registration [of a Slave]; Aversion and Divorce;¹⁷¹ Acts of Kindness; Selections and Choice; Al-'Idad;¹⁷² Al-Zihār; Al-Īla; Al-Li'ān; Al-Raj'ah.

The Attribute and the Oneness; Prayer for the Imams; Refutation of Whoever Fasts and Then Breaks the Fast before Seeing the New Moon; Clothing; Robes; The Inmate of 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn [Zayn al-'Ābidīn]; He Who Loathes Marriage;¹⁷³ Confirmation for Wiping of the Two Feet;¹⁷⁴ Answers to Questions Coming from a Number of Countries; The Fast of the Sunnah and of Supererogation;¹⁷⁵ Ramifications (Derivatives) of the Ordinance of Fasting; Knowledge of the Explanation;¹⁷⁶ Cutting Off [the Hand] and Robbery;¹⁷⁷ Battles;

¹⁶⁹ The Sunnite law prescribed eighty lashes and the Shī'ī forty; see Gaudefroy-Denomy, Muslim Institutions, p. 156.

¹⁷⁰ See Qur'ān 5:96 ff.

¹⁷¹ This title and the others which follow seem to deal with marriage and divorce, although the two which immediately follow may be devoted to more general topics.

¹⁷³ Both Ṭūsī, p. 318, and Flügel have He Who Loathes Marriage. MS 1934 omits "marriage" (al-mumākahah).

¹⁷⁴ See Qur'ān 5:7 (8); Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, I, 49.

¹⁷⁵ See "Ṣawm," Enc. Islam, IV, 196. "Fast of the Sunnah" refers to the fast required by the Qur'ān.

¹⁷⁶ See Qur'ān 55:4 (3).

¹⁷⁷ See Qur'ān 5:41 (40).

Al-Marwah;¹⁷⁸ Revelation; Excellencies of the Qur'ān; Ablution; The Fifth;¹⁷⁹ Rare Forms (Unusual Anecdotes); Day and Night; Abridgment of "Day and Night."

Water for [Ritual] Ablution; Adultery and Chastity; Ritual Cleansing;¹⁸⁰ Ablution with Earth (Sand); Ritual Purification of Clothing; Prayer of the Settlement (al-Ḥaḍar); Prayer of the Journey; The Love of Guardians (Executors); Places of Worship [mosques]; Abridgment of Ritual Purifications; Beginning of (Introduction to) the Ordinance of Prayer; Clothing for Prayer; Supererogatory Prayers of the Daytime; The Times of al-Zuhr and al-'Aṣr;¹⁸¹ The Call to Prayer; Ordinances of Prayer; Neglect;¹⁸² Prayer of the Sick; Friday Prayer; Obligatory and Voluntary Prayer; Prayer for the Two Feasts;¹⁸³ Prayer of Fear; Prayer of the Eclipse of the Sun;¹⁸⁴ Prayer for Rain; Prayer on a Ship; Washing of the Dead; Lamentations (Mourning);¹⁸⁵ Prayer for Funerals; The Beginning.¹⁸⁶

What He [al-'Ayyāshī] Compiled from the Traditions of the Common People

The Life of Abū Bakr;¹⁸⁷ The Life of 'Umar; The Life of 'Uthmān; The Life of Mu'āwiyah; Measures of What Is Good; The Evident.

¹⁷⁸ This may mean "manliness," or refer to the hill at Makkah called al-Marwah. See Hitti, Arabs, p. 133; "as-Ṣafā," Enc. Islam, IV, 51.

¹⁷⁹ This refers to the fifth part of the spoil assigned to the Prophet; see Qur'ān 8: 41 (40).

¹⁸⁰ Al-istinjā' is ablution, especially after a bowel movement; al-tayammum is ablution with sand when water is not available. The body and clothing had to be purified if contaminated, as by blood, urine, or semen. See "Istindjā," Enc. Islam, II, 562; "Tayammum," IV, 708.

¹⁸¹ These were the noon and afternoon prayers.

¹⁸² The Tonk MS has what is evidently a mistake for this title and adds another title, The Night.

¹⁸³ 'Īd al-Fiṭr, at the end of Ramaḍān, and 'Īd al-Aḍḥā, when sheep are sacrificed on the pilgrimage.

¹⁸⁴ Tūṣī, p. 320, and Flügel add "and eclipse of the moon."

¹⁸⁵ Tūṣī, p. 320, and Flügel repeat the title Sins (Al-Ma'āthim), given in the fifth paragraph of this list, whereas MS 1934 and the Tonk MS give Lamentations (Al-Ma'ātim).

¹⁸⁶ Tūṣī, p. 320, has Al-Badā', MS 1934 and Flügel give Al-Badā', while the Tonk MS has Al-Badāyah ("The Beginning").

¹⁸⁷ Needless to say, these first four titles were the lives of the first three and the fifth caliphs.

Haydar [ibn Muḥammad ibn Nu'aym] mentioned that his books numbered two hundred and eight, from which total twenty-seven books are left.

Ibn Bābawayh

His name was 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn Mūsā al-Qummī and he was one of the jurists and trustworthy authorities of the Shī'ah. I have read what was written in the handwriting of his son, Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn 'Alī [ibn al-Ḥusayn] on the back of a section [of a manuscript]: "For so-and-so, the son of so-and-so, I have sorted out the books of my father, 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn, and they number two hundred. My own books number eighteen."¹⁸⁸

Ibn al-Junayd

Abū 'Alī Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn al-Junayd lived near to our own time and was one of the leaders of the Imāmīyah sect of the Shī'ah.¹⁸⁹ Among his books there were:

The Light of Certain Belief and the Triumph of Those with the Knowledge;¹⁹⁰ The Discrimination of One Who Knows and [in] the Sorting-Out of Counterfeit; Scriptures,¹⁹¹ which was a refutation of the apostates; Gardens of Holiness, about the precepts which he chose for himself; Awakening the Heedless with Divine Knowledge; Deriving the Desired from a Variety of Sermons; Flames Burning for Deceiving Devils,¹⁹² in which he refuted Abū al-Qāsim ibn al-Baqqāl al-Mutawassīṭ.

Understanding the Sources of Court Decisions, following the course of the epistles of al-Ṭabarī;¹⁹³ Eradication of Passion from the Hearts of

¹⁸⁹ This scholar must be distinguished from the great mystic al-Junayd, surnamed Abū al-Qāsim.

¹⁹⁰ Compare these titles with Tūṣī, pp. 268–69, sect. 592, to note the variations.

¹⁹¹ The Tonk MS has The Scriptures and the Lights (Al-Asfār wa-al-Anwār). In MS 1934 and the Flügel edition the word translated "apostate" is al-murtaddah, which may be a proper name.

¹⁹² Tūṣī, p. 268, sect. 592, has "tongues" instead of "devils."

¹⁹³ Tūṣī, ibid., ends with "al-Ṭabarī," but Flügel and MS 1934 add "to his secretaries," while the Tonk MS adds "to himself."

the Brothers, about the meaning of the book "Wealth";¹⁹⁴ The Holiness of al-Ṭūr and the Fountain of Light, about the meaning of prayer for the Prophet;¹⁹⁵ Refutation of Whoever Allows Abrogation of Whatever Has Completed His [Allāh's] Law and Glorified His Benefits,¹⁹⁶ about the beautiful literary style of the language of the Arabs and their allusions to their desires, dealing with the meaning of allusions regarding things for which the common people and others besides them do not know the reasons.¹⁹⁷

He also wrote many other books, among which there were:

Rendering of Judicial Decisions by the Shī'ah—it is a large book, with about twenty chapters, arranged like the lengthy legal books; Al-Aḥmadī, about Muḥammadan law; The Way of Happiness for People of Good Fortune; a catalogue of his books, compiled by him section by section.¹⁹⁸

Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn 'Alī ibn Bābawayh¹⁹⁹

Among his books there was Guiding to the Right Road. His books amounted to about three hundred. A catalogue of the names of his books is extant.

Abū Sulaymān Dā'ūd ibn Abī Zayd

He was one of the people of Naysābūr, where he lived in al-Najjārīn on Sikkat Ṭarkhān, in the house of Sakhtawayh. He was one of the Shī'ah handing down quotations who was known ¹⁹⁴ The word translated as "eradication" (al-rān) is found in Flügel and on the margin of MS 1934. "Wealth" (al-ghunyah) is taken from MS 1934. Al-Ṭūsī (see n. 190), Flügel, and the Tonk MS give instead al-ghaybah, which probably refers to absence of all but thoughts of Allāh; see 'Alī b. 'Uthmān, p. 248.

¹⁹⁵ Al-Ṭūr is the Arabic name for Mount Sinai; see Qur'ān 52:1; Yāqūt, Geog., III, 558; "al-Ṭūr," Enc. Islam, IV, 868. The Tonk MS omits this name.

¹⁹⁶ Al-Ṭūsī (see n. 190) ends with the word "abrogating." Instead of "His benefits" the last words may be "its benefits."

¹⁹⁷ MS 1934, unlike Flügel, makes it clear that this description is composed as one sentence.

¹⁹⁹ Flügel and MS 1934 have only "Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn 'Alī. Among his books there was Guiding." The extra material comes from the Tonk MS.

for the veracity of his tongue. He was one of the companions of 'Alī ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Alī, [al-'Askarī] with whom may Allāh be well pleased. Among his books there were:

Guidance; Refutation of the Rāfiḍah.²⁰⁰

Al-Jalūdi

Abū Aḥmad 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Yaḥyā ibn Aḥmad ibn 'Isā al-Jalūdi was one of the great men of the Imāmīyah sect of the Shī'ah and of those who quoted the old traditions and biographies. I have mentioned his books about biography in their place, in the chapter about historians and genealogists. Among his books about the law there were:

He Who Is Guided and He Who Is Seeking Guidance; Temporary Marriage and What Happens When Dissolving It.²⁰¹

Abū al-Ḥasan

His name was Muḥammad ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Yūsuf ibn Aḥmad ibn Yūsuf al-Kātib and his birth was during the year two hundred and eighty-one [A.D. 894/95] at al-Ḥasanīyah.²⁰² Publicly he endorsed the school of al-Shāfi'i, but secretly he held the opinions of the Imāmīyah [sect] of the Shī'ah. He was skilled in the law of both schools. I am mentioning his books based on the code of al-Shāfi'i in their proper place. Among his books based on the Shī'i code there were:

Unveiling the Veil; Preparation; Al-'Iddah;²⁰³ Examining (Observing); Dissolution of the 'Abbāsīyah;²⁰⁴ Place of Killing;²⁰⁵ The Beneficial in the Ḥadīth; The Way.

²⁰¹ The versions vary in giving the word translated as "dissolving," but the meaning seems to be clear.

²⁰² Al-Ḥasanīyah may be the town listed by Yāqūt, Geog., II, 270.

²⁰³ See n. 172.

²⁰⁴ This may refer to the regime of the Banū al-'Abbās caliphs, or to their semi-ruined palace; see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 600.

²⁰⁵ Ṭūsī, p. 264, sect. 586, and the Tonk MS give al-maqtal ("place of killing"), which is probably more correct than al-mu'tall ("infirm"), given by Flügel.

Al-Ṣafwānī

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Qudā'ah al-Ṣafwānī was an uneducated man whom I met during the year three hundred and forty-six [A.D. 957/58]. He was a tall, thin, and well-dressed man who pretended that he could not read or write, but a reliable authority told me that he only feigned this. He died in the year ———. Among his books there were:

Investigation and Proof; The Humankind of the World (Affability of the Scholar); Day and Night; The Precious Object of Him Who Seeks and the Thing Sought after by Him Who Desires; Temporary Marriage and Its Dissolving, with a Refutation of Anyone Who Forbids It; Friendship for the Family of the Apostle and Mention of the Hatreds of Their Enemies.²⁰⁶

Ibn al-Ja'ābī al-Qāḍī

He was Abū Bakr 'Amr ibn Muḥammad ibn Salīm ibn al-Barā', known as al-Ja'ābī, one of the most excellent of the Shī'ah. He went to Sayf al-Dawlah,²⁰⁷ becoming attached to him and serving him exclusively. He died during the year ———. Among his books there was Mention of the Men of Learning and Virtue, Who Cherished Love for the Commander of the Faithful, 'Alī, for Whom May There Be Peace, with an Explanation about This and Mention, Also, of Something from the Traditions about Him.²⁰⁸

Abū Bishr Aḥmad ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Aḥmad al-'Ammī

He lived near to our own time. He took dictation from al-Jalūdī, and died after the year fifty [A.H. 350: A.D. 961]. Among his books there was Proof of the Prophets, Guardians,²⁰⁹ and Saints.

²⁰⁶ Ṭūsī, p. 271, sect. 595, gives this title in a form different from that of the other versions. He has aḥwāl, meaning "states" or "conditions," among other things, instead of aḥān, here translated as "hatreds."

²⁰⁷ The Tonk MS adds ibn Ḥamdān.

²⁰⁸ The epithet for 'Alī is taken from MS 1934, which is probably correct. Flügel gives a different epithet and the Tonk MS has a variation at the end of the title; both variations are unimportant.

²⁰⁹ This probably refers to the Shī'ī imams, who guarded the divine right to rule and the special knowledge for interpretation of the law inherited from 'Alī.

Ibn al-Mu'allim Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Nu'mān

He belongs to our own time. With him there culminates leadership among his associates of the Imāmīyah [sect] of the Shī'ah, in connection with law, theology, and ancient traditions. He was born during the year three hundred and thirty-eight [A.D. 949/50]. Among his books there are something less than two hundred books, large and small, with a well-known and noted catalogue of their names, among which there are:²¹⁰

The Required (Al-Muqtaḍā), about the law; The Supports (Al-Arkān), also about the law; The Complete (Al-Kāmil); Clarification (Al-Idāh); Uncovering (Al-Ifḍāh); Giving Satisfaction (Al-Iqnā'); The Unique Individual (Al-Fard); Refutation of Ibn 'Abbād, concerning the imamate; Guidance (Al-Irshād); an epistle to his son, which was not completed; Refutation of 'Alī ibn 'Isā, about the imamate; Refutation of Ibn Qutaybah, concerning narrative and what is made clear; Fountains and Good Works (Al-'Uyūn wa-al-Maḥāsin); Confirming Judicial Decisions (Taqrīr al-Aḥkām).

Sources of the Law (Uṣūl al-Fiqh); Refutation of al-Jāhiz, regarding the excellence of the Mu'tazilah; Refutation of [Ja'far] Ibn Ḥarb, about the imamate; Refutation of Ibn al-Ikshīd; The Improvement (Making Beneficial) of the Light (Taṣliḥ al-Nūr); about the judicial decisions of the public (ahl al-jumlah); The Explanation, with a refutation of Quṭrub concerning exegesis of the glorious Qur'ān; Refutation of Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'ī, concerning exegesis of the Qur'ān; Sayings (Al-Qālāt); Chief Questions and Noblest Arguments (Ru'ūs al-Masā'il wa-Aṭrāf al-Dalā'il); Making Easy (Al-Tamhīd), about the exegesis of the glorious Qur'ān; The Conquering (Al-Intiṣār); Examining (Al-Istibṣār).

A Varied Group of the Shī'ah Whose Schools of Thought Are Not Known

Abū Ṭālib 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Ya'qūb al-Anbārī

He lived at Wāsiṭ and it is said that he was a Shī'ī of the Nāwū-sīyah [sect].²¹¹ Būbāsh ibn al-Ḥasan, [surnamed] Abū al-Qāsim, ²¹⁰ The list of books which follows is only given in the Tonk MS, which is so difficult to read that the titles may not be given with entire accuracy.

²¹¹ Ṭūsī, p. 186, sect. 400, gives al-Nāwūsiyah; Shahrastānī (Haarbrücker), Part I, p. 190, has al-Nāwisiyah; MS 1934 and Flügel give al-Bābūshīyah; and the Tonk MS has al-Bānūshīyah.

told me that he wrote one hundred and forty books and epistles, among which there were:

The Explanation, concerning the true state of man; The Clear, about knowledge of religion; The Imamate.

Al-Ja'fari

He was related to the doctrines²¹² of Ja'far al-Ṣādiq, with whom may Allāh be well pleased. His name was 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Muḥammad and with him there was associated the group known as the Ja'fariyah. Among his books there were:

The Imamate; Virtues.

²¹² "Doctrines" (madhāhib) is taken from the Tonk and 1934 MSS. Flügel gives the singular form, madhab.

The Sixth Part

*of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars among the ancients and moderns who composed books, with the names of the books which they composed. The composition of Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Nadīm, known as Abū al-Faraj ibn Abī Ya'qūb al-Warrāq.*¹

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Sixth Chapter of the book Al-Fihrist, in eight sections, with accounts of the scholars and the books which they composed—accounts of the jurists.

The First Section

with accounts of the adherents of Mālik and the names of the books which they composed.

Account of Mālik

Mālik ibn Anas ibn Abī 'Āmir was from Ḥimyar, but counted as one of the Banū Taym ibn Murrah, a branch of the Quraysh, who cared for him for three years.² He was very light in color, to the extent of blondness, tall, large-headed, and bald. He wore fine 'Adan (Aden) clothes, shaved his moustache close, and did not dye his white hair.

² For the great Ḥimyar Tribe of South Arabia, see "Ḥimyar," Enc. Islām, II, 310. For the Banū Taym, see Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 33 bottom.

He went to the mosque, attended prayers, visited the sick, and administered justice. Later, however, he stopped [attending] sessions at the mosque and prayed in his own home. He also gave up following funerals, for which he was blamed, but he said not everyone could give his excuse.³

Accusation was maliciously brought against him to Jā'far ibn Sulaymān, the governor of al-Madīnah, who was told, "He does not consider your appointment to be valid." So he [the governor] summoned him, stripped him, and beat him with whips.⁴ Then they stretched him until his shoulder was dislocated, seriously injuring him. But after that he continued to hold a high and exalted position, as though the blows were an adornment to him.

He was one of the righteous servants of Allāh, the legal authority of al-Ḥijāz, and during his time its intellectual leader. He died during the year one hundred and seventy-nine [A.D. 795/96], when he was eighty-five years old. He was buried in the Baqī'.⁵ Among his books there were:

The Level Path (Al-Muwaffā'); his epistle to al-Rashīd, which was quoted by Abū Bakr ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz, who was a descendant of 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, with whom may Allāh be well pleased.

The Adherents of Mālik Who Learned from Him and Quoted Him⁶ Al-Qa'nabī

His name was 'Abd Allāh ibn Muṣlimah ibn Qa'nab al-Ḥārithī, and he was surnamed Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān. He quoted Mālik in connection with his sources of the law and [the book] The Level Path (Al-Muwaffā').⁷ He died during the year two hundred and twenty-one [A.D. 836], and was a reliable and righteous man.

³ This probably means that when he grew too old to follow funerals, he said that not everybody had the excuse that he had, referring to old age.

⁴ These may have been rawhide scourges or rods of bamboo or some similar material. See also "Mālik ibn Anas," Enc. Islam, III, 206.

⁵ This was Baqī' al-Gharqad, the cemetery of al-Madīnah. See Yāqūt, Geog., I, 703.

⁷ As the system of medieval education did not encourage new ideas, most of the scholars quoted the great masters, writing commentaries about their works, rather than initiating new opinions of their own.

'Abd Allāh ibn Wahb

He quoted from the books and ordinances of Mālik, including his The Level Path (Al-Muwaffā'), and was upright and reliable.

Ma'n ibn 'Isā al-Quzzāz

He was one of the most respected of the adherents of Mālik, under whom he studied and whose books and compositions he quoted.

Dā'ūd ibn Abī Dhanbar and His Son, Sa'īd

They both quoted Mālik, Dā'ūd being a reliable authority.

Abū Bakr [ibn 'Abd Allāh] and Ismā'il, the Sons of Abū Uways

Mughīrah ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Ḥarsī

'Abd al-Malik ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Salamah

He was called al-Mājashūn. Sukaynah, the daughter of al-Ḥusayn, for both of whom [father and daughter] may there be peace, nicknamed Abū Salamah with this name, al-mājashūn, which is a dye used at al-Madīnah. Being one of the most respected followers of Mālik, he wrote books about the law. Among them he compiled a large book, which included ———.

'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam al-Miṣrī

He quoted Mālik in his book, The Sunnah, about the law.

'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn al-Qāsim

He was an Egyptian who quoted Mālik, learning from him.

Ashhab ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz

He was an Egyptian, who quoted Mālik.

Al-Layth ibn Sa'd

He was one of the followers of Mālik and a member of his school [of law], but he later had opinions of his own. He corresponded with Mālik, asking him questions. His books about [the method of] personal opinion were:

History; Questions, about the law.

Ibn al-Mu'adhdhal

He was 'Abd al-Ṣamad ibn Ghaylān al-Miṣrī.⁸ He studied under 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Mājashūn, whereas Ismā'īl ibn Ishāq al-Qāḍī learned from Ibn al-Mu'adhdhal. Ibn al-Mu'adhdhal also studied with 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn al-Qāsim and 'Abd Allāh ibn Wahb. Ibn al-Mu'adhdhal died ———. His books were: ———.

Ishāq ibn Ḥammād, Abū Ismā'īl

He died during the year two hundred and seventy-five [A.D. 888/89].

Account of Ismā'īl ibn Ishāq al-Qāḍī and His Son

They both followed the code of Mālik. Ismā'īl ibn Ishāq ibn Ismā'īl ibn Ḥammād ibn Zayd ibn Dirham, surnamed ———, was the person who explained the legal system of Mālik, causing it to become widespread. He argued about it, writing books and calling people's attention to it, making them enthusiastic about it.

He was virtuous, a legal authority endowed with superior qualities, and a judge. Ismā'īl ibn Ishāq died during the year two hundred and eighty-two [A.D. 895/96], Wednesday night, the seventh before the end of Dhū al-Ḥijjah [last Muslim month]. Among his books there were:

Judicial Decisions of the Qur'ān, a large book; Terrors of the Resurrection, about three hundred leaves; Al-Mabsūṭ (Spread Out, Cheerful); Proofs of the Qur'ān; Witnesses of (According to) "The Level Path" (Al-Muwaṭṭā'); Raids; Refutation of Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan, which he did not finish.⁹

Ḥammād ibn Ishāq

He was the brother of Ismā'īl [ibn Ishāq], and an authority on the law. Among his books there were: ———.

⁸ This name is in the Tonk MS, but not in the other texts. The name which follows, 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Mājashūn, is not listed in the Biog. Index, as it evidently is in an abbreviated form. It very likely is intended to be the great-grandson of a man named al-Mājashūn; see 'Abd al-Malik ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn 'Abd Allāh in the Biog. Index. Or perhaps it is meant to be the grandson of al-Mājashūn. See Biog. Index, 'Abd al-'Azīz, and also "Mālik ibn Anas," Enc. Islam, III, 208.

⁹ This must have been Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan al-Shaybanī, who lived two generations earlier than Ismā'īl and followed Abū Ḥanīfah rather than Mālik.

Ibrāhīm ibn Ḥammād ibn Ishāq

He was of the stock of his brother, and belonged to the school of law of Mālik. He was surnamed Abū Ishāq. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Refutation of al-Shāfi'i; Funerals; The Holy War; Indications of Prophecy.

Muḥammad ibn al-Jahm, surnamed Abū Bakr

He followed the code of Mālik, from whom he learned about the law. Among his books there were:

Exposition of the Short Abridgment of ['Abd Allāh] ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam; Refutation of Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan, completing the book of Ismā'īl ibn Ishāq.

Abū Ya'qūb al-Rāzī

He was a jurist, appointed to administer the judiciary of al-Ahwāz. His [other] compositions are not known, but he did write Questions.

Abū al-Faraj al-Mālikī

He was 'Umar ibn Muḥammad, who belonged to the school [of law] of Mālik. He lived close to our own time, dying during the year three hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 942/43]. He was born in the year ———. Among his books there were:

The Inclusive, about the law; The Shining, about the sources of the law.

Ibn Massāb

His name was ——— and he wrote marginal notes.

'Abd al-Ḥamīd ibn Sahl

He followed the code of Mālik, and was a judge and one of the associates of Ismā'īl ibn Ishāq. Among his books there were:

Compilation of the Ordinances; the large Abridgment of the Law; the small Abridgment.

Al-Abharī

He was Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Šāliḥ al-Abharī. He was born at Abhar in the region of al-Jabal, during the year two hundred and seventy-eight [A.D. 891/92]. He died on Saturday, the fifth of Shawwāl [tenth Muslim month], during the year three hundred and seventy-five [A.D. 985/86]. Among his books there were:

The Small Exposition of the Book of [ʿAbd Allāh] ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam [al-Misrī]; The Large Exposition of the Book of Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam;¹⁰ Refutation of al-Muzanī, concerning thirty questions about ——— of al-Madīnah; the delightful book about Sources of the Law; The Superiority of al-Madīnah over Makkah.

Ghulām al-Abharī

He was Abū Jaʿfar ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Abharī, Ghulām Abū Bakr. He died ———. Among his books there were: Questions of Disagreement; Refutation of Ibn 'Ulayyah, seventy questions which he did not complete, about the questions of al-Muzanī.

Al-Qayrawānī

He is 'Abd Allāh ibn Abī Zayd al-Qayrawānī, who follows the code of Mālik and is one of the most excellent men of our time. Among his books there are:

The Derived Classification; a book which he has called The Abridgment, embracing nearly fifty thousand questions; Rare Forms in the Law.

¹⁰ This was Abū Ibrāhīm al-Muzanī, an Egyptian jurist who was a follower of al-Shāfiʿī rather than Mālik.

Abū Ḥanīfah

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Second Section of the Sixth Chapter

of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed; accounts of Abū Ḥanīfah and his 'Irāqī adherents, adherents of [the method of] personal opinion.¹

The name of Abū Ḥanīfah was al-Nu'mān ibn Thābit ibn Zūṭī. He was a silk worker at al-Kūfah. Zūṭī was one of the protégés of Taym Allāh ibn Tha'labah from Kābul. It is also said that he was a protégé of the Banū Qafal.² He was one of the second generation who had met a number of the Companions.³ He was a pious and ascetic person, as was also his son Ḥammād [ibn al-Nu'mān]. Among his sons there was Ḥammād, surnamed Abū Ismā'il, who died at al-Kūfah. The sons of Ḥammād were Abū Ḥayyān, Ismā'il, 'Uthmān, and 'Umar.⁴ Ismā'il ibn Ḥammād administered the judiciary of al-Baṣrah for al-Ma'mūn.

² For Taym Allāh, see Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 48, and "Taimallāh," Enc. Islam, IV, 623. For Kābul, see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 220. The Banū Qafal was probably a local tribe.

³ Al-ṯābi'ūn were the "second generation," coming after al-Šaḥābah, Muḥammad's Companions, who followed him from Makkah to al-Madīnah.

⁴ Ismā'il is the only one of Ḥammād's sons listed in the Biog. Index.

A poet, whom I believe was Musāwir al-Warrāq, in praising Abū Ḥanīfah said:

If some day people measure us by rare legal interpretations,
We shall give them as a true standard the legacy of the system of Abū Ḥanīfah.

If a jurist hears of it, he remembers it,
Setting it in ink in his own manuscript.

One of the authorities on the Ḥadīth, 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Mubārak, said:

There adorned the land and those in it the Imam of the Muslims, Abū
Ḥanīfah,
With his Ḥadīth and his legal knowledge of the Ḥadīth, like the verses of the Psalms in the Scripture.
Among the Easterners and Westerners and at al-Kūfah there is none equal to him.
I saw that those finding fault with him were foolish, opposed to the truth and weak in argument.⁵

Abū Ḥanīfah died during the year one hundred and fifty [A.D. 767] at the age of seventy. He was buried in the Cemetery of the Khayzurān, on the East Bank in 'Askar al-Mahdī.⁶ Al-Ḥasan ibn 'Umārah prayed for him [at his funeral].

Ibn Abī Khaythamah quoted this [preceding paragraph] from Sulaymān ibn Abī Shaykh. Among his [Abū Ḥanīfah's] books there were:

The Greatest Book of the Law; his epistle to al-Bustī; The Learner and the Taught, which was quoted by Muqātil; Refutation of the Qadariyah.⁷

Learning was his ingathering, land and sea, east and west, far and near. May Allāh be well pleased with him.

⁵ On the margins of MS 1934 there are a number of corrections, in addition to a lengthy note which is not part of the original text.

⁶ This quarter of Baghdad called 'Askar al-Mahdī is better known as al-Ruṣāfah. The cemetery was in East Baghdad. See Le Strange, Baghdad, pp. 42, 189, 191, and Coke, Baghdad, p. 41. Ibn Abī Khaythamah in the sentence which follows was probably Aḥmad ibn Zuhayr.

⁷ The Tonk MS, which omits several titles, adds "Al-Irjā'", ('Postponing'), which was refuted by al-Bardha'i."

Ḥammād ibn Abī Sulaymān

He was a protégé of Ibrāhīm ibn Abī Mūsā al-Ash'arī and a judge from whom Abū Ḥanīfah learned the law⁸ and the Ḥadīth. He died during the year one hundred and twenty [A.D. 738].

Account of Rabī'ah al-Ra'i

He was Rabī'ah ibn Abī 'Abd al-Raḥmān, the name of Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān being Farūkh. He was one of the protégés of the family of al-Munkadir of the Taym Tribe,⁹ and was surnamed Abū 'Uthmān. He was a master of literary style and an orator. When he engaged in conversation, one [the listener] became wearied and bored. It is said that one day while he was speaking an Arabian was with him. Rabī'ah asked him, "What does muddle-brained mean?" The Arabian replied, "What you are like today."¹⁰

He died during the year one hundred and thirty-six [A.D. 753/54] at al-Anbār, in the Hāshimī city, which Abū al-'Abbās [al-Saffāh] built.¹¹ Although he learned from Abū Ḥanīfah, he died before him. We do not know of anything which he wrote. May Allāh be merciful to him and pardon him.¹²

Zufar

He was Abū al-Hudhayl Zufar ibn al-Hudhayl ibn Qays of the Banū 'Anbar.¹³ He died at al-Baṣrah during the year one hundred and fifty-eight [A.D. 774/75], outliving Abū Ḥanīfah. He studied the law, and [the method of] personal opinion won his support. His father, al-Hudhayl, administered Iṣbahān. Among his books there were: ———.

⁸ The Tonk MS has al-ra'y instead of al-fiqr.

⁹ See Qutaybah, Mā'arif, pp. 33 bottom, 34 top.

¹⁰ "Arabian" probably refers to a tribesman. Flügel misplaces the word. At the end of the sentence, the Tonk MS has, "What I am like today."

¹¹ Al-Saffāh made al-Anbār his capital between A.D. 750 and 754, before Baghdad was built; see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 367-68.

¹² Only the Flügel edition includes this sentence.

¹³ A branch of the Taym; see Durayd, Geneal., p. 124 top.

Ibn Abī Laylā

He was Muḥammad ibn ‘Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Abī Laylā, the name of Abū Laylā being Bashshār.¹⁴ He was a descendant of Uḥayḥah ibn al-Julāḥ, but it is said that his lineage was unsound. ‘Abd Allāh ibn Shubramah said, in lampooning him:

How can they expect you to give a judicial decision
When you are not sure of judgment about yourself?
You suppose that you are descended from Ibn al-Julāḥ,
But far removed is your claim from your origin.

He administered justice for the Banū Umayyah and descendants of al-‘Abbās [Umayyads and ‘Abbāsids]. Even before the time of Abū Ḥanīfah he gave legal interpretations (fatwās) according to [the method of] personal opinion. He died during the year one hundred and forty-eight [A.D. 765/66], while he was administering the judiciary for Abū Ja‘far [al-Manṣūr]. Among his books there was Ordinances.

Account of Abū Yūsuf

His name was Ya‘qūb ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Ḥabīb ibn Sa‘d ibn Ḥabtah, Sa‘d being a sayyid of the Banū Ḥabtah.¹⁵ Abū Yūsuf quoted al-‘A‘mash and Hishām ibn ‘Urwah. He was a memorizer of the Ḥadīth,¹⁶ and later became attached to Abū Ḥanīfah, [the method of the] personal opinion winning him over. He administered the judiciary of Baghdād, continuing to do so until he died, during the year one hundred and eighty-two [A.D. 798/99], during the caliphate of al-Rashīd.

He had a son named Yūsuf ibn Abī Yūsuf who was a judge during his father’s lifetime. He died after him, during the year one hundred and ninety-two [A.D. 807/808].

¹⁴ MS 1934 and the Tonk MS have Bashshār, whereas Flügel and Qutaybah, Ma‘ārif, p. 248, give Yassār. Khallikān, II, 84, expresses doubt about the name, which is omitted in the Biog. Index.

¹⁵ A sayyid is used either for a chief or for a descendant of the Prophet. The tribal name Ḥabtah cannot be identified and may not be properly written.

¹⁶ In order to supplement the verses of the Qur’ān for a knowledge of the law, theology, and ritual, it was necessary to use the Ḥadīth, which contains the sayings and precedents of the Prophet. Thus a scholar could earn a living by memorizing the Ḥadīth, in order to teach it and offer it for reference.

The books of Abū Yūsuf about the sources and sayings:¹⁷

Prayer; The Poor Tax; Fasts; Shares of Inheritance; Sellers (Buyers); Ordinances; Trusteeship; Wills; The Hunt and Sacrificial Victims; Forcing and Abstinence.¹⁸

Abū Yūsuf gave dictation which was quoted by Bishr ibn al-Walīd al-Qāḍī, comprising thirty-six books from the material derived from Abū Yūsuf.

Disputes about Land Boundaries; Refutation of Mālik ibn Anas; his epistle about the land tax, to al-Rashīd; Collections, which he composed for Yahyā ibn Khālīd and which included forty chapters mentioning men’s disagreements and the personal opinion (al-ra’y) which he held.

Among Those who Quoted Abū Yūsuf

Mu‘allā ibn Manṣūr al-Rāzī, surnamed Abū Yu‘alā

He quoted his [Abū Yūsuf’s] jurisprudence, sources [of the law], and books. He died at Baghdād during the year two hundred and eleven [A.D. 826/27].

Bishr ibn al-Walīd

He was Abū al-Walīd Bishr ibn al-Walīd al-Kindī, one of the important upholders of [the method of] personal opinion. He was advanced in age, of sure lineage, and self-restrained. He administered the judiciary for al-Ma’mūn. Abū Khālīd al-Muhallabī¹⁹ related:

Umar ibn ‘Isā al-Anīsī, the judge, said to us, “One day, when we were at the court of al-Ma’mūn, there passed by us Ibrāhīm ibn Ghiyāth, whose intimacy al-Ma’mūn had purchased, providing him with a judgeship. Then Bishr said, ‘We have seen an adulterous judge, a judge used for sodomy, and a judge committing sodomy, but now behold us observing a judge who is hired [as a pimp]!’”

He died ———.

¹⁷ In this sentence the word al-uṣūl (“sources”) probably refers to the Qur’ān and the Ḥadīth, while al-amālī (“sayings”) refers to notes and commentaries dictated by leading jurists.

¹⁸ This probably refers to sexual intercourse, and abstinence during menstruation, after divorce, and during the daytime in the month of Ramaḍān.

¹⁹ See Yazīd ibn Muḥammad al-Muhallabī in the Biog. Index.

Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan²⁰

He was surnamed Abū 'Abd Allāh and was a protégé of the Banū Shaybān.²¹ He was born at Wāsiṭ and brought up at al-Kūfah. He studied the Ḥadīth, hearing [the lectures of] Mis'ar ibn Kidām, Mālik ibn Mas'ūd, 'Umar ibn Dharr, al-Awzā'i and al-Thawrī. He attended the sessions (classes) of Abū Ḥanīfah, learning from him and being won over by [the method of] personal opinion. Then he moved to Baghdād, where he lived, and [pupils] heard about the Ḥadīth from him and from him also learned about [the method of] personal opinion.

He moved to al-Raqqah, where al-Rashīd appointed him to administer the judiciary, [but soon] dismissed him. When, however, al-Rashīd went to Khurāsān, he accompanied him. He died at al-Rayy during the year one hundred and eighty-nine [A.D. 804/805], which was the year in which al-Kisā'i died. He was fifty-eight years old.

He lived at Bāb al-Shām on Darb Abū Ḥanīfah, attending his classes and reading his books to him.²² Al-Rāwandī, who wrote the book The Government, was his neighbor on the same street. He used to gather together the Rāwandīyah, sons of the government,²³

²⁰ The Tonk MS inserts, "May Allāh have compassion for him."

²¹ For this tribe, see Durayd, Geneal., p. 210.

²³ For the book The Government, see Chap. III, sect. 1, near n. 203. The Rāwandīyah were 600 tribesmen from Khurāsān, who in A.D. 758/59 went to al-'Irāq, declaring al-Manṣūr to be divine. See Ṭabarī, Annals, Part III, p. 129; Hitti, Arabs, p. 290; Browne, Literary History of Persia, I, 315-16; cf. Mas'ūdī, VI, 26, 54, 58. Evidently some of the Rāwandīyah settled in Baghdād. "Sons of the government" is given as abnā' al-dawlah, both by Flügel and MS 1934. The word abnā' may be badly copied, meant for a form of abāna ("he made clear") signifying that al-Rāwandī explained his book The Government. Both Muḥammad and the Rāwandīyah met for classes in the local mosque and, as the tribesmen were Shi'ī extremists and Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan was orthodox, they took delight in upsetting his lessons.

and he [al-Rāwandī] also planned that on the day when Muḥammad had his class he should come to sit in the mosque and to read it [the book The Government] to them. Then if one of the pupils of Muḥammad read from his books, they [the Rāwandīyah] shouted, silencing him. Muḥammad, therefore, stopped meeting at that mosque and went to the Mu'allaq Mosque, which is at Bāb Darb Asad, where it approaches the Sābāṭ Rūmī.²⁴ Rūmī was a transcriber. It was there, therefore, that the books were read to him.

The books of Muḥammad about the sources [of the law] were:²⁵

Prayer; The Poor Tax; Rites of the Pilgrimage; Rare Forms of (Unusual Anecdotes about) Prayer; Marriage; Divorce; Emancipation and Mothers of Children; Surrender and Sales; the large book, Selling on Commission (Al-Muḍārabah); the small book, Selling on Commission; the large book, Wages (Rentals); the small book, Wages (Rentals); Money Changing; Mortgage; The Option to Purchase or Pre-empt Adjoining Property (Al-Shuf'ah); Menstruation; the large book, Plantations; the small book, Plantations;²⁶ Consultation, that is partnership; Trusteeship; Lending (Borrowing).

Trusteeship; Transfer of a Debt; Security; Conditions; Claim and Proofs; Stratagems; large book, The Licensed (Permitted); small book, The Licensed; Division [of property in a will]; Ransom (Blood Money); Violating Agreements of al-Mudabbir and al-Mukātib;²⁷ Relationship (Al-Walā'); Nonalcoholic Drink; Stealing and Highway Robbery; The Hm̄t and the Sacrificial Victims; Emancipation in Illness; Selling ²⁴ Bāb Darb Asad was very likely the gateway of a street in the bazaar, which was locked at night to keep out thieves. Sābāṭ Rūmī ("Alley of Rūmī") was perhaps the passage leading to where al-Rūmī lived. As there were no textbooks and writing material was scarce, a scholar like Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan would often dictate to his pupils, largely from memory. They would make their own textbooks by taking dictation. Then they would read back to their master what they had written and, if it was correct, he would have a scribe rewrite the material in the form of a composed book. Rūmī was very likely employed to form a book from the notes of the pupils.

²⁵ Compare with the list in Brockelmann, Geschichte, Supplement, I, 289.

²⁷ Khīyanāt is "violating agreements." MS 1934 does not have consonant signs. Flügel gives jinayāt ("iniquities"). Al-mudabbir is one who makes a declaration of freedom for a slave, effective at the time of the master's death. Al-mukātib is a slave who ransoms himself.

on Credit and Debt;²⁸ Denial and Testimony; Pious Endowments and Alms; Oppression (Violation); Houses; The Gift and Alms; Oaths, Vows, and Expiations; Wills.

Calculation of Wills; The Sound; The Hermaphrodite and the Impotent (al-Mafqūd);²⁹ Legal Interpretation by Personal Opinion; Aversion;³⁰ Approval; The Thing Picked Up (Discovered by Accident, The Foundling); The Thing Found and Held in Trust; The Fugitive;³¹ the small Compilation; Sources of the Law; there was also a book by Muḥammad known as The Pilgrimage, which included many chapters;³² The large Compilation; lectures of Muḥammad on the law, which were Al-Kaysāniyāt;³³ Increases; Increases of Increases; Choice; Fortresses (Refuges); Peculiarities;³⁴ Refutation of the People of al-Madīnah; Unusual Anecdotes about Muḥammad, a quotation of Ibn Rustam.

Al-Lu'lu'ī

He was al-Ḥasan ibn Ziyād al-Lu'lu'ī, surnamed Abū 'Alī,³⁵ one of the pupils of Abū Ḥanīfah, who studied under him and listened to him [lecture]. He was a superior man, learned in the doctrines of Abū Ḥanīfah in connection with [the method of] personal opinion. Yaḥyā ibn Ādam said, "I have never seen a jurist greater than al-Ḥasan ibn Ziyād." He died during the year two hundred and four [A.D. 819/20]. Al-Ṭaḥāwī³⁶ said that his books were:

His quoting of "The Unique" (Al-Mujarrad) of Abū Ḥanīfah;³⁷ The Training of a Judge; Peculiarities (Customs); Meaning of the Faith; Expenses; The Land Tax; The Ordinances; Wills.

²⁸ The first word of the title may be al-ʿayan or al-ʿayn, meaning among other things "selling on credit," "ready money," "debt," "high interest." The word translated "debt" is al-dayn.

²⁹ The Tonk and 1934 MSS give The Sound as a separate title. Flügel makes it part of the title which follows.

³⁰ This is probably about forcing against the will in marriage.

³¹ This title probably refers to a slave.

³² MS 1934 omits "many chapters." The Tonk MS places this title and descriptive phrase close to the end of the list.

³³ See Ḥajjī Khalīfah, V, 268. These were lectures dictated by Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan to Sulaymān ibn Sā'id al-Kaysānī.

³⁴ After this title the title of the large book Wages (Rentals) is repeated.

³⁵ MS 1934 leaves a blank for this surname.

³⁶ Probably Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Salāmah.

³⁷ As a pupil, he probably took down this book from dictation and issued it as a completed book edited by himself.

Hilāl ibn Yaḥyā

He was surnamed Abū Bakr and known as Hilāl al-Ra'y. He upheld the legal system of the people of al-'Irāq, and lived at al-Baṣrah, where he died during the year two hundred and forty-five [A.D. 859/60]. Among his books there were:

Pleading (Arraigning) at Court;³⁸ Explanation of the Conditions; Ordinances.

'Isā ibn Abān

Abū Mūsā 'Isā ibn Abān ibn Ṣadaqaḥ was a jurist, rapid in making decisions. It is said that he drew upon Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan [al-Shaybānī] only to a small extent. It is also said that he did not meet with Abū Yūsuf and that the new ideas in connection with which he refuted al-Shāfi'i he took from a book of Sufyān ibn Saḥbān. 'Isā was a virtuous shaykh. He administered justice for ten years, and died during al-Muḥarram [the first Muslim month] in the year two hundred and twenty [A.D. 835]. There prayed for him [at the funeral] Qutham ibn Ja'far ibn Sulaymān.

I have read, written in the handwriting of al-Ḥijāzī:

'Isā ibn Abān ibn Ṣadaqaḥ ibn 'Addī ibn Mardānshāh came from among the people of Fāsā.³⁹ Ṣadaqaḥ was responsible for the currency inspection and tax collection departments during the days of al-Manṣūr, and it was he who gave counsel to al-Manṣūr, blaming him for the leniency of his chamberlains and saying, "Employ men who are tough!" Then al-Manṣūr asked, "Who may they be?" He replied, "Buy a number from al-Yamāmah,⁴⁰ where they bring up foundlings." So he bought them, making them his chamberlains. Among them there was al-Rabī' al-Ḥajīb.

The books of 'Isā ibn Abān were:

The Proofs;⁴¹ Information about the One; The Compilation; Confirmation of Analogy; Legal Interpretation by Personal Opinion.

³⁸ The texts give al-muḥāfirah, but the word is almost certainly meant for al-muḥādarah, which means pleading or arraigning at court.

³⁹ For this town in Persia, see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 891.

⁴⁰ The well-known region of eastern Arabia.

⁴¹ Flügel gives the singular form.

Sufyān ibn Saḥbān

He was one of the upholders of [the method of] personal opinion, a jurist, and a theologian of the Murji'ah. Among his books there were: ———.

Qadīd ibn Ja'far

He was a jurist and one of the upholders of [the method of] personal opinion. He learned from Abū Ḥanīfah and was also a Murji'i. I have never seen any books of his about the law, but [his books] on theology were: ———.

Ibn Samā'ah

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Samā'ah al-Tamīmī. He learned from Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan and was a jurist, with written books and [material about] sources of the law. He died during the year two hundred and thirty-three [A.D. 847/48], having administered the judiciary on the West Side of Baghdād. Among his books there were:

The Training of a Judge; Documents and Judicial Records.

He also quoted the books of Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan, which we have already mentioned.

Al-Jūzajānī

He was Abū Sulaymān al-Jūzajānī, who learned from Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan [al-Shaybānī]. He was pious and devout, an authority on the law and the Ḥadīth. He lived on Darb Asad and studied the books of Muḥammad with him.

I read written in the handwriting of al-Ḥijāzī:

At the time of the rebellion against al-Amīn,⁴² he [al-Jūzajānī] saw a man who passed by rapidly, while a man waving (showing) his sword was running after him, shouting "Seize him!" So they held the fugitive for the pursuer, who overtook him and killed him.⁴³ Then Abū Sulaymān said to them, "Do you know the men?" They replied, "We don't know ⁴² This was when the army of al-Ma'mūn attacked al-Amīn, A.D. 815.

⁴³ Literally, "they took for him he who hastened by and the other overtook him and killed him."

either of them." So he [al-Jūzajānī] said, "Do you seize a man in order to let him be killed?" Then he swore that he would not live with them and moved to Ṭāqāt al-'Akkī,⁴⁴ where Ibn al-Balkhī heard his books [read or dictated]. By the time that the rebellion became quiet, he was established in the quarter. But he went [back] to Darb Asad and bought a house saying, "Today I have become a Baghdādī, for a man who has not lived in a city and acquired a house is not one of its people." Then he said, "'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, may Allāh be well pleased with him,⁴⁵ was a native of al-Kūfah, and 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abbās of Ṭā'if, because they acquired houses in those places."

Abū Sulaymān lived in this quarter until he died, during the year ———. There was nothing which he composed, but he transmitted the books of Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan.⁴⁶

'Alī al-Rāzī

He was surnamed ———. He upheld the legal system of the people of al-'Irāq, being one of their learned men. Among his books there were:

The large book, Questions; the small book, Questions; The Compilation.

Al-Khaṣṣāf

His name was Aḥmad ibn 'Umar ibn Muhayr al-Shaybānī al-Khaṣṣāf, surnamed Abū Bakr. He was a jurist and an expert for division and calculation [of inheritance], and acquainted with the legal systems of his associates. He held a high position under al-Muhtadī, so that the people said that he would revive the regime of Ibn Abī Duwād.⁴⁷

He was chief of the sect of the Jahmīyah and it was also al-Khaṣṣāf who wrote a book about the land tax for al-Muhtadī.

⁴⁴ The first arcade built in Baghdād, north of the Round City; see Le Strange, Baghdad, p. 130; Yāqūt, Geog., III, 489. The name which follows, Ibn al-Balkhī, cannot be identified.

⁴⁵ This pious epithet only appears in the Flügel edition.

⁴⁶ As a pupil he probably took down from dictation or else transcribed the books of his teacher. The text does not indicate when the quotation from al-Ḥijāzī ends.

When al-Muhtadī was assassinated, [the home of] al-Khaṣṣāf was pillaged and it is recorded that some of his books disappeared.⁴⁸

Among his books there was one which he wrote about rites of the pilgrimage which was not given out to the public. He died during the year ———. Among his books there were:

Stratagems;⁴⁹ Wills; large book, Conditions; small book, Conditions; Presenting a Wet Nurse (al-Riḍā') (or the Suckling [al-Raḍḍā']); Documents and Judicial Records; The Training of the Judge; The Land Tax, for al-Muhtadī; Expenditures; Acknowledgment of Inheritors by Mutual Agreement; Al-'Aṣīr,⁵⁰ Its Legal Determinations and Calculations; Expenditures for Close Relations; Judicial Decisions Related to Pious Endowments; Measurement of the Ka'bah, the Mosque, and the Tomb.⁵¹

Ibn al-Thaljī

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Shujā' al-Thaljī, a man outstanding among his contemporary associates. He was a jurist, pious and loyal to his convictions, and it was he who analyzed the legal system of Abū Ḥanīfah, arguing on his behalf and showing his pretexts, while supporting him with the Ḥadīth and making him loved in men's hearts. He was, moreover, one of those who based [judicial decisions] on the Qur'ān, although he upheld the doctrine of the People of Justice and Oneness [the Mu'tazilah].

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I have read written in the handwriting of al-Ḥijāzī:⁵²

Muḥammad ibn Shujā' said, "Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm al-Mus'abī, a friend of mine, related to me [as follows]: 'The Commander of the Faithful summoned me and said to me, "Choose for me among the jurists a man who has written about the Ḥadīth, using it for judicial decisions with ⁴⁸ Al-Muhtadī was assassinated A.D. 870, when Sāmarrā was plundered by the Turkish guards.

⁴⁹ Al-ḥiyal ("stratagems") is probably correct. It refers to illegal methods or frauds.

⁵⁰ This word probably refers to the juice pressed from grapes which was used for distilling and also for making a kind of molasses called dibs.

⁵¹ The Ka'bah was the shrine at Makkah, while "the Mosque and the Tomb" evidently refers to the mosque where the Prophet was buried at al-Madīnah.

⁵² The 1934 and Tonk MSS give a different name, which cannot be identified, so that Flügel may be correct in giving al-Ḥijāzī.

personal opinion (al-ra'y). He must be tall of stature, of pleasant disposition, originating from Khurāsān, and reared in our regime, so that he may serve as advocate for our rule, until I bestow on him a judgeship." "He [Ishāq] continued, 'I said, "I know of no one answering this description other than Muḥammad ibn Shujā', so shall I confer with him about the matter?" He [the Caliph] said, "Do so and, if he consents, bring him to me." [When Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Shujā' was brought to the audience, it was said to him] "It is yours, oh, Abū 'Abd Allāh."⁵³ Then I [Muḥammad ibn Shujā'] replied, "Oh, Emir, I have no need for this, for a judgeship is advantageous for three reasons only: for a person to gain wealth, or honor, or fame. As for me, my wealth is plentiful, for I am rich. Even if the Emir should offer me money to distribute,⁵⁴ and even if I needed something from him, I would not accept it. As for fame, there has already come to me enough of it from the scholars and jurists!"

He died during the year two hundred and fifty-seven, or some say six [A.D. 869/70], on Tuesday the tenth of Dhū al-Ḥijjah [last Muslim month]. Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ṭāhir prayed for him [at the funeral] in the house of Ṭāhirah,⁵⁵ the daughter of 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṭāhir. He was buried in the house in which he had lived. Among his books there were:

The large book, Confirmation of the Traces (al-Āthār); Rare Forms (Unusual Anecdotes); Selling on Commission (Al-Muḍārabah).

Qutaybah ibn Ziyād al-Qāḍī

He was one of the great authorities of his time for the legal systems of the people of al-'Irāq, being skillful in connection with statements and conditions. It was he who wrote the authorization

⁵³ The Arabic does not include the words in brackets, but this seems to give the meaning of the passage. As a follower of Abū Ḥanīfah, Muḥammad ibn Shujā' accepted the doctrine of personal opinion. He also based his legal judgments on the Qur'ānic legal passages and the Ḥadīth, even though as a Mu'tazilī he believed that the Qur'ān was created.

⁵⁴ At the beginning of this passage the 1934 and Tonk MSS omit "judgeship," which is included by Flügel. The word translated "distribute" is in the manuscripts but garbled by Flügel.

⁵⁵ Muḥammad ibn Ṭāhir was probably the great-grandson of Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn, founder of the autonomous dynasty in Khurāsān, and Ṭāhirah was probably his aunt; she is not listed in the Biog. Index. As Muḥammad ibn Shujā' came from Khurāsān, it was appropriate for these members of the family of Ṭāhir to help with the funeral.

for the pious foundation which Aḥmad ibn al-Junayd established, giving him a share in the foundation. Among his books there were: The Conditions, which I saw in its completed form; Documents and Judicial Records, Compacts and Covenants, a large book.

Al-Ṭaḥāwī

He was Abū Ja'far Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Salamah ibn Salāmah ibn 'Abd al-Malik al-Azdī al-Ṭaḥāwī, from one of the villages of Egypt called Ṭaḥā.⁵⁶ He reached the age of eighty, but his beard was more black than white. He was a jurist employing the legal systems of the people of al-'Irāq. During his time he was unique for his learning and asceticism.⁵⁷ It is said that he worked over a book for Aḥmad ibn Ṭūlūn about the marriage of the lawfully owned, in which he made lawful for him marriage of slaves, but Allāh knows the truth about it. He died during the year three hundred and twenty-two [A.D. 934]. Among his books there were: Disagreements among the Jurists—it was a large book, which he did not finish, but he did produce nearly eighty chapters arranged systematically, like books on relationship (al-walā'), so that it is not necessary for us to mention them. In addition to this there were among his books: the large book about Conditions; the small book about Conditions; The Small Abridgment; The Large Abridgment; Commentary on the "Large Compilation" of Muḥammad;⁵⁸ Commentary on the "Small Compilation"; Documents and Judicial Records; Wills; Shares of Inheritance; Explanation of the Confusion in the Ḥadīth of the Apostle of Allāh, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace, about one thousand leaves [in length]; Refutation of the Book "The Untrustworthy," against al-Karābīsī;⁵⁹ Judicial Decisions of the Qur'ān; Explanation of the Meaning of Traces (al-Āthār); The Dogma; a small book, Adjustment between Our Young and Our More Experienced.

'Alī ibn Mūsā al-Qummī

He was one of the famous 'Irāqī jurists and excellent scholars who were authors. He was surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan. He dealt with the books of al-Shāfi'i, refuting them. Among his books there were:

⁵⁶ For this town and his true birthplace, see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 516.

⁵⁷ The Tonk MS adds "and as an authority for the law and the Ḥadīth."

⁵⁸ This was almost certainly Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan al-Shaybānī.

⁵⁹ The translation follows the Tonk and 1934 MSS, as Flügel gives Refutation as one title the The Untrustworthy as a separate following title. For this book, see Chap. V, sect. 3, near n. 21.

A large book, Judicial Decisions of the Qur'ān; Some Matters on Which al-Shāfi'i Disagreed with the People of al-'Irāq, concerning the Judicial Decisions of the Qur'ān; Confirmation of Analogy, Legal Interpretation, and Knowledge of the One [Allāh].⁶⁰

Abū Ḥāzim al-Qāḍī

He was 'Abd al-Ḥamīd ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz, a man of great ability, who derived his learning from the shaykhs of al-Baṣrah. He administered the judiciary at Damascus, al-Kūfah, and al-Karkh. Al-Ṭaḥāwī and al-Dabbās studied under him⁶¹ and Abū al-Ḥasan al-Karkhī became acquainted with him. Among his books there were: Documents and Judicial Records; Shares of Inheritance; The Training of the Judge.

Ibn Mawṣil

He was ———, [a jurist] employing the legal systems of the people of al-'Irāq. Among his books there were:

The large book, Conditions; Compacts and Judicial Records.

Abū Zayd Aḥmad ibn Zayd al-Shurūṭī

He was one of the people of al-'Irāq, among whose books there were:

Compacts; the large book, Conditions; the small book, Conditions.

Yahyā ibn Bakīr

He was from al-'Irāq, and among his books there was Conditions.

Al-Bardha'i

His name was Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥusayn. He was an 'Irāqī jurist with whom Abū al-Ḥasan al-Karkhī studied. He died during the uprising of the Qarāmaṭah,⁶² while he was on the pilgrimage. Among his books there were: ———.

⁶⁰ MS 1934 repeats the name 'Alī al-Rāzī, but it is evidently an error.

⁶¹ Al-Ṭaḥāwī was probably Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Salāmah. As al-Dabbās cannot be identified, the name is not in the Biog. Index. The form in MS 1934 is badly written and may be meant for a different name.

⁶² For the Qarāmaṭah, see the Glossary. Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Bardha'i probably died about A.D. 930, when these rebels attacked Makkah.

Al-Karkhī

Abū al-Ḥasan ‘Ubayd Allāh ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Karkhī, the ‘Irāqī jurist, was a man whose counsel was sought and from whom learning was acquired. The most prominent legal authorities of the period studied under him and he was unique in his time because he was not obliged to defend himself, and was not involved in disputes. His birth was during the year ——— and he died in the year three hundred and forty [A.D. 951/52] during Shā‘ban [eighth Muslim month]. Among his books there were:

Abridgment in the Law; an investigation of drinks and making date wine legal.

Al-Rāzī, Abū Bakr Aḥmad ibn ‘Alī ———

He died on Sunday, the seventh of the first ten days of Dhū al-Ḥijjah [last Muslim month], during the year three hundred and seventy [A.D. 980/81]. Among his books there were:

Commentary on the “Abridgment” of al-Ṭaḥāwī [Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad]; Judicial Decisions of the Qur’ān; Commentary on the “Large Compilation” of Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan, the first manuscript; the delightful book, Rites of the Pilgrimage; Commentary on the “Large Compilation,” the second manuscript.

[Al-Ḥusayn ibn ‘Alī] Abū ‘Abd Allāh al-Baṣrī

Mention of him has already been made in the chapter about theologians. The [books which] he composed about the law were:

Commentary on the “Abridgment” of Abū al-Ḥasan al-Karkhī; Drinks and Making Legal Date Wine; Prohibition of Temporary Marriage; Legality of Prayer in the Persian Language.

Ibn al-Ushmānī

He was an ‘Irāqī, among whose books there was Conditions.

Al-Farḥī

He was an ‘Irāqī, among whose books there was Conditions.

Al-Shāfi‘ī and His Adherents

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Third Section of the Sixth Chapter

of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed, with an account of al-Shāfi‘ī and his adherents.¹

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Nadīm: I read written in the handwriting of Abū al-Qāsim al-Ḥijāzī in the book Penetrating (Inside) Information in History that he was Abū ‘Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Idrīs, a descendant of Shāfi‘ī ibn al-Sā‘ib ibn ‘Ubayd ibn ‘Abd Yazīd ibn Hāshim ibn al-Muṭṭalib ibn ‘Abd Manāf. I also read in his handwriting that he said:

There appeared a man of the Banū Abī Lahab,² of the region of North Africa, who came to Hārūn al-Rashīd accompanied by al-Shāfi‘ī. Then al-Rashīd said to the Lahabī, “Do you brand yourself with this name [that of Abū Lahab]?” He went on, “Which of the two was the more important and influential, my ancestor or yours? You do not know the story of your own ancestor and what his position was.” Then he made him hear about all sorts of disagreeable things with which he might have to deal and it was said that he ordered his imprisonment.³ He then turned to al-Shāfi'ī saying, "What has caused you to go along with him?" He [al-Shāfi'ī] replied, "I am a man who has had hard luck, and therefore I set forth to travel through the country seeking favor, so that is why I accompanied him." Then he [the Caliph] asked al-Faḍl ibn al-Rabī' [the chamberlain] to give him [al-Shāfi'ī] a present, which he did bestow [on him]. Then he [al-Shāfi'ī] lived in the City of Peace [Baghdād].

² See Qutaybah, Ma‘ārif, p. 60.

³ The word for “with which he might have to deal” might be translated in other ways, but this seems to give the meaning. The point of this story is that Abū Lahab was the principal opponent of the Prophet, whereas both the Caliph al-Rashīd and al-Shāfi‘ī were descended from Hāshim, the Prophet’s grandfather, by ancestors loyal to Islām.

Muḥammad ibn Shujā' al-Thaljī said to us, "He used to pass us by, clad like a singer, riding a donkey, wearing a coarse mantle and with his hair curled." He went on to say:

He was attached to Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan for a year, so as to write down his books. They related to us what al-Rabī' ibn Sulaymān quoted from al-Shāfi'ī, who said, "I wrote down for Muḥammad a camel's load of books."⁴

Al-Shāfi'ī was firm in upholding the Shī'ī tenets. One day after a man had asked him a question and he had replied, the man said, "You have misquoted 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, with whom may Allāh be well pleased."⁵ Then he [al-Shāfi'ī] said to him, "Prove this about 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib and I'll put my cheek on the ground and confess I went astray, so as to change my version to what he really said." That same day when there was a gathering of some of the descendants of Abū Ṭālib, he [al-Shāfi'ī] said, "I am not going to speak in a meeting where a single one of them [a single descendant of Abū Ṭālib] is present, because they are the most accurate speakers, having priority and excellence."⁶

He [Muḥammad ibn Shujā'] went on to say, "He went to Egypt during the year two hundred [A.D. 815/16] and dwelt there. Al-Rabī' ibn Sulaymān al-Miṣrī learned from him. Al-Shāfi'ī used to recite poetry." Abū al-Faṭḥ ibn al-Naḥwī said that Abū al-Ḥasan ibn al-Ṣābūnī al-Miṣrī related, "I saw the tomb of Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Shāfi'ī in Egypt between Bayṭar Bilāl and al-Birkatayn. Over it there was a clearly visible board upon which there was written:

⁵ Although al-Shāfi'ī may have been sympathetic with the Shī'ah, he had a legal code different from theirs and did not become involved in their politics.

⁶ The descendants of Abū Ṭālib were members of the Shī'ah, who believed that the only persons with the right to be caliphs were the lineal descendants of 'Alī, the son of Abū Ṭālib. Al-Shāfi'ī felt that these descendants had more accurate traditions about their ancestors than anyone else.

I have accomplished my time and some are pleased
Who are foolish with heedlessness and sleep,
As though my day [of death] was decreed for me,
But there was no [suitable] day for those rejoicing in the affliction of others."⁷

He [al-Shāfi'ī] died during the year two hundred and four [A.D. 819/20] in Egypt. Among his books there were:

Al-Mabsūṭ, about the law. Al-Rabī' ibn Sulaymān and al-Za'frānī quoted it from him. This book includes:⁸ Ritual Purification; Prayer; The Poor Tax; Fasts; The Pilgrimage; Religious Self-Restraint (Seclusion); ———, thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I read written in the handwriting of Ibn Abī Sayf⁹ that this was not his manuscript; The Epistle;¹⁰ Ritual Purification; The Imamate; Facing al-Qiblah; Friday [Prayer]; Prayer of Fear; The Two Feasts [al-Aḍḥā and al-Fiṭr].

Prayer of the Eclipse of the Moon; Petition for Rain; Prayer of Voluntary Obedience; the small book, The Apostate; the large book, The Apostate; The Poor Tax; Fixing the Rate of the Poor Tax; Judicial Decisions of the Qur'ān; Rites of the Pilgrimage; Sellers (Buyers); Disagreements of Mālik and al-Shāfi'ī; Intentional Wounds; the large book, Mortgages; the small book, Mortgages; Disagreements in the Ḥadīth; Disagreements of the 'Irāqīs [scholars of al-'Irāq]; Oath with a

⁹ Ibn Abī Sayf was probably the disciple of the jurist; see Biog. Index, Aḥmad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Sayf. Flügel, however, suggests Ibn Abī Yūsuf.

¹⁰ For this important work, Al-Risālah, see al-Shāfi'ī in the Bibliography.

Witness; Slaying the Idolaters; Fighting the Tyrants; Oppression; Captives and the Shackled; Marriage with Betrothal;¹¹ Sexual Abstinence and Menstruation.

Washing the Dead; Funerals; Racing and Throwing the Javelin; Custodianship and Reaching Maturity;¹² Ordinance and Hire of Animals; Suckling [an Infant]; Food and Drink; Al-Baḥīrah and al-Sā'ibah;¹³ Plantations; Al-'Umrā and al-Ruqbā [a bequest and a piece of property given for life, to be returned at time of death]; Drinks; The Virtues of the Quraysh; Al-Shi'ār;¹⁴ Marital Aversion and Divorce; The Problem of the Hermaphrodite; Religious Self-Restraint (Seclusion) for Religious Exercises; Renting a Palm Grove for Part of the Product; The Hunt; The Feast; The Option to Purchase or Pre-empt Adjoining Property (Al-Shuf'ah); Lending (Borrowing).

The Ordinance of Allāh; Wages (Rates of Hire), Persons Responsible for Payment, and the Man Who Hires Out a Beast of Burden; Reviving the Dead (Wasteland); Conditions; Al-Zihār;¹⁵ Al-Īla;¹⁶ Disagreement Between Man and Wife; Sacrificial Victims; Disagreement about Inheritance; Emancipation of the Mothers of Children; The Thing Found and Held in Trust; The Thing Picked Up (Discovered by Accident, The Foundling); Reaching the Age of Discretion (Maturity); small abridgment of "The Pilgrimage"; The Question of Semen; Licensing Divorce; Fasts; The Manager; Al-Mukātib [slave who ransoms himself]; Al-Walā wa-al-Īlāf;¹⁷ Wages (Rentals).

¹¹ The translation is based on the supposition that the Arabic original is al-ta'ris bi-al-khiṭbah, although ta'ris can also mean "stopping" and the other word might be khaybah ("sermon").

¹² The word translated "custodianship" usually refers to establishment of a pious endowment, but here it may have a different significance. In the title which follows, Flügel gives al-riqāb ("slaves") instead of al-dawābb ("animals"), which is in MS 1934 and is probably correct.

¹³ These are the tenth colt of a camel, allowed to wander freely, and the female camel freed because of bearing the colt or to fulfill some vow.

¹⁴ This is probably equally divided property, but may be a military symbol, the rites of the pilgrimage, or something else, as the word has many meanings.

¹⁵ This is the pronouncement of the divorce formula, "Thou art to me as my mother's back."

¹⁷ Al-walā can mean "friendship" or "authority" and al-īlāf means "compact" or "good faith." Flügel gives al-walā, for which see Glossary, "relationship." Cf. Chap. VI, sect. 4, n. 16.

Consensus of Opinion; The Marriage Dowry; Witnesses; How the People of al-'Irāq opposed 'Alī and 'Abd Allāh;¹⁸ Curses; the large abridgment of "The Pilgrimage"; Division of Booty; Drawing Lots (The Wager); The Poll Tax; Wills; Claim and Proofs; Prohibition of Fermented Liquor; Al-Raj'ah;¹⁹ Training of the Judge; The Number of Women [probably about marriage]; Highway Robbery and Stealing; Oath and Vows; Hunting and Sacrificial Victims; Money Changing; Refutation of Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan [al-Shaybānī]; Distress of Women [in Childbirth].

The Life of al-Wāqidi; The Life of al-Awzā'i; Judgment of the Sorcerer and Sorceress; Trust (Trusteeship) and Judicial Decisions; The Will of a Pregnant Woman; The Testimony of One Accusing of Adultery; Charity of the Living on Behalf of the Dead (Dying); The Man Who Places Goods with Another Man; The Loan; Inheritance; Judgment with Evidence; Repeal of Approval.

The Names of Those Who Quoted al-Shāfi'i and Learned from Him²⁰
Al-Rabī' ibn Sulaymān al-Murādī

He was one of the Murād, a tribe.²¹ He was surnamed Abū Sulaymān. He was in Egypt, where he gave the call to prayer and derived a living from the Sultan for his prayer calling. His origin was in Egypt. He quoted the sources of the law of al-Shāfi'i,²² entitling what he quoted Al-Mabsūṭ. He died in Egypt during the year two hundred and seventy [A.D. 883/84].

Al-Rabī' was quoted by: Ibn Sayf, who was Abū Bakr Aḥmad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Sayf ibn Sa'īd; Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ḥamdān al-Ṭarā'ifi; Al-Aṣanm al-Naysābūri; 'Abd Allāh ibn Sufyān al-Mawṣilī.

¹⁸ 'Abd Allāh was probably the Prophet's cousin, who was governor of al-Baḥrah when Alī was the caliph; see Ibn 'Abbās Abū al-'Abbās, 'Abd Allāh. See Khallikān, I, 89, n. 3; " 'Abd Allāh," Enc. Islam, I, 19.

¹⁹ Al-raj'ah is the receiving back of a divorced wife. Another possibility is al-rij'ah, a widow returning home after her husband's death.

²⁰ The Tonk MS has a pious epithet after al-Shāfi'i's name. The names which follow were almost certainly those of men who attended the lectures of al-Shāfi'i or served as disciples, helping him to compile his books.

²¹ See Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, pp. 52, 53.

²² Al-Shāfi'i designated the following as the authoritative sources (uṣūl) for legal decisions: (1) the Qur'ān; (2) the Ḥadīth; (3) al-ijmā', or consensus of opinion; (4) al-qiyās, or analogy.

Al-Za'farānī, Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥasan ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Ṣabbāḥ

He quoted Al-Mabsūṭ from al-Shāfi'ī in the form that al-Rabī' quoted it. As he made a few variations, the people did not like it or study it [with him]. As jurists work in accordance with what al-Rabī' transmitted, it is not necessary for us to name the books quoted by al-Za'farānī, which became scarce, most of them being effaced, disappearing and never again being copied. He died during the year two hundred and sixty [A.D. 873/74].

Abū Thawr

He was Ibrāhīm ibn Khālīd ibn al-Yamānī, the jurist, from the Banū Kalb.²³ He studied with al-Shāfi'ī and quoted him. As he disagreed with him about some points, he adopted a legal system of his own, which he kept distinct from the system of al-Shāfi'ī, but he wrote a Mabsūṭ which followed the arrangement of the book of al-Shāfi'ī. Most of the people of Ādharbayjān and Armenia conduct their legal affairs according to his legal system. He died during the year two hundred and forty [A.D. 854/55].

Naming of the Books of Abū Thawr

Ritual Purification; Prayer; Fasts; Rites of the Pilgrimage.

Those Who Learned from Abū Thawr

Ibn al-Junayd

His name was ———. He was one of the most illustrious of his pupils and among their leaders.

'Ubayd ibn Khalaf al-Bazzāz

He was also one of the most eminent among his pupils.

Al-'Iyālī

He followed the code of Abū Thawr. He was Abū Ja'far Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad al-'Iyālī. Among his books there was Refuges and Indemnities for Murder.

²³ See "Kalb b. Wabara," Enc. Islam, II, 688.

Manṣūr ibn Ismā'īl ——— al-Miṣrī

He died ———. Among his books there was Food for the Traveler in the Law.

Among Those Who Learned from al-Shāfi'ī²⁴

Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam

He quoted al-Shāfi'ī, in contrast to his two brothers, who followed Mālik. He died ———. Among his books there was The Ordinances, according to the legal system of al-Shāfi'ī.

Ḥarmalah ibn Yaḥyā al-Miṣrī

He learned from al-Shāfi'ī.

Yaḥyā ibn Naṣr al-Ḥawlānī

He was one of the people of Egypt²⁵ who quoted al-Shāfi'ī. [His book:] Al-Shāfi'ī, refuting Ibn 'Ulayyah.

Al-Buwayṭī

His name was Yūsuf ibn Yaḥyā, surnamed Abū Yūsuf, and he quoted al-Shāfi'ī. Al-Rabī' [ibn Sulaymān] said, "Al-Buwayṭī wrote to me from prison, commending me to the members of my circle²⁶ and saying, 'Be patient with them, for I heard al-Shāfi'ī say: "For their sake I humble my spirit that they may honor it, as a spirit which one does not humble is not honored."'"

Among the books of al-Buwayṭī there were:

The Large Abridgment; The Small Abridgment; The Ordinances.

Al-Rabī' ibn Sulaymān and Abū Ismā'īl al-Tirmidhī quoted al-Buwayṭī.

Al-Muzanī

He was Abū Ibrāhīm Ismā'īl ibn Ibrāhīm al-Muzanī from the Muzaynah,²⁷ one of the tribes of al-Yaman. He learned from al-Shāfi'ī

²⁴ The men included in this list followed the legal system of al-Shāfi'ī. Some of them lived too late to be his pupils and the others were probably not regular students of his, although they may have attended some of his lectures. The order follows that of MS 1934.

²⁵ MS 1934 omits "of Egypt."

²⁶ This was probably a class which met in a mosque or in the home of al-Rabī'.

²⁷ See Durayd, Geneal., p. 111; Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 36.

and was an ascetic, as well as a jurist according to the legal system of al-Shāfi'i. Among the adherents of al-Shāfi'i there was no jurist more learned than al-Muzanī and no man more virtuous than al-Buwayfī.

He died in Egypt on Wednesday and was buried on Thursday, at the end of the month of Rabi' al-Awwal [third Muslim month], during the year two hundred and sixty-four [A.D. 877/78]. Al-Rabi' ibn Sulaymān, who was a prayer caller and a friend of al-Shāfi'i, prayed for him [at the funeral]. Among his books there were:

The Small Abridgment, which is in the hands of the people and upon which the followers of al-Shāfi'i depend—they read and expound upon it, there being diverse ways of quoting it, most of which have been transmitted by al-Naysābūrī al-Aṣammī, whose name was ———, and Ibn al-Ikfānī 'Abd Allāh ibn Ṣāliḥ, and the brother of Ḥarūrī al-Jawharī, whose name was Aḥmad ibn Mūsā; The Large Abridgment, which has been abandoned; Compacts.

Al-Marwazī

Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Aḥmad al-Marwazī was a friend (pupil) of al-Muzanī. Among his books there were:

Exposition of the "Abridgment" of al-Muzanī, the first and the second; Divisions, about knowing the sources [of the law]; Conditions and Compacts; Wills and Evaluation of Houses; The Particular and the Universal.

Al-Zubayrī

Among the adherents of al-Shāfi'i was al-Zubayrī, whose name was al-Zubayr ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Sulaymān ibn 'Āṣim ibn al-Mundhir ibn al-Zubayr ibn al-'Awwām. He died after three hundred [A.D. 912/13]. Among his books there were:

An abridgment of the law known as The Sufficiency (Al-Kāfi); Compilation of the Law; Shares of Inheritance.

Another al-Marwazī

His name was Aḥmad ibn Naṣr. Among his books there were:

The large book, Disagreements among the Jurists; the small book, Disagreements among the Jurists.

Ibn Surayj

Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad ibn 'Umar ibn Surayj was one of the illustrious Shāfi'i jurists and theologians. There were debates between him and Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd in the presence of Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā [the vizier]. He died during the year three hundred and five [A.D. 917/18]. Among his books there were:

Refutation of Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan [al-Shaybānī]; Refutation of 'Isā ibn Abān; Similarity between al-Muzanī and al-Shāfi'i; Answer of (for) al-Qāshānī; Abridgment of the Law.

Al-Sājī

Abū Yahyā Zakarīyā' ibn Yahyā ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Sājī derived his knowledge from al-Muzanī and al-Rabi' [ibn Sulaymān] and also from the Egyptians. Among his books there was Disagreement about the Law.

Al-Qāshānī

He was Muḥammad ibn Ishāq, surnamed Abū Bakr, from Qāshān.²⁸ At first he followed the legal system of Dā'ūd [ibn 'Alī], but later he changed to the legal system of al-Shāfi'i, becoming a leader and one of the chiefs in connection with it. Among his books there were:

Refutation of Dā'ūd in Connection with the Uselessness of Analogy;²⁹ Confirming Analogy;³⁰ large book, Judicial Interpretation; The Beginning of the Book on Judicial Interpretations;³¹ The Sources of Judicial Interpretation.

Al-Iṣṭakhrī

He was Abū Sa'id, a chief among the Shāfi'i jurists and an authority for the Ḥadīth. He was trustworthy and virtuous, a ²⁸ See Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 15.

²⁹ Analogy was one of the four sources of the law recognized by al-Shāfi'i, but Dā'ūd did not recognize it.

³¹ The Arabic word translated "beginning" is al-sadr, which might mean the main part of the book.

jurist and a leader. He died during the year twenty-eight [A.H. 328: A.D. 939/40], on Friday the fourteenth night of Jumādā al-Ākhirah [sixth Muslim month], being buried in the Cemetery of the Dayr.³² Among his books there were:

The large book, Shares of Inheritance; Conditions, Compacts, Documents, and Judicial Records.

Ibn al-Ṣayrafī

He was Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Ṣayrafī al-Shāfi'ī. He was attached to Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn 'Isā [the vizier], being a friend of his, as well as one of the illustrious Shāfi'ī jurists and theologians. He was born ——— and died on Friday, the twelfth night of Rabi' al-Awwal [third Muslim month], during the year three hundred and thirty [A.D. 941/42]. Among his books there were:

Explanation of the Indications of the Signs for the Sources of Judicial Decisions; Explanation of the "Epistle" of al-Shāfi'ī; Evaluation of Houses; Refutation of 'Ubayd Allāh ibn Ṭālib al-Kātib's Book on the "Epistle" of al-Shāfi'ī; Division of Inheritance.

Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān

He was a Shāfi'ī [jurist] whose name was ———. Among his books there were:

Consensus of Opinion and Disagreement; Treatise, about the sources of the law, all but the first treatise.

Al-Ṭabarī, Abū 'Alī al-Ḥasan ibn al-Qāsim

He was one of the followers of al-Shāfi'ī. Among his books there was Abridgment of the Questions of Disagreement in Theology and Intellectual Examination.

³² Maqbarat Bāb al-Dayr was a cemetery by an old monastery, between the river and the Baṣrah Gate at Baghdād. See Le Strange, Baghdad, p. 98, and map with p. 15, item 21.

Abū al-Ṭayyib ibn Salamah³³

Abū al-Ḥasan

He was Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad³⁴ ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Yūsuf ibn Aḥmad al-Kātib, one of the illustrious men among the followers of al-Shāfi'ī. He was born during the year two hundred and eighty-one [A.D. 894/95] at al-Ḥasanīyah.³⁵ He wrote books based on the Shī'ī legal system and the following books based on the legal system of al-Shāfi'ī:

Faculties of Understanding;³⁶ Testing (Proving, Exerting); The Agreeable; Refutation of al-Karkhī; The Beneficial in the Ḥadīth.

If Allāh so wills, we shall mention his books based on the Shī'ī code in the proper place.³⁷

Ibn Sayf al-Fāriḍ

His name was ———. Among his books there were: ———.

Ibn al-Ashyab Abū 'Amrān Mūsā ibn al-Ashyab

He was a jurist following the legal system of al-Shāfi'ī, and also a theologian. Among his books there were: ———.

Abū al-Ṭayyib ibn Salamah

He was one of the followers of al-Shāfi'ī. He died ———. Among his books there were: ———.

Abū al-Ṭayyib al-Mulqī

Among his books there were: ———.

³³ In the Arabic texts this name is given here and also after three other names have been cited. There may be a repetition due to careless copying, or the same name may designate two different persons. The Tonk MS notes, "Abū al-Ṭayyib ibn Salamah, one of the followers of al-Shāfi'ī, an ascetic and devotee, no book of whose is known."

³⁴ The insertion of the name "ibn Aḥmad" is probably an error, as he was known as Muḥammad ibn Ibrāhīm.

³⁵ Al-Ḥasanīyah may be the town listed by Yāqūt, Geog., II, 270.

³⁷ Evidently this passage was written before the author listed the books about the Shī'ah in the preceding passage; see Chap. V, sect. 5, near n. 202.

Al-Ahwāzī, Ibn al-Junayd, Abū al-Hasan ——— al-Qāḍī

Among his books there were: ———.

Abū al-Hāmid al-Baṣrī al-Qāḍī

He was one of the followers of al-Shāfi'ī. He died ———. He was Aḥmad ibn Bishr ibn 'Amir al-'Āmirī. Among his books there were:

The Large Compilation, a thousand leaves [in length]; Looking Over (Gaining an Understanding of) the Sources of the Law; The Small Compilation.

Al-Ajurri

He was Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn al-Husayn ibn 'Ubayd Allāh al-Ajurri, the jurist, one of those who were righteous and consecrated. He wrote many books about this [piety]. We have mentioned them in their proper place.³⁸ He lived at Makkah and died recently. He followed the legal system of al-Shāfi'ī. Among his books there were:

Abridgment of the Law; Judicial Decisions concerning Women; Advice, which included a number of chapters about the law.

Ibn Shaqra' al-Khaffāf

He was a Shāfi'ī [jurist], and was a resident of Makkah. His name was ———. Among his books there was Conditions.

Ibn Rajā' Abū al-'Abbās of al-Baṣrah

He was a Shāfi'ī and was the successor of the judge of al-Baṣrah. Among his books there were:

The Causes (Defects) of Conditions; the large book, Conditions, which I notice the followers of al-Shāfi'ī praise and regard as excellent.³⁹

Ibn Dinār al-Hamdānī

Among his books there was the large book, Conditions, which is superlatively excellent and about one thousand leaves [in length].

³⁸ It has not been possible to find any mention of his books. Perhaps some passage containing the titles of these works has been lost.

³⁹ The Tonk MS adds the title Against Dā'ūd in Connection with the Futility of Analogy.

Abū al-Hasan, al-Nasawī

His name was ———. Among his books there was Questions, Causes (Defects), and Differences.

Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mundhir al-Naysabūrī

He was a Shāfi'ī jurist and one of the principal leaders. Among his books there were:

Questions, about the law; Corroborations of Analogy.

Al-Farajī, Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Muḥammad al-Farajī

He was an expert on the shares of inheritance, among whose books there was the large book, Explanation of the Judicial Decisions concerning the Shares of Inheritance.

Ibn Abī Hurayrah Abū 'Alī

He died ———. Among his books there were:
Questions; Marginal Note, to the law and the questions.

Al-Qaffāl, Abū Bakr

Among his books there was The Sources.

Abū al-Hasan [ibn Aḥmad] ibn Khayrān

Among his books there were:
The Delightful (Al-Laṭīf); Introductions.

Dā'ūd ibn 'Alī

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Fourth Section of the Sixth Chapter

of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed, with an account of Dā'ūd and his adherents.¹

Abū Sulaymān Dā'ūd ibn 'Alī ibn Dā'ūd ibn Khalaf al-Iṣbahānī was the first to use al-qawl al-ẓāhir, depending upon the Book and the Sunnah and eliminating everything else connected with [the method of] personal opinion and analogy.² He was virtuous, sincere, and pious. He, Dā'ūd, died during the year two hundred and seventy [A.D. 883/84]. Among his books there were:

The Explanation; The Clear Explanation; the large book, Summons and Evidences; The Sources [of the Law]; Menstruation.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I once read in an old handwriting something written just about the time of Dā'ūd ibn 'Alī, giving the names of Abū Sulaymān Dā'ūd ibn 'Alī's books, which I have listed according to the sequence which I found.³

² Here al-qawl al-ẓāhir ("the evident speech") refers to revelation, specifically that of the Prophet, made evident in the Qur'ān. For the legal school of this authority, see "Dā'ūd," Enc. Islam, I, 928, and "al-Zāhiriya," IV, 1192.

³ The five titles given first were very likely separate books, whereas the list given below is probably for chapters in a large legal work.

Ritual Purification; Menstruation; Prayer; The Call to Prayer; Al-Qiblah; The Times [for religious rites]; Neglect, four hundred leaves; Prayer for Rain; Beginning of Prayer; What Corrupts Prayer; Friday [Prayers]; Prayer of Fear; Prayer for the Eclipse of the Moon; Prayer for the Two Feasts [al-Aḍḥā and al-Fiṭr].

The Imamate; Judgment for the Person Neglecting Prayer; Funerals; Washing the Dead; The Poor Tax, three hundred leaves; Charity for al-Fiṭr;⁴ Voluntary Fasts; Ordained Fasts, six hundred leaves; Sexual Withdrawal for Religious Purposes; Rites of the Pilgrimage; abridgment of "The Pilgrimage"; Marriage, one thousand leaves; The Dower [husband's dowry]; Suckling [an Infant]; Aversion Between Husband and Wife; Divorce with Wife's Agreement; Explanation of Who Has the Right to Bear Witness against One; Sexual Abstinence until after Menstruation and Purification; Al-Raj'ah;⁵ A Question of Booty;⁶ Al-Īla.⁷

Al-Zihār;⁸ Curses; The Destitute (Lost); Divorce; Divorce of the Sunnah; Oaths in Divorce; Divorce before Consumation; Divorce of the Intoxicated and the Drunkard; Al-'Idad;⁹ Sellers (Buyers); Money Changing; License for Trade; Partnership; Loaning (Borrowing);¹⁰ The Trust (Trusteeship); The Loan [without Security]; Transfer of Credit and Surety; Mortgages; Wages (Rentals); Giving Out Land for Planting; Renting a Palm Grove for Part of the Products; Dug-Outs and Refuges; Nonalcoholic Drink; The Option to Purchase or Pre-empt Adjoining Property (Al-Shuf'ah).

Offering One's Life as Surety; Trusteeship; Judicial Decisions about Fugitive Slaves; Ordinances; Robbery; Prohibition of Intoxicating

⁴ Īd al-Fiṭr, the feast at the end of Ramaḍān, when it is the custom to give alms to the poor.

⁵ Al-raj'ah is receiving back a divorced wife. Another possibility is al-rij'ah, a widow returning home after her husband's death.

⁶ This might also be "A Question about (fī) ———," the title following fī being omitted. "Booty" is fāy.

⁷ Al-ila (i'la) is swearing not to cohabit with a wife for four months if she is free, or two months if she is a slave, as a religious penance. See Richardson, Dictionary, p. 221.

⁸ Pronouncement of the divorce formula, "Thou art to me as my mother's back."

⁹ Al-'iddah, pl. al-'idad, refers to the number of days of menstruation which must pass before a divorced or widowed woman can remarry. The purpose of this procedure is to determine the true father of the woman's next child. See "'Idda," Enc. Islam, II, 445.

¹⁰ The Tonk MS has al-farā'id ("shares").

Liquor; Drinks; The Sorcerer;¹¹ Unintentional Murder; Intentional Murder; Truce (Oath);¹² The Embryo; Oaths and Expiations; Vows; Emancipation; Al-Mukātib [the slave who ransoms himself]; Al-Mudabbir;¹³ Initiation of a Wager; Hunting; Sacrificial Victims of the Muslims; Sacrificial Victims; New Birth (or The Sheep Slaughtered for a Newborn Child); Foods.

Clothing; Medicine; The Holy War; The March (or Biographies); Division of Booty; Share of the Relatives [of the Prophet]; Division of Charity Funds; The Land Tax; ——— and the Mine (Minerals); The Poll Tax; Division; The Foot Soldiers (Making War); The Course of Equity;¹⁴ The Apostate;¹⁵ Things Found and Lost; The Thing Picked Up (Discovered by Accident, The Foundling); Shares of Inheritance; Blood Relatives; Wills; Wills, about Evaluation.

Houses; Succession and Posterity;¹⁶ Hermaphrodites; The Times [for religious rites]; Gift and Charity; Judgment; The Training of a Judge; Judgment of an Absent Person (Foreigner); Documents; Compacts, three thousand leaves [in length]; Judicial Records; Judgment among Ahl al-Dhimma; Summons and Witnesses, one thousand leaves; Acknowledgment of a Debt; Renunciation of Testimonies; Prohibition; Proclamation of Bankruptcy; Oppression; Reconciliation; Combat; What Gain Is Right; Defense of Statutes, Judgments, and Traditions, one thousand leaves; Refutation of Liars; The Ambiguous (Difficult to Solve).

The Morning Star and the Dawn, to al-Sā'ī;¹⁷ Description of the Disposition of the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace;

¹¹ MS 1934 gives a different form, probably an error.

¹² Instead of al-qasāmah ("truce," "oath"), the Arabic might be al-qusāmah ("alms"). In the title which follows, the Tonk and 1934 MSS have al-hayd ("menstruation"), but a correction in MS 1934 and the Flügel edition gives al-janīn ("embryo").

¹³ This refers to one who makes a declaration of freedom for a slave, effective at the time of the master's death.

¹⁴ In Arabic this is Sayr al-ʿĀdilah. It may have a more technical meaning, or a simple meaning such as The Course of Justice.

¹⁵ The Tonk MS gives consonant signs, making this title Al-Murtad ("The Apostate"), whereas Flügel gives Al-Murīd ("The Seeker after Knowledge or God"). MS 1934 might be either of these forms.

¹⁶ This title is Al-Walā' wa-al-Khulf. If the second word is al-Khulf, it would mean "breach of promise," changing the meaning. Another possible translation for the title might be Kinship and Succession.

Flags of the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace;¹⁸ Knowledge; Invocation; The Future and the Past; Consensus of Opinion; Rendering Imitation Futile; Rendering Analogy Futile; Information about the One [Allāh]; Knowledge of What Is Necessary for Learning; The Proof; The Particular and the Universal; What Is Explained and Established; Ceasing to Make (Call) a Person an Unbeliever; The Epistle of al-Rabī' ibn Sulaymān; The Epistle of Abū al-Walīd; The Epistle of al-Qaṭṭān; The Epistle of Hārūn [ibn 'Abd Allāh] al-Shārī; Giving Counsel, five hundred leaves; Clear Explanation, four thousand leaves; Temporary Marriage.

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I have transcribed these [preceding] book titles from an old piece [of manuscript] in the handwriting of Maḥmūd al-Marwazī. I suppose that this man upheld the legal system of Dā'ūd, but he is unknown.

Dā'ūd had questions sent to him from various regions and places, among which there were:¹⁹

Questions of Iṣbahān; Questions about Secret Matters; Questions of al-Baṣrah;²⁰ Questions of al-Khwārizm; The Sufficient, about the statement of al-Muṭṭalibī, meaning al-Shāfi'i;²¹ Two Questions, in connection with which al-Shāfi'i is contradictory; the first books include a volume called The March (or Biographies).

Muḥammad ibn Dā'ūd

He was surnamed Abū Bakr and was a jurist upholding his father's legal system, and was an excellent man, pious and cultured. He was a poet and historical traditionalist, as well as one of the interesting and honest writers. I have mentioned the books of poetry and literature which he wrote in their proper place, in the chapter on the historical traditionalists, genealogists, and men of letters.²²

¹⁸ Instead of "flags" (a'lām) the word may be i'lām ("distinguished courage"). The pious epithets in this and the preceding title are not in MS 1934.

¹⁹ It is probable that these books were answers to questions addressed to him.

²⁰ Instead of al-Baṣrah the Tonk MS has al-Naṣraniyyāt. Khwārizm, in the following title, is the modern Khivā; see "Khwārizm," Enc. Islam, II, 908.

²¹ As al-Shāfi'i was descended from the Prophet's grandfather, 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib, he was called al-Muṭṭalibī.

²² The only previous mention seems to be in connection with the jurists; see the account of Ibn Surayj in Chap. VI, sect. 3, after n. 27.

His birth was during the year ——— and he died in the year ———. Among his books on the law there were:

Admonitions; Apologies (Excuses); Means of Knowing the Sources of the Law; Abridgment (Al-Ijāz) (or Fulfilling a Promise [Al-Injāz]); Refutation of Ibn Sharshir; Refutation of Abū 'Isā al-Ḍarīr; Obtaining Justice from Abū Ja'far al-Ṭabarī.

Ibn Jābir

He was Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ——— ibn Jābir, one of the followers of Dā'ūd. He was one of their scholars and important men. Among his books there was Differences. No one ever wrote a longer book, and his associates regarded it as excellent.

Ibn al-Mughallas

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Abd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Mughallas. Leadership among the followers of Dā'ūd culminated with him during his time and no equal of his appeared afterwards. He was superior, learned, gifted, truthful, reliable, and preeminent among the people as a whole. His home was at Baghdād on the River Mahdī,²³ where people from surrounding regions sought him out. He died on the fourth of Jumādā al-Ākhirah [sixth Muslim month], during the year three hundred and twenty-four [A.D. 935/36]. Among his books there were:

Explanation of the Answers of the Book of al-Muzanī;²⁴ Good Fortune (Judgment); The Manifest; Judgments of the Qur'ān; Divorce; Relationship (Al-Walā').

Al-Manṣūrī

He was Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Šāliḥ, who upheld the legal system of Dā'ūd and was one of the most illustrious followers of Dā'ūd. His books were splendid and excellent, large in size. Among them there were:

The large book, The Lamp; The Guide; The Shining.

²³ A canal in the west part of the Shammasīyah Quarter of East Baghdād. See Le Strange, Baghdad, pp. 47 (map), 175, 206.

²⁴ The translation follows MS 1934. The other versions give instead two titles, The Explanation and The Book of al-Muzanī.

Al-Raqqī

He was Abū Sa'īd ———, one of the scholars among those who followed the legal system of Dā'ūd.²⁵ Among his books there were: The Sources, which comprised one hundred chapters similar to the chapters of Dā'ūd, so that we are not obliged to record them. He also wrote the Commentary on "The Clear."²⁶

Al-Nahrabānī

His name was al-Ḥasan ibn 'Ubayd, Abū Sa'īd. Among his books there was Rendering Futile Analogy.

Ibn al-Khallāl

He was surnamed Abū al-Ṭayyib ———. Among his books there were:

Rendering Futile Analogy; Rendering Futile Witty Remarks;²⁷ Qualification of Wisdom about the sources of the law and comprising a number of chapters.

Al-Rabā'ī

His name was Ibrāhīm ibn Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥasan, surnamed Abū Ishāq. He was one of the scholars who followed the legal system of Dā'ūd and lived near to our own time. He went from Baghdād to Egypt, where he died during the year ———. Among his books there was Consideration of the Rendering Futile of Analogy.

Ḥaydarah

He was surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan ———. He was one of the superior men and legal authorities, employing the legal system of his associates. I used to see him, for he was a friend of mine. He died ———. Among his books there was Refutation of Those Who Uphold Analogy.²⁸

²⁵ The Tonk MS adds, "He was religious, ascetic, virtuous, and one who memorized the Ḥadīth."

²⁶ "The clear" is in Arabic al-mawḍiḥ or al-muḍiḥ, and is probably a book title.

²⁷ MS 1934 omits ibtāl ("rendering futile") but the other versions give it.

²⁸ Only the Tonk MS gives this title. It also states "He was one of the historical traditionalists, ascetics, and jurists."

The Judge al-Kharazī, May Allāh Strengthen Him²⁹

He is Abū al-Ḥasan ‘Abd al-‘Azīz ibn Aḥmad al-Iṣbahānī al-Kharazī, one of the scholars among the followers of Dā’ūd during our own time, and one of the capable members of their legal school. He is also one of the superior persons among his associates and the authors among them. He was born ———. ‘Aḍud al-Dawlah has placed him over the judicial administration of the lower quarter on the East Side of the City of Peace [Baghdād], until our own time, which is the year three hundred and seventy-seven [A.D. 987/88]. Among his books there is Questions and Disagreement.

²⁹ The Flügel edition gives al-Ḥuzrī, which is a mistake. The pious epithet is in MS 1934. He was evidently a friend of al-Nadīm.

The Jurists of the Shī‘ah; Their Authorities on the Ḥadīth and Scholars
In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Fifth Section of the Sixth Chapter

*of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed, including accounts of the jurists of the Shī‘ah, with the names of the books which they composed.*¹

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: Among the friends of the Commander of the Faithful, for whom may there be peace,² there was Sulaym ibn Qays al-Hilālī. As a fugitive from al-Ḥajjāj [ibn Yūsuf], who sought to kill him, he took refuge with Abān ibn Abī Ayyāsh, who gave him shelter. When death drew near to him he said to Abān, “I am indebted to you and now death is present with me. Oh, son of my brother, by order of the Apostle of Allāh, may Allāh bless him and give him peace, it is thus [as described in my book].” Then he gave him a book, which was the well-known book of Sulaym ibn Qays al-Hilālī, from which Abān ibn Abī Ayyāsh quoted, but which was not quoted by anyone else.

Abān said in his narrative, “Qays was a shaykh with an [inner] light which uplifted him. The first book to appear about the Shī‘ah was the book of Sulaym ibn Qays al-Hilālī.” Abān ibn Abī Ayyāsh quoted it, but it was not quoted by anybody else.

² Here the Commander of the Faithful may refer to ‘Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn ‘Alī, surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan and called Zayn al-‘Ābidīn. Although ‘Alī was never recognized as caliph by the majority, the Shī‘ah, including al-Nadīm, did recognize him as such. He lived at the time when al-Ḥajjāj, who was governor of al-‘Irāq A.D. 694–714, was trying to crush Shī‘ī opposition to the Umayyad caliphate.

The Books Composed about the Sources of the Law (Uṣūl al-Fiqh) with the Names of Those Who Compiled Them

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq [al-Nadīm]: I am mentioning the shaykhs of the Shī'ah who transmitted the law from their imams, without any special order.³ Among them there were:

Ṣāliḥ ibn Abī al-Aswad; 'Alī ibn Ghurāb; Abū Yahyā Layth al-Murādī; Ruzayq ibn al-Zubayr; Abū al-Salamah al-Baṣrī; Ismā'il ibn Ziyād; Abū Aḥmad 'Umar ibn al-Raḍī; Dā'ūd ibn Farqad; 'Alī ibn Ra'ab; 'Alī ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Mu'allā; Hishām ibn Sālim; Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan al-'Atṭār; 'Abd al-Mu'min ibn al-Qāsim al-Anṣārī; Sayf ibn 'Amrah al-Nakhā'i; Ibrāhīm ibn 'Umar al-Ṣana'ānī; 'Abd Allāh ibn Maymūn al-Qaddāh; Al-Rabī' ibn Abī Mudrik; 'Umar ibn Abī Ziyād al-Ibzārī; Zakār ibn Yahyā al-Wāsiṭī; Abū Khālid ibn 'Amr ibn Khālid al-Wāsiṭī; Ḥarīz ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Azdī al-Sijistānī; 'Ubayd Allāh [ibn 'Alī] al-Ḥalabī; Zakarīyā' al-Mu'min; Thābit al-Ḍarī; Muthannā ibn Asad al-Khayyāṭ; 'Umar ibn Udhaynah; 'Ammār ibn Mu'āwiyah al-Duhnī al-'Abdī al-Kūfī; Mu'āwiyah ibn 'Ammār al-Duhnī; and al-Ḥasan ibn Maḥbūb al-Sarrād, who was a guest among the associates of al-Riḍā, for whom may there be peace, and later of his son Muḥammad [al-Jawād].⁴

Abān ibn Taghlib

Among his books there were:

The delightful book, The Meaning of the Qur'ān; [Qur'ānic] Readings; From the Sources, about quotations according to the doctrines of the Shī'ah.

The Family of Zurārah ibn A'yan

Zurārah was a nickname. His real name was 'Abd Rabbah. His brother was Ḥumrān ibn A'yan, a grammarian, whose sons were Ḥamzah ibn Ḥumrān and Muḥammad ibn Ḥumrān.

There were also Bukayr ibn A'yan and his son 'Abd Allāh ibn Bukayr, 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn A'yan, and 'Abd al-Malik ibn A'yan, ³ For the imams of the Shī'ah, see Hitti, Arabs, p. 442. Before each of the names in the list which follows is the word kitāb ("the book of").

⁴ The words translated "a guest among the associates" are, in the Arabic text, al-wārid min aṣḥāb. Al-Riḍā and his son were the 8th and 9th Shī'ī imams. Someone who disliked the Shī'ah crossed out the pious epithets in this section of the Tonk MS and inserted the word "erroneous" in numerous places.

with his son Ḍurays ibn 'Abd al-Malik, one of the adherents of Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn 'Alī [al-Bāqir], for whom may there be peace.

A'yan ibn Sunsun (Sunbus) was a Byzantine slave belonging to a man of the Banū Shaybān.⁵ After he had learned the Qur'ān, he [the master] emancipated him and offered to adopt him as one of his family. A'yan, however, refused saying, "Settle me with my own people." Sunsun was a priest in the Byzantine country.⁶

Bukayr was surnamed Abū al-Jahm and Zurārah, Abū 'Alī. This Zurārah was the leading Shī'ī scholar of the law, the Ḥadīth, the knowledge of theology, and the Shī'ī system. Among his sons there were al-Ḥusayn ibn Zurārah and al-Ḥasan ibn Zurārah, who were among the associates of Ja'far ibn Muḥammad [al-Ṣādiq].⁷ 'Ubayd ibn Zurārah, who was squint-eyed, quoted [his father] Zurarah ibn A'yan.

Yūnus ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān

He was one of the associates of Mūsā ibn Ja'far, for whom may there be peace, and one of the protégés of the family of Yaqtīn. He was the scholar of his period, a prolific compiler and author according to the doctrines of the Shī'ah. Among his books there were:

Causes (Defects) of al-Aḥādīth (the Traditions); Prayer; Fasts; The Poor Tax; Wills and Shares of Inheritance; Compilation of Traces (al-Athār); The Beginning.

Al-Bazanṭī

He was one of the scholars of the Shī'ah, Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī Naṣr al-Bazanṭī, an associate of Mūsā [ibn Ja'far], for whom may there be peace. Among his books there were:

⁵ For this tribe, see Durayd, Geneal., pp. 144, 155, 210.

⁶ MS 1934 has what appears to be Sunbus, whereas Tūsi, p. 141, has Sunsun. This man was said to be a rāhib ("monk"), but as he had children, he must have been a priest, rather than a monk. In the Eastern Church, the priest must marry, whereas the monk is celibate. His son A'yan became a slave. But after he had learned the Qur'ān, his master set him free and offered to adopt him. He preferred, however, to return to his own kindred, perhaps referring to his brother and children.

⁷ Ja'far ibn Muḥammad was the 6th Shī'ī imam; His son Mūsā ibn Ja'far, mentioned in the following paragraph, was the 7th imam, called al-Kāzīm. See Hitti, Arabs, p. 442, for list of the imams.

What he quoted from al-Riḍā, for whom may there be peace; The Compilation; Questions.

Al-Barqī

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Khālīd al-Barqī al-Qummī. He was an associate of al-Riḍā and later an associate also of his son Abū Ja'far [Muḥammad al-Jawād]. It is said that he was surnamed Abū al-Ḥasan. Among his books there were:

The Obscure; Causing Perception; Good Qualities; The Men, in which he mentioned the persons who quoted the Commander of the Faithful, May Allāh Be Well Pleased with Him.⁸

Al-Ḥasan ibn Maḥbūb

He was al-Sarrād, which is al-Zarrād,⁹ and one of the associates of our master al-Riḍā and of his son, Muḥammad [al-Jawād], for both of whom may there be peace. Among his books there were: The Commentary; Marriage; Shares of Inheritance, Ordinances, and Indemnities for Murder.

I Read Written in the Handwriting of Abū 'Alī ibn Hammām

He said that the book Good Qualities (Kitāb al-Maḥāsīn) of [Muḥammad ibn Khālīd] al-Barqī included more than seventy chapters, it is even said eighty chapters. These chapters were with Abū 'Alī ibn Hammām.¹⁰

The Beloved; The Abhorred; Generations (Categories) of Men; The Virtues of Actions (Works); The Most Special of Actions; The Warning; Intimidation; The Frightening; Life and Purity (What is Best); Reasons (Defects) of the Ḥadīth; Meaning of the Ḥadīth and [Textual] Alterations;¹¹ The Distinct (Meeting of the Ways); Pretexts; The Delightful Book; Advantages (Things Giving Benefit); Interpretation of Dreams; The Fast for Days; Heaven.

⁸ This almost certainly refers to 'Alī, the Prophet's son-in-law.

⁹ Both these terms mean "a maker of chain armor." Al-Riḍā was 'Alī ibn Mūsā, the 8th Shī'ī imam, and his son was Muḥammad al-Jawād, the 9th imam.

¹⁰ This list seems to give the names of the principal parts composing Kitāb al-Maḥāsīn of al-Barqī. It is probable that each of these titles had subtitles, bringing the total to over seventy. Cf. Tūsī, pp. 37-40, sect. 74.

¹¹ For "taḥrīf," the word translated "alterations," see "Taḥrīf," Enc. Islam, IV, 618.

The Earths (Lands); The Towns (Regions); Mention of the Ka'bah; Animals and Species;¹² Tales of the Jinn and of Men; Excellencies of the Qur'ān; Flowers; Commands and Prohibitions; With What Allāh Addressed His Creation;¹³ The Prophets and Apostles; [The Battle of] the Camel;¹⁴ The Increasing of Wisdom;¹⁵ Forms (Varieties); Female Companions; Increasing;¹⁶ Training; The Forefathers (First Things); History; Reasons; Memorable Deeds; The Pure (al-Aṣfiyah); The Reasons (Forms, Misfortunes); Quotation; Rare Forms (Unusual Anecdotes).

His Son, Aḥmad ibn Abī 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Khālīd al-Barqī

Among his books there were:

Pretexts; Travel; The Towns (Regions); which was longer than the book of his father.

Al-Ḥasan [ibn Sa'īd] al-Ahwāzī and al-Ḥusayn al-Ahwāzī, the Two Sons of Sa'īd

They were from among the people of al-Kūfah, protégés of 'Alī ibn al-Ḥusayn [Zayn al-'Ābidīn] and among the associates of al-Riḍā, for whom may there be peace. They were the greatest scholars of their time for the law, the traces (al-athār), memorable deeds, and other things connected with the Shī'ī sciences.

They were al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn, the two sons of Sa'īd ibn Ḥammād ibn Sa'īd. They were associates, also, of Abū Ja'far ibn al-Riḍā [Muḥammad al-Jawād]. Among the books of al-Ḥusayn there were:

The Commentary; Piety; The Oath and the Vow; Ritual Ablution; Prayer; Fasts; Marriage; Divorce; Drinks; Refutation of the Ghālīyah; The Invocation (Summons); Al-'Itq wa-al-Tadbīr.¹⁷

¹² Flügel gives al-ajnās ("species"), the Tonk MS has al-aḥbās ("religious endowments"), while MS 1934 lacks consonant signs.

¹³ See Qur'ān 2:117.

¹⁴ See Tūsī, p. 39, sect. 74 l. 15.

¹⁵ This may be judūl al-ḥikmah ("increasing of wisdom"), or jadwal al-ḥikmah ("rule of wisdom").

¹⁶ MS 1934 has what might be al-tazāyad ("increasing"); the Tonk MS has al-sarā'ir ("secrets"), while Flügel is uncertain.

¹⁷ Emancipation and the proclamation of freedom of a slave, to become effective at the death of the owner.

Zaydān ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Sa'īd

Among his books there was Pleadings.

Al-Ash'arī

He was Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Yahyā ibn 'Amrān al-Ash'arī. He was one of the scholars of the Shī'ah and one of those who quoted [other authorities], and also one of the jurists. Among his books there were:

The Compilation, which included one thousand and seventy sections about the law and morals;¹⁸ Rare Forms (Unusual Anecdotes); What Was Revealed in the Qur'ān about al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Alī, for both of whom [father and son] may there be peace—it was quoted by Abū 'Alī ibn Hammām al-Iskāfi.

'Alī ibn Hāshim

He was 'Alī ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Hāshim, one of the scholars among the jurists. Among his books there were:

Memorable Deeds; Choice of the Qur'ān; Nearness of the Quoter of a Tradition to Its Source.

Ḥarīz ibn 'Abd Allāh

Among his books there were:

The Poor Tax; Prayer; Fasts; Rare Forms (Unusual Anecdotes).

Ṣafwān ibn Yahyā

Among his books there were:

Buying and Selling; Commercial Transactions, Other than the First Ones; Love and Positions; Shares of Inheritance; Wills; Morals; Glad Tidings of the Believer.

'Isā ibn Mihrān

Among his books there were:

The Difference between the Nation and the Family; Authorities on the Hadith; The Laws Having Numerous Significations (The Laws Shared Together, Al-Sunan al-Mushtarakah); Death; Research (Discovery); Memorable Deeds; Embellishment (Al-Dibāj).

¹⁸ Only the Tonk MS gives the number "one thousand and seventy." The other versions leave a blank. Compare these titles with the different order in Ṭūsī, p. 274 top, sect. 598.

Al-Ḥasan ibn Muḥammad ibn Samā'ah

He was one of the associates of ———. Among his books there were:

Al-Qiblah; Prayer; Fasts.

Ibn Bilāl

He was Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Bilāl ibn Mu'āwiyah ibn Aḥmad al-Muhallabī. Among his books there was Guidance and Explanation.

From among the People of Qumm

[There was] al-Qummī, Abū Ja'far Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Isā, among whose books there were:

The large book, Medicine; the small book, Medicine; Earnings.

Sa'd ibn Ibrāhīm al-Qummī

Among his books there was Showing Preference for Ranks (Taṣḍīr al-Darajāt).

Ibn Mu'ammār

He was Abū al-Ḥusayn ibn Mu'ammār al-Kūfī, among whose books there was Nearness of the Quoter of a Tradition to Its Source.

Ibn Faḍḍāl

He was Abū 'Alī al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī ibn Faḍḍāl al-Taymulī from the Rabī'ah ibn Bakr and a protégé of the Taym Allāh ibn Tha'labah.¹⁹ He was one of the intimate companions of Abū al-Ḥasan al-Riḍā,²⁰ for whom may there be peace. Among his books there were:

The Commentary; The Beginning and the Subject;²¹ Medicine.

Ibn Jamhūr al-'Ammī

His name was Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn Jamhūr al-'Ammī al-Baṣṭī. He was numbered among the intimate companions of al-Riḍā, for whom may there be peace. Among his books there was The Unique (Al-Wāḥidah), about historical traditions, virtues and vices, which he divided into eight sections.

¹⁹ For these tribes, see "Bakr," Enc. Islam, I, 604; Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 48.

²⁰ The 8th Shī'ī imam, who died A.D. 818.

²¹ MS 1934 is garbled, but Flügel and a correction in the Tonk MS give Al-Ibtidā' wa-al-Mubtadā'. This form of the title is confirmed by Ṭūsī, p. 94 top, sect. 191.

Muhammad ibn 'Isā ibn 'Ubayd ibn Yaqtīn

He was one of the people of Baghdad, and an associate of 'Alī ibn Muhammad and al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī, for both of whom may there be peace.²² Among his books there was Desire and Hope. Abū 'Alī ibn Hammām said, "The contents of this book were derived from Muhammad [ibn al-Ḥusayn] ibn Jamhūr al-'Ammī. Al-Ḥasan ibn Muhammad ibn Jamhūr told me that his father said, 'In this book there are mentioned the things which the Shī'ah hope for in connection with their preferences and ranks.'" The book resembled Glad Tidings.²³

Ismā'īl ibn Mihrān

He was the brother of 'Isā ibn Mihrān. Among his books there was The Combats.

Abū Ja'far Muhammad ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Aḥmad ibn al-Walid al-Qumīnī

Among his books there were:

Compilation of the Law; Commentary on the Qur'ān.

Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd Allāh ibn Aḥmad ibn 'Āmir ibn Sulaymān al-Ṭā'ī

Among his books there was Judgments and Judicial Decisions.

Al-Ādamī al-Rāzī

He was Abū Sa'īd Sahl ibn Ziyād al-Rāzī, one of the friends of Abū Muhammad al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī [al-'Askarī], for whom may there be peace. Among his books there was Invoking Aid.²⁴

Al-Thaqafī, Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Muhammad al-Iṣbahānī

He was one of those who were trustworthy, scholarly, and writers of books. Among his books there was Account of al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī, for Whom May There Be Peace.

²³ See the book Glad Tidings of the Believer by Ṣafwān ibn Yahyā, after n. 18.

²⁴ This title, Al-Istīnṣār, is only given in the Tonk MS.

Mūsā ibn Sa'dān

Among his books there was Sects (Parties).

Abū Ja'far Muhammad ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Sā'igh

He was one of the Imāmīyah [sect] of al-Shī'ah. Among his books there was Preachings.

Bundār ibn Muhammad ibn 'Abd Allāh, the Jurist

He was a leader of the Imāmīyah. Among his books there were:

Ritual Purification; Prayer; Fasts; The Pilgrimage; The Poor Tax. He also [composed] books based on the sequence of the sources [of the law], and in addition: The Imamate from the Point of View of the Free;²⁵ Temporary Marriage; The Minor Pilgrimage.

The Family of Yaqtīn, Appended, Its Proper Place Being at the Beginning²⁶

Yaqtīn was one of the leading propagandists [for the Shī'ī beliefs], so that [the Caliph] Marwān²⁷ sought [to arrest him] and he took to flight. His son, 'Alī ibn Yaqtīn, was born at al-Kūfah during the year one hundred and twenty-four [A.D. 741/42], but the mother fled with 'Alī and his brother, 'Ubayd, to al-Madīnah.

Then when the Hāshimīyah regime began,²⁸ Yaqtīn came out in the open, while the mother of 'Alī returned home with both 'Alī and 'Ubayd. Yaqtīn remained in the service of Abū al-'Abbās [al-Ṣaffāh] and Abū Ja'far [al-Manṣūr], although at the same time he upheld the cause of the members of the family of Abū Ṭālib, calling for their imamate. His son did likewise. He brought money and benevolences to Ja'far ibn Muhammad ibn 'Alī.²⁹ Although ²⁵ "The free" (al-hurr) is taken from MS 1934. Flügel has instead al-khubr ("news," "report"). The Tonk MS gives the title as simply The Imamate.

²⁶ As the members of this family lived earlier than the other scholars mentioned in this section, they should have been included nearer the beginning of the section.

²⁷ As Yaqtīn was plotting to establish a descendant of 'Alī as caliph, Marwān tried to arrest him, so that he hid.

²⁸ Although he was a Shī'ī, he served the early 'Abbāsid caliphs because they were related to the Prophet, even though they were not descendants of 'Alī.

²⁹ This was al-Ṣādiq, the 6th Shī'ī imam, who died A.D. 765. The caliphs feared that he might revolt and therefore mistrusted anyone who befriended him.

reports about him reached al-Manṣūr and al-Mahdī, Allāh saved him from their stratagems.³⁰

‘Alī ibn Yaqṭīn died at the City of Peace [Baghdād] during the year one hundred and eighty-two [A.D. 798/99] when he was fifty-seven years old. Muḥammad ibn al-Rashīd, the crown prince, prayed over [his body]. His father, Yaqṭīn, died after he did, during the year one hundred and eighty-five [A.D. 801]. [Among the books of] ‘Alī ibn Yaqṭīn there were:

What al-Ṣādiq asked him concerning the matter of conflicts; about his controversy with the doubter in the presence of Ja‘far [ibn Muḥammad al-Ṣādiq].³¹

³⁰ These were the second and third ‘Abbāsīd caliphs, who ruled A.D. 754–775 and 775–785.

³¹ The phrase “with the doubter” is unclear. These book titles should be compared with Ṭūsī, p. 234, sect. 506, ll. 17, 18.

Jurists among the Authorities on the Ḥadīth and Adherents of the Ḥadīth

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Sixth Section of the Sixth Chapter

*of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed, including accounts of the jurists who were adherents of the Ḥadīth.*¹

Account of Sufyān al-Thawrī

Sufyān ibn Sa‘īd ibn Masrūq al-Thawrī was from [the tribe of] Thawr ibn ‘Abd Manāh ibn Udd ibn Ṭābikhah ibn al-Yās ibn Muḍr ibn Nizār ibn Ma‘add ibn ‘Adnān.² It was said that among the descendants of Thawr there were thirty men, none of whom were less distinguished than al-Rabī‘ ibn Khuthaym.³ They were at al-Kūfah, not one of them at al-Baṣrah. Sufyān al-Thawrī, however, died at al-Baṣrah while fleeing from the Sultan, and was buried at night.⁴ This was during the year one hundred and sixty-one [A.D. 777/78] when he was sixty-four years old, for he was born during the year ninety-seven [A.D. 716/17]. He bequeathed his books to ‘Ammār ibn Sayf, who effaced them and burned them.

¹ In MS 1934, the phrase “Jurists among the Authorities on the Ḥadīth and Adherents of the Ḥadīth” is placed on a page by itself preceding the title of the section. “Authorities on the Ḥadīth” is al-muḥaddithūn. “Adherents of the Ḥadīth” (aṣḥāb al-Ḥadīth) refers to jurists who based their decisions on the Qur’ān and the Ḥadīth rather than on consensus of opinion, analogy, and personal opinion.

² See Qutaybah, Ma‘ārif, p. 36 l. 5.

³ He is probably mentioned because he was an ascetic like Sufyān and from the same ancestry.

⁴ When the caliph ordered him to serve as a judge, he refused and disobeyed, fleeing first to Arabia and then to al-Baṣrah where he died. Pious Muslims disliked serving as judges, as they feared that they might be obliged to settle cases according to some command from a ruling official, rather than according to the Qur’ān and the Sunnah.

Sufyān had no descendants, as his son died earlier than he did himself. So he assigned whatever he had to his sister and her children. He bequeathed nothing to al-Mubārak ibn Sa'īd [his brother]. Among his books there were:

The Large Compilation, which traced the course of the Ḥadīth and was quoted by a group [of scholars], among whom there were Yazīd ibn Abī Ḥakīm, 'Abd Allāh ibn al-Walīd al-'Adanī, Ibrāhīm ibn Khālīd al-Ṣan'ānī, 'Abd al-Malik [ibn Ibrāhīm] al-Juddī, and, from a place other than al-Yaman, al-Ḥusayn ibn Ḥafṣ al-Iṣbahānī.⁵

The Small Compilation, which was quoted by a group [of scholars], among whom there were al-Ashja'i, Ghassān ibn 'Ubayd, al-Ḥusayn ibn Ḥafṣ al-Iṣbahānī, al-Mu'āfā' ibn 'Imrān al-Mawṣilī, 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Abān, 'Abd al-Ṣamad ibn Ḥassān, Zayd ibn Abī al-Zarqā', and al-Qāsim ibn Yazīd al-Jarmī.

Shares of Inheritance; Epistle to 'Abbād ibn 'Abbād al-Arsūfī; Epistle.

Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Muḡhīrah ibn Abī Dhī'b

He was from the Banū 'Āmir ibn Lu'ay.⁶ He was a jurist and authority on the Ḥadīth, as well as a judge. He died during the year one hundred and fifty-nine [A.D. 775/76]. Among his books there was Ordinances, which included chapters on the law, [about subjects] such as prayer, ritual purification, fasts, the poor tax, rites of the pilgrimage, and other things.

'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Zayd ibn Aslan

He was [descended] from the protégés of 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb. He died at the beginning of the caliphate of Hārūn al-Rashīd. Among his books there were:

The Abrogating and the Abrogated; The Commentary.

'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Abī al-Zannād

The name of Abū al-Zannād was 'Abd Allāh ibn Dhakwān. He [Abd al-Raḥmān] was one of the jurists who were also authorities

⁵ Al-Ṣan'ānī was very likely the man listed in the Biog. Index as Abu Thaur Ibrāhīm ibn Khālīd ibn al-Yamān. The context makes it clear that 'Abd al-Malik al-Juddī also came from al-Yaman.

⁶ For this tribe, see Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 33.

on the Ḥadīth. He died at Baghdād during the year one hundred and seventy-four [A.D. 790/91]. Among his books there were: Shares of Inheritance; The Opinion of the Seven Jurists from among the People of al-Madinah, with the Ways in Which They Differed.⁷

'Abd al-Malik ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī Bakr ibn 'Amr ibn Ḥazm al-Anṣārī

He died during the year one hundred and seventy-six [A.D. 792/93] at Baghdād, where he was a judge under Hārūn [al-Rashīd]. Among his books there was The Raids.

'Abd al-Malik ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz ibn Jurayj

He was a protégé of the family of Usayd ibn Abī al-'Īs ibn Umayyah.⁸ He was surnamed Abū al-Walīd and died during the year one hundred and fifty [A.D. 767/68]. Among his books there was The Ordinances, which included what books about the ordinances ordinarily comprise, such as ritual purification, prayer, fasts, the poor tax, and other things.

Sufyān ibn 'Uyaynah al-Hilālī

He was a protégé ———. He died during the year one hundred and ninety-eight [A.D. 813/14]. He was a jurist and reciter of the Qur'ān. No book of his is known, but they used to hear him [lecture] and they do know of his commentary.⁹

Muḡhīrah ibn Miqṣam al-Dabbī

He was a protégé of theirs¹⁰ and was surnamed Abū Hishām. He died during the year one hundred and thirty-six [A.D. 752/53]. Among his books there was Shares of Inheritance.

⁷ For the seven judges of al-Madinah, see Schacht, Origins of Muhammadan Jurisprudence, p. 243. Cf. also Maḥmāsānī, Falsafat, pp. 24–26.

⁸ For this clan, see Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 35; Durayd, Geneal., p. 45.

⁹ A page in MS 1934 has been lost. It evidently began with the account of Sufyān ibn 'Uyaynah and ended just before the list of book titles in the account of Ismā'il ibn 'Ulayyah; see n. 20.

¹⁰ "Theirs" refers to the Dabbah Tribe; see "Dabba," Enc. Islam, I, 884; Durayd, Geneal., p. 117.

Zā'idah ibn Qudāmah al-Thaqafi

He was one of their number [one of the adherents of the Ḥadīth]. He was surnamed Abū al-Ṣalt. He died in the Byzantine Empire during the raid of al-Ḥasan ibn 'Aṭīyah, during the year sixty-one or sixty [A.D. 776/78].¹¹ Among his books there were:

The Ordinances, which included what has been mentioned as being contained by books about the ordinances; [Qur'ānic] Readings; The Commentary; Asceticism; Memorable Deeds.

Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān Muḥammad ibn Fuḍayl ibn Ghazwān al-Ḍabbī

He was a protégé of theirs [the Ḍabbah Tribe] and was surnamed Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān. He died during the year one hundred and ninety-five [A.D. 810/11].¹² Among his books there were:

Ritual Purification; Prayer; Rites of the Pilgrimage; The Poor Tax, arranged to the end like the books of the jurists and also known as the Book of Ordinances;¹³ The Commentary; Asceticism; Fasts; The Invocation.¹⁴

Ibn Abī Zā'idah

Yahyā ibn Zakariyā' ibn Abī Zā'idah, surnamed Abū Sa'īd, died at al-Madā'in, where he was a judge, during the year one hundred and eighty-three [A.D. 799/800]. Among his books there was The Ordinances, like the first [books on ordinances, already mentioned].

Wakī' ibn al-Jarrāḥ ibn Malīḥ al-Ru'āsī

He was from the Banū 'Āmir ibn Ṣa'sa'ah.¹⁵ He was surnamed Abū Sufyān. He died when leaving on the pilgrimage at Fayḍ, during the year one hundred and ninety-seven [A.D. 812/13], during al-Muḥarram [first Muslim month]. Among his books there was The Ordinances, like the first.

¹¹ The Tonk MS suggests a different date, but it seems to be due to careless copying.

¹² Here again the Tonk MS has a variation, giving the date as A.H. 175 (A.D. 791/92).

¹³ This was probably a compilation. For this type of book, see Chap. VI, sect. 3, n. 8, and the subjects dealt with in Kitāb al-Umm.

¹⁴ The Tonk MS omits the three last titles.

¹⁵ A name for certain tribes of the Hawāzin; see "Āmir," Enc. Islam, I, 329. For Fayḍ, in the sentence which follows, see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 927.

Abū Nu'aym al-Faḍl ibn Dukayn

He was a protégé by Ṭalḥah ibn 'Ubayd Allāh al-Taymī. He died during the year two hundred and nineteen [A.D. 834]. Among his books there were:

Rites of the Pilgrimage; Questions in the Law.

Yahyā ibn Ādam, surnamed Abū Zakariyā'

He was a protégé of the family of 'Uqbah ibn Abī Mu'ayt. He died at Fam al-Ṣillī¹⁶ during the year two hundred and three [A.D. 818/19]. Among his books there were:

The large book, Shares of Inheritance;¹⁷ The Land Tax; Gaining Possession.¹⁸

Ibn Abī 'Arūbah

His name was Sa'īd and the name of Abū 'Arūbah was Mihrān. He was surnamed Abū al-Naḍr, and he died during the year one hundred and fifty-seven [A.D. 773/74]. Among his books there was The Ordinances, like the first.

Ḥammād ibn Salamah

He was a protégé of the Banū Tamīm.¹⁹ He was surnamed Abū Salamah. He died during al-Muḥarram [first Muslim month] at al-Baṣrah, in the year one hundred and sixty-five [A.D. 781/82]. Among his books there was The Ordinances, like the first.

Ismā'il ibn 'Ulayyah

She ['Ulayyah] was his mother. He was the son of Ibrāhīm, a protégé of the Banū Asad, surnamed Abū Bishr. His birth was during the year one hundred and sixteen [A.D. 734/35] and he died at Baghdād during Dhū al-Qa'dah [eleventh Muslim month], in the ¹⁶ A river north of Wāsiṭ; see Yāqūt, Geog., III, 917.

¹⁷ The Tonk MS omits "large."

¹⁸ This is probably al-ziwāl ("gaining possession," "seizing"), but it may be al-zawāl ("future," "change").

¹⁹ See "Tamīm," Enc. Islam, IV, 643.

year one hundred and ninety-three [A.D. 808/809], when he was eighty-three years and a few months old. Among his books there were:²⁰

The Commentary; Ritual Purification; Prayer; Rites of the Pilgrimage; Hunting; Slaughter [of Sacrificial Victims].

Ibrāhīm ibn Ismā'īl, surnamed Abū Ishāq

He was born during the year one hundred and fifty-two [A.D. 769] and he died in the year two hundred and eighteen [A.D. 833]. Among his books there was Ordinances, like the first.²¹

Rawḥ ibn 'Ubādah al-Qaysī, surnamed Abū Muḥammad

He died after two hundred [A.D. 815/16]. Among his books there was Ordinances.

Makḥūl al-Shāmī

He was a protégé of a woman from the Hudhayl.²² He died during the year one hundred and sixteen [A.D. 734/35]. Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law;²³ Questions in the Law.

Al-Awzā'i

'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn 'Amr, Abū 'Umar from al-Awzā', a tribe.²⁴ He died during the year one hundred and fifty-nine [A.D. 775/76]. Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law; Questions in the Law.

²⁰ MS 1934 recommences at this point, after the loss of a page. This manuscript and Flügel do not include the two last titles, which are in the Tonk MS alone. For the Banū Asad, see "Asad," Enc. Islam, I, 474.

²¹ The Tonk MS alone includes this title.

²² For this tribe, see "Hudhail," Enc. Islam, II, 329.

²³ On this and following pages, this title, Al-Sunan fī al-Fiqh, is translated as Ordinances in the Law. It may be more correct to translate fī as "about" in this and other titles, making the translation "The Ordinances, about the law."

²⁴ See Qutaybah, Ma'ārif, p. 249.

Al-Walīd ibn Muslim, surnamed Abū al-'Abbās

He was a protégé of the Quraysh [the Prophet's tribe]. He died during the year one hundred and ninety-four [A.D. 809/10] while returning from the pilgrimage. Among his books there were: Ordinances in the Law; The Raids.

'Abd al-Razzāq ibn Hammām ibn Nāfi' al-Ṣan'ānī, surnamed Abū Bakr

He was a protégé of the Ḥimyar,²⁵ who died during the year two hundred and eleven [A.D. 826/27]. Among his books there were: Ordinances in the Law; The Raids.

Hushaym ibn Bashīr al-Sulamī, surnamed Abū Mu'āwiyah

He was a protégé of the Banū Sulaym.²⁶ He died at Baghdād during the year one hundred and eighty-three [A.D. 799/800]. Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law; The Commentary; [Qur'ānic] Readings.

Yazīd ibn Hārūn

He was a protégé of the Banū Sulaym, surnamed Abū Khālīd. He died at Wāsiṭ during the year two hundred and six [A.D. 821/22]. Among his books there was Shares of Inheritance.

Ishāq al-Azraq, surnamed Abū Muḥammad

He was the son of Yūsuf. He died at Wāsiṭ during the year one hundred and ninety-five [A.D. 810/11]. Among his books there were:

Rites of the Pilgrimage; Prayer; [Qur'ānic] Readings.

'Abd al-Wahhāb ibn 'Aṭā' al-'Ijlī al-Khaffāf

He was surnamed Abū Naṣr. He was one of the people of al-Baṣrah, but he died at Baghdād some time after two hundred [A.D. 815/16]. Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law; The Commentary; The Abrogating and the Abrogated.

²⁵ For this tribal group of al-Yaman, see "Ḥimyar," Enc. Islam, II, 310.

²⁶ "Sulaim," Enc. Islam, IV, 518.

Ibrāhīm ibn Ṭahmān al-Hirrāwī²⁷

Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law; Memorable Deeds; The Two Feasts [ʿId al-Aḍḥā and ʿId al-Fiṭr]; The Commentary.

Al-Ḥasan ibn Wāqid al-Marwazī

Among his books there were:

The Commentary; Aspects in the Qurʾān; Ordinances in the Law.²⁸

ʿAbd Allāh ibn al-Mubārak, surnamed Abū ʿAbd al-Rahmān

He died at Hīt²⁹ when returning from a raid, during the year one hundred and eighty-one [A.D. 797/98]. Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law; The Commentary; History; Asceticism; Piety and Charity.

Abū Dāʿūd al-Ṭayālīsī

His name was Hammām ibn ʿAbd al-Malik. He was one of the authorities for the Ḥadīth. He was surnamed Abū Yazīd and died during the year two hundred and twenty-seven [A.D. 841/42]. Among his books there was Ordinances in the Law, like the first.³⁰

Al-Firyābī al-Kabīr

He was an associate of Sufyān [ibn Saʿīd] and was one of the people of Caesarea.³¹ He was Abū ʿAbd Allāh Muhammad ibn Yūsuf ibn Wāqid al-Firyābī. He learned from the scholars of al-Kūfah, and died ———. Among his books there were:

The Commentary; Ritual Purification; Prayer; Fasts; The Poor Tax; Rites of the Pilgrimage, continuing until he included all of the chapters about the law.

²⁷ This refers to his origin at Harāt in Afghanistan. The spelling might be al-Harawī, but Ziriklī, Part 9, p. 74, gives al-Hirrāwī.

²⁸ This title is only in the Tonk MS.

²⁹ See "Hīt," Enc. Islam, II, 322.

³⁰ The Tonk MS alone has this title. On the margin of MS 1934 there is noted, "bi-Shām," probably indicating that he died at Damascus.

³¹ He was probably a pupil of Sufyān ibn Saʿīd al-Thawrī and was from Caesarea (Qaysariyah) in Palestine; see Yāqūt, Geog., IV, 214.

ʿAbd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī Shaybah

He was an authority for the Ḥadīth and a compiler. He died during the year two hundred and thirty-five [A.D. 849/50]. Among his books there were:³²

Ordinances in the Law; The Commentary; History; Seditions; [The Battle of] Ṣiffīn; [The Battle of] the Camel; The Invasions; Al-Musnad, about the Ḥadīth.³³

ʿUthmān ibn Abī Shaybah

He was an authority on the Ḥadīth and a compiler, who died during the year two hundred and thirty-seven [A.D. 851/52]. Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law; The Commentary; Seditions;³⁴ Al-Musnad.

Muḥammad ibn ʿUthmān ibn Abī Shaybah³⁵

He died during the year two hundred and ninety-seven [A.D. 909/10]. Among his books there was Ordinances in the Law.

Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal

He was Abū ʿAbd Allāh Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal.³⁶ Among his books there were:

Reasons; The Commentary; The Abrogating and Abrogated; Asceticism; Questions; Virtues; Shares of Inheritance; Rites of the Pilgrimage; Faith (Oath); Drinks;³⁷ Obedience of (for) the Prophet; Refutation of the Jahmiyah; Al-Musnad,³⁸ comprising more than forty thousand Ḥadīth.

³² The Tonk MS is unique in adding two titles: Booty and The Khawārij at Nahrawān.

³³ Al-musnad means "attributed to authority." The title was made famous by the great collection of the Ḥadīth compiled by Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal.

³⁴ Instead of "seditions" the Flügel edition has al-ʿayn, which might be "the eye," "the spring," or the letter ʿayn of the alphabet, but is probably a mistake.

³⁵ The Tonk MS inserts, before the name, Abū Jaʿfar ibn Ḥafiz.

³⁶ In MS 1934 there is a vacant space before the list of books is given, evidently with the hopes that biographical data could be filled in.

³⁷ In MS 1934 the four last titles have been inserted in a handwriting different from that of the other passages.

³⁸ For this famous book, see Bibliography under Ḥanbal. The title means "Attributed to Authority." This great compendium of the Ḥadīth contained a huge collection of traditions, with the authorities who were said to have originated them.

Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal had a son named 'Abd Allāh, who was a reliable man from whom they heard [lectures about] the Ḥadīth.

There were also Ṣāliḥ ibn Aḥmad and his son Zuhayr ibn Ṣāliḥ, who died during the year three hundred and three [A.D. 915/16].

Al-Athram

He was one of the adherents of Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal. His name was Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Hānī, surnamed Abū Bakr. He was one of the Iskāf Banū Junayd,³⁹ and he died ———. Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law, in accordance with the doctrines of Aḥmad and his evidences from the Ḥadīth; History; Reasons; The Abrogating and the Abrogated in the Ḥadīth.⁴⁰

Al-Marwazī, Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥajjāj

He adhered to the doctrines of Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal. He died ———. Among his books there was The Ordinances with Testimonies from the Ḥadīth.

Ishāq ibn Rāhwayh

The name of Rāhwayh was Ibrāhīm ibn ——— Marwazī. He was one of the most distinguished of the pupils of Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law; Al-Musnad; The Commentary.

Abū Khaythamah and His Sons

Abū Khaythamah Zuhayr ibn Ḥarb died during the year two hundred and thirty-four [A.D. 848/49]. Among his books there were:

Al-Musnad; Science.⁴¹

³⁹ These were the chiefs of the district of al-Nahrawān between Baghdād and Wāsiṭ; see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 252.

⁴⁰ A good example of abrogating in al-Ḥadīth is in connection with the direction for prayer, which was first to Jerusalem, then to Makkah, and finally to "whichever way you turn you face Allāh." See quotation from al-Ṭabarī translated in Dodge, Muslim Education, p. 45.

⁴¹ The Tonk MS adds the title Reasons (Al-'Ilal).

Ibn Abī Khaythamah, Abū Bakr Aḥmad ibn Zuhayr ibn Ḥarb

He was one of the historical traditionalists and a jurist. He died during the year two hundred and seventy-nine [A.D. 892/93]. Among his books there were:

History; Ancestors (Kinsmen); Arab Nomads (Al-A'rāb) (or Inflection [Al-I'rāb]); Traditions of the Poets.

His Son, Abū 'Abd Allāh, Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Zuhayr ibn Ḥarb

He was of the same stock as his father. He died ———. Among his books there were:

The Poor Tax and the Categories of Property, with Their Proofs from the Ḥadīth; History, which did not appear in its entire form—perhaps he never finished it.

Al-Bukhārī

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Ismā'īl ibn al-Mughīrah al-Bukhārī was one of the reliable authorities for the Ḥadīth.⁴² Among his books there were:

The Large History; The Small History; Names and Surnames; The Feeble [referring to Ḥadīth quoted from doubtful sources]; Al-Ṣaḥīḥ (The Sound);⁴³ Ordinances in the Law; Training; The Medium-Size History; Creation of the Actions of Worshippers (Khalq Af'āl al-'Ibād); Reading behind the Imam.⁴⁴

Al-Ma'marī

His name was al-Ḥasan ibn 'Alī ibn Shabīb. He was one of the authorities on the Ḥadīth and also one of the jurists. He died ———. Among his books there was Ordinances in the Law.

⁴² The Tonk MS adds "virtuous and ascetic."

⁴³ This was perhaps the most important Muslim book after the Qur'ān. For the French translation, see Bibliography, Bukhārī, and for the table of contents in Arabic, see Wensinck, A Handbook of Early Muhammadan Tradition, p. xi; for the contents in English, see Dodge, Muslim Education, p. 92.

⁴⁴ The last three titles are omitted by the Tonk MS and added to MS 1934 with a strange handwriting. For the last two titles, see Brockelmann, Geschichte, Supplement, I, 265 top, which gives the last title as Khayr al-Kalām fī al-Qirā' Khalf al-Imām.

Abū 'Arūbah

His name was al-Husayn [ibn Muḥammad] ibn Mawdūd al-Ḥarrānī and he compiled the Ḥadīth of the shaykhs. Except for this he did not write any book.

Muslim ibn al-Ḥajjāj, Abū al-Husayn al-Qushayrī al-Naysābūrī

He was one of the authorities on the Ḥadīth learned both in the Ḥadīth and the law.⁴⁵ Among his books there were:

Al-Ṣaḥīḥ (The Sound); Names and Surnames.

The Unique Things (Al-Wahād); The Single; History; Generations (Categories).

'Alī ibn al-Madīnī

He should have been mentioned before this place. He was Ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Ja'far al-Madīnī. He was one of the authorities for the Ḥadīth, learned in the Ḥadīth. He died at Sāmarrā on Monday, three days before the end of Dhū al-Qa'dah [eleventh Muslim month], during the year two hundred and fifty-eight [A.D. 871/72], when he was seventy-two years old. Among his books there were: Al-Musnad with its reasons; Those Who Tell Half Truths; The Feeble [referring to Ḥadīth quoted from doubtful sources]; Reasons; Names and Surnames; Drinks; The Gracious Revelation.⁴⁶

Yahyā ibn Ma'īn

He died during the year two hundred and thirty-three [A.D. 847/48]. Among his books there was History, his pupils composed it from his [dictation], for he himself did not write it.

Surayj ibn Yūnus Abū al-Ḥārith al-Marwazī

He was one of the illustrious authorities on the Ḥadīth, being among their reliable members, and he was also one of the jurists and [Qur'anic] readers. He died ———. Among his books there were:

The Commentary; The Abrogating and the Abrogated; [Qur'anic] Readings; Ordinances in the Law.

⁴⁵ The Tonk MS omits "al-Qushayrī" but adds "ascetic, pious, reliable." The collection Al-Ṣaḥīḥ was almost as important as that of al-Bukhārī; see Bibliography.

⁴⁶ Flügel omits the word translated as "gracious" (al-lafīf).

Ḥafṣ al-Darīr

He was Abū 'Umar Ḥafṣ ibn 'Umar, from among the people of al-Baṣrah. He was one of the illustrious authorities on the Ḥadīth. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Judicial Decisions of the Qur'an; Ordinances in the Law.

Al-Faḍl ibn Shādhān al-Rāzī and His Son al-'Abbās ibn al-Faḍl

He [al-Faḍl] mingled both with the elite and the ignorant. The Shī'ah claim him, so that a brief account about him is given in connection with them. The Ḥashwīyah also claim him, and his books pertaining to the Ḥashwīyah are:⁴⁷

The Commentary; [Qur'anic] Readings; Ordinances in the Law.

Among the books of his son al-'Abbās ibn al-Faḍl there are:

Ordinances in the Law; [Qur'anic] Readings.⁴⁸

Ibrāhīm al-Harbī

Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Ishāq ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Bashīr ibn 'Abd Allāh was one of the illustrious authorities on the Ḥadīth. He was learned in the Ḥadīth, scholarly, ascetic and acquainted with language [study]. He was also one of those who held [the Ḥadīth] in their memories. 'Abd Allāh was the son of Daysam al-Marwazī.⁴⁹ Ibrāhīm died during the year two hundred and eighty-five [A.D. 898]. Among his books there were:

Rare Forms in the Ḥadīth, which included "Al-Musnad"⁵⁰ of Abū Bakr, of 'Umar, of 'Uthmān, of 'Alī, of al-Zubayr [ibn al-'Awwām], of Ṭalḥah

⁴⁷ Hajar, Lisān al-Mizān, Part V, p. 72, says that al-Nadīm called all who were not Shī'ī "ignorant" (al-'āmmah) and referred to the Sunnites as "the Ḥashwīyah," a term as a rule applied to persons holding anthropomorphic ideas; see "Ḥashwīyah," Enc. Islam, II, 287.

⁴⁸ These titles are in the Tonk MS alone; MS 1934 leaves a half page empty, meant to be filled in with titles.

⁴⁹ Baghdādī, Ta'rikh, Part VI, sect. 3059, p. 27, makes it clear that this relationship between 'Abd Allāh, the ancestor of Ibrāhīm, and Daysam al-Marwazī is correct. As these ancestors were not important persons, their names are not in the Biog. Index. The Tonk MS has al-Jawharī instead of al-Marwazī.

⁵⁰ This was evidently a compilation which quoted the Ḥadīth of the Prophet, based upon the original recollections of the important persons listed.

[ibn 'Ubayd Allāh], of Sa'd ibn Abī Waqqāṣ, of 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn 'Awf, of al-'Abbās [ibn 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib], of Shaybah ibn 'Uthmān, of 'Abd Allāh ibn Ja'far, of al-Miswar ibn Makhramah al-Zuhri, of 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib ibn Rabī'ah,⁵¹ of al-Sā'ib al-Makhzūmī, of Khālīd ibn al-Walīd, of Abū 'Ubaydah ibn al-Jarrāh, of Mu'āwiyah and others in addition to him, of 'Amr ibn al-'Āṣ, of 'Abd Allāh ibn al-'Abbās,⁵² of 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, and of the mawālī,⁵³ which was the last that he included.

There were also other books:

Training; The Raids; Al-Tayammum [ritualistic ablution with sand instead of water].

Muṭayyin ibn Ayyūb

He was Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Sulaymān al-Ḥaḍramī, one of the reliable authorities for the Ḥadīth. His birth was ———. He died during the year two hundred and ninety-eight [A.D. 910/11]. Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law; The Commentary; Al-Musnad; Commentary on "Al-Musnad";⁵⁴ Training.

Al-Firyābī al-Saghīr⁵⁵

Abū Bakr Ja'far ibn Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan al-Firyābī obtained his learning from shaykhs throughout the world, traveling over the earth. He died during the year three hundred [A.D. 913], the last day of the year. Among his books there was The Ordinances, which included many chapters, nearly fifty of them.

⁵¹ This name and the one which follows are not clearly written in the manuscripts, but they must be correct.

⁵² The Tonk MS adds a pious epithet.

⁵³ This probably means "lords," although it might mean "protégés."

⁵⁴ This may have been an explanation of his own book, or of the great collection of Ahmad ibn Ḥanbal.

⁵⁵ He is called al-Saghīr and al-Aṣghar ("the Younger"), to distinguish him from the elder Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf al-Firyābī. In this and the following accounts there are variations in the Tonk MS, but they are not important enough to mention them in detail.

Shabīb al-'Uṣfurī

His name was Khalīfah ibn Khayyāt and he was one of the people of al-Baṣrah. Among his books there were:

The Generations (Categories); History; Generations (Categories) of [Qur'ānic] Readers; History of the Infirm in Old Age, the Lame, the Sick, and the Blind; Divisions of the Qur'ān—Its Tenths, Sevenths, and Verses.

Al-Kajjī

He was Abū Muslim ———. His father moved from ——— to al-Baṣrah, where he [al-Kajjī] built a house with mortar and baked bricks. He used to say to his workmen "Kajj, kajj," or "Use the mortar." Thus the name was connected with him and he was called al-Kajjī.⁵⁶

Abū Muslim was one of the most illustrious authorities on the Ḥadīth, as well as one of the most exalted authorities for the isnād.⁵⁷ His birth was ——— and he died during the year ———. Among his books there were:

The Ordinances; Al-Musnad.

['Abd Allāh] Ibn Abī Dā'ūd al-Sijistānī

The name [of Abū Dā'ūd] was Sulaymān ibn al-Ash'ath ibn Ishāq ibn Bashīr ibn Shaddād al-Ṭabarī. He ['Abd Allāh] was Abū Bakr ——— ibn Sulaymān Abū Dā'ūd. He was one of the most illustrious authorities on the Ḥadīth and the law, a man worthy of confidence. His birth was ———. He died during the year three hundred and sixteen [A.D. 928/29]. Among his books there were:

The Commentary, which he composed at the same time that Abū Ja'far [Muḥammad ibn Jarīr] al-Ṭabarī wrote his book⁵⁸—most of the book of Ibn Abī Dā'ūd was composed about the Ḥadīth; Lamps, about the Ḥadīth;

⁵⁶ For other versions of the origin of this name, see references in the Biog. Index.

⁵⁷ Al-isnād is the infinitive of al-sanad (pl., al-asānīd), which is the ascription of a tradition of the Prophet to its original source, as well as to the chain of authorities who passed on the Ḥadīth to later generations.

⁵⁸ This is the great Tafsīr of al-Ṭabarī, listed in the Bibliography.

Manuscripts of the Qur'an; Arrangement of the Qur'an; Excellencies of the Qur'an; The Sharī'ah in "The Commentary";⁵⁹ The Sharī'ah in al-Maḳārī;⁶⁰ The Abrogating and the Abrogated; Rising from the Dead and the Resurrection.

Abū 'Abd Allāh Muḥammad ibn Makhliḍ ibn Ḥaḥṣ al-'Aṭṭār

He was a reliable authority on the Ḥadīth. His birth was during the year two hundred and thirty-three [A.D. 847/48] and he died in the year three hundred and thirty-one [A.D. 942/43]. Among his books there were:

Ordinances in the Law; Morals; the large Musnad.

Al-Maḥāmālī al-Qāḍī

He was Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥusayn ibn Ismā'īl ibn Muḥammad al-Ḍabbī. He was a trustworthy scholar whose birth was during the year two hundred and thirty-five [A.D. 849/50]. He died during the year three hundred and thirty [A.D. 941/42], on Thursday, eight nights before the end of the month of Rabī' al-Ākhir [fourth Muslim month]. News about him was proclaimed in the streets of Baghdād. No one else in the world was such an authority on the Ḥadīth and so capable in determining the Ḥadīth with accuracy, reliability, and intelligence.⁶¹ Among his books there was Ordinances in the Law.⁶²

Ja'far al-Daqqāq

He was a man who held the Ḥadīth in his memory and was reckoned second to al-Maḥāmālī in trustworthiness, reliability, and intelligence. He died during the year three hundred and thirty [A.D. 941/42]. Among his books there was Ordinances in the Law.⁶²

⁵⁹ This probably refers to the elements of the Sharī'ah law contained in the book The Commentary.

⁶⁰ This probably deals with the elements of the Sharī'ah law contained in a book perhaps entitled Al-Maḳārī, but as the usual meanings of this word do not seem to fit the context, it is possible that it is meant for the common title Al-Maghāzī ("Raids").

⁶¹ The Tonk MS adds several words which are not clearly written.

⁶² This title occurs only in the Tonk MS.

Ibn Ṣā'id, Abū Muḥammad Yahyā ibn Muḥammad ibn Ṣā'id

He was a protégé of al-Manṣūr.⁶³ His birth was ———, and he died during the year three hundred and eighteen [A.D. 930/31]. Among his books there were:

The Ordinances; Al-Musnad; [Qur'ānic] Readings.

Al-Baghawī

He was Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd Allāh ibn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Baghawī, also known as Ibn bint Mūnī'. His birth was during the year two hundred and fourteen [A.D. 829/30] and he died in the year three hundred and seventeen [A.D. 929/30]. Among his books there were:

The Large Alphabetical Book; The Small Alphabetical Book;⁶⁴ Al-Musnad; The Ordinances According to the Legal Systems of the Jurists.

Al-Tirmidhī

His name was Muḥammad ibn 'Isā ibn Sawrah. Among his books there were:

History; Al-Ṣaḥīḥ (The Sound);⁶⁵ The Reasons.

Ibn Abī al-Thalj

He was Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī al-Thalj al-Kātib. He had contacts with both the elite and the ignorant.⁶⁶ The Shī'ī doctrine won him over and he was also ⁶³ Taghrī-Birdī, Part III, p. 228, says that this was Abū Ja'far al-Manṣūr, who was the caliph A.D. 754-75. If that is true, the account must mean that an ancestor of Ibn Ṣā'id, rather than he himself, was accepted as a Muslim protégé at the time of the second 'Abbāsid caliph.

⁶⁴ Mu'jam ("alphabetical") may indicate either that the material was arranged alphabetically, or else marked with diacritical points to indicate the consonants. These two books were probably legal compilations.

⁶⁵ This was one of the six authoritative collections of the Ḥadīth; see Bibliography.

⁶⁶ See n. 47.

responsible for many quotations from among the things quoted by the ignorant, with compilations according to their interpretation. He was religious, virtuous, and ascetic. We have already mentioned him before this. He died ———. Among his books there were:

Ordinances and Morals according to the Doctrines of the Ignorant; Virtues, virtues of the Companions of the Prophet;⁶⁷ Selections from the Asānīd.

⁶⁷ This title is taken from MS 1934. Flügel gives simply Virtues of the Companions. For the following title, see n. 57.

Al-Ṭabarī and His Associates; the Shurāt and Their Jurists

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Seventh Section of the Sixth Chapter

of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed.¹

Al-Ṭabarī and His Associates

Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq al-Nadīm: Abū al-Faraj al-Muʿāfā ibn Zakariyāʾ al-Nahrawānī stated, "He was Abū Jaʿfar Muḥammad ibn Jarīr ibn Yazīd ibn Khālīd al-Ṭabarī al-Āmulī, the sage of his time, the leader of his period, and the jurist of his age."²

He was born at Āmul³ during the year two hundred and twenty-four [A.D. 838/39] and died during Shawwāl [tenth Muslim month] in the year three hundred and ten [A.D. 922/23] at the age of eighty-seven. He acquired knowledge of the Ḥadīth from eminent shaykhs like Muḥammad ibn Ḥumayd al-Rāzī; Ibn Jurayj;⁴ Abū Kurayb; Ḥammād ibn Sarī; ʿAbbād ibn Yaʿqūb; ʿUbayd Allāh ibn Ismāʿīl al-Habbārī; Ismāʿīl ibn Mūsā; ʿImrān ibn Mūsā al-Qazzāz; and Bishr ibn Muʿadh al-ʿUqdī. He studied the law under Dāʾūd⁵ and

² The Flügel edition adds an extra word in this sentence, but it seems to be an error.

³ For Āmul (or A'amul) and Ṭabaristān, from which two of his names are taken, see Yāqūt, Geog., I, 68; III, 501.

⁴ In the Arabic texts the name is given as Abū Jurayj, but perhaps it should be Ibn Jurayj, who was a better-known scholar.

⁵ The Tonk MS adds al-Zāhirī; see Biog. Index, Dāʾūd ibn ʿAlī.

learned the legal system of al-Shāfi'ī from al-Rabī' ibn Sulaymān in Egypt, and also from al-Ḥasan ibn Muḥammad al-Za'farānī at Baghdād. He learned the legal system of Mālik [ibn Anas] from Yūnus ibn 'Abd al-A'lā and the descendants of 'Abd al-Ḥakam, who were Muḥammad, 'Abd al-Raḥmān and Sa'd;⁶ also from the sons of the brother of Wahb. He learned the legal system of the people of al-'Irāq from Abū Muqātil at al-Rayy and mastered the *asānid*⁷ in Egypt, Syria, al-'Irāq, and at al-Kūfah, al-Baṣrah, and al-Rayy.

He was skilled in all of the sciences, having knowledge of the Qur'ān, grammar, poetry, language, and the law, and also having a good memory.⁸ Abū Ishāq ibn Muḥammad ibn Ishāq told me, "A trustworthy person related to me that he saw Abū Ja'far al-Ṭabarī in Egypt and studied with him a poem by either al-Ṭirimmaḥ or al-Ḥuṭay'ah. It is I who am uncertain which one it was."

I myself have seen many selections written in his handwriting [and copied] from books on language, grammar, poetry, and the tribes. He had a legal system which he selected for himself and about which he wrote a number of books, among which there are:⁹

Al-Laṭīf, about the law, which included a number of chapters like the chapters of the jurists in "Al-Mabsūṭ." The number of chapters in "Al-Laṭīf" was ———.

Al-Basīṭ, about the law, which he did not complete, but what it did include was:¹⁰ the large chapter, Conditions; Documents and Judicial Records; Wills; Training of the Judge; Ritual Purification; Prayer; The Poor Tax.

Al-Laṭīf, about the law, which includes ———.¹¹

⁶ These were grandsons, their father being 'Abd Allāh ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam.

⁷ See Chap. VI, sect. 6, n. 57.

⁸ At this point the Tonk MS inserts "Thus saith Muḥammad ibn Ishāq, [al-Nadīm]." The word "sciences" refers to the Muslim sciences based upon the Qur'ān.

⁹ For the books of al-Ṭabarī, see Yāqūt, Irshād, VI (6), 423 ff. It is almost impossible to give the exact meaning of some of these book titles. Al-laṭīf means "gracious" or "delightful," but perhaps has the significance of "interesting." Al-mabsūṭ means "stretched out," with the significance of making clear. Al-basīṭ means "simple," but here probably should be translated as "extended," with the idea of "inclusive." For some modern editions of these books, see the Bibliography. See Brockelmann, Geschichte, Supplement, I, 218, which helps to explain the meaning of the titles.

¹⁰ The titles which follow in this paragraph are chapters in the book Al-Basīṭ.

¹¹ In MS 1934 a half page is left vacant, showing that the author of Al-Fihrist hoped to fill in subtitles.

The History (Al-Ta'rikh),¹² to which certain sections were added. The last event included in it was during the year three hundred and two [A.D. 914/15], at which point he stopped. A group of persons abridged this book, eliminating the mention of the authorities [on the Ḥadīth]. One of them was a man known as Muḥammad ibn Sulaymān al-Hāshimī and there was also another writer known as ———, as well as, from among the people of al-Mawṣil, Abū al-Ḥasan al-Shimshārī, the teacher, and a man known as al-Salīl ibn Aḥmad. Then [another] group appended to it [The History], continuing from where it ended to our own time. This appendix, however, cannot be relied upon, for [the men who compiled it] were not occupied either with the government or with scholarship.

The Commentary (Al-Tafsīr), better than which has never been composed. A group abridged it. Among them there were Abū Bakr ibn al-Ikshīd and others in addition to him.

[Qur'ānic] Readings; Al-Khafīf (The Easy), about the law, delightful; Seeking Guidance; Correction of Traces (al-Āthār), which he did not complete, but the part included is what I mention: ———; Disagreements of the Jurists—what it included: ———.

Among His Adherents Who Were Jurists Following His Legal System¹³

Alī ibn 'Abd Al-'Azīz ibn Muḥammad al-Dawlābī

Among his books there were:

Refutation of Ibn al-Mughallas ['Abd Allāh ibn Aḥmad]; about "In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate"; [Qur'ānic] Readings; The Sources of Theology; Actions of the Prophet, May Allāh Bless Him and Give Him Peace; Second Sight; his epistle to Naṣr [al-Ḥājib] al-Qushūrī; his epistle to 'Alī ibn 'Isā; his epistle to Barbar al-Jarmī.

Book, The Problem of Loaning Female Slaves;¹⁴ the large book, Sources, which is not extant; the small book, Sources; the medium-size book, Sources; Interpretation of a Dream; Confirmation of the Apostleship; the epistle, You Both Have Lied—this refers to the report which he quoted in (from) "Self-Discipline" (Adab al-Nufūs), about Fāṭimah and 'Alī, for both of whom may there be peace, for when they complained ¹² This is the great history referred to in the footnotes as Annales, printed in Arabic and edited in Latin by M. J. de Goeje; see Bibliography.

¹³ Most were either pupils or associates.

¹⁴ The Tonk MS gives "diseases" instead of "loaning," evidently an error.

to the Prophet, for whom be peace, about rendering service, he said "You both have lied."

Among His Pupils Who Were Jurists Following His Legal System There Was Also Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Abī al-Thalj al-Kātib

Among his books there were:

The Oath; The Vow.¹⁵

Among His Pupils: Abū al-Qāsim ——— ibn al-ʿArād

Among his books there was Research in the Law. He also wrote a few epistles, among which there were: ———.

Among His Pupils: Abū al-Ḥasan Aḥmad ibn Yaḥyā ibn ʿAlī ibn Yaḥyā ibn Abī Maṣṣūr al-Munajjim

He was a theologian, mention of whom has already been made.

Among his books there were:

Introduction to the Legal System of al-Ṭabarī and the Triumph of His Legal System; Consensus of Opinion in the Law, according to the legal system of Abū Jaʿfar [al-Ṭabarī].

Among the Jurists Following His Code There Was Also Abū al-Ḥasan al-Daḡiqī al-Ḥalwānī al-Ṭabarī

Among his books there were:

Conditions; Refutation of the Antagonists.

Among Them: Abū al-Ḥusayn ibn Yūnus

His name was ———. He was a student of theology, about which he wrote books. His [book] about the law was Consensus of Opinion in the Law, which included a number of chapters.¹⁶

Among Them: Abū Bakr ibn Kāmil

He has been mentioned in the First Chapter. Among his books about the legal system of al-Ṭabarī there were:

Compilation of the Law; Menstruation; Conditions; Founders of Pious Endowments.

¹⁵ These book titles are only in the Tonk MS.

¹⁶ The last phrase is added by the Tonk MS.

Among Them: Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm ibn Ḥabīb al-Saqṭī al-Ṭabarī

He was one of the people of al-Baṣrah and he wrote a history connected with the book of Abū Jaʿfar [al-Ṭabarī]. It contained a great deal from the accounts of Abū Jaʿfar and his adherents. Among his books there were [also]:

Apostleship; Compilation of the Law.

Among Them There Was a Man Known as Ibn Idhnūbī¹⁷

His name was ———. Among his books there was The Comprehensive (Al-Ḥāwī), about the law.

Among Them There Was a Man Known as Ibn al-Ḥaddād

His name was ———. Among his books there were: ———.

Abū al-Faraj al-Muʿāfā said, "Abū Muslim al-Kajjī agreed with the ideas of Abū Jaʿfar al-Ṭabarī about the law and was of the age of Abū Jaʿfar."

Al-Muʿāfā al-Nahrawānī al-Qāḍī

He belongs to our own period. His name is Abū al-Faraj al-Muʿāfā ibn Zakarīyā. He is one of the people of Nahrawān and during his time is the leading adherent of the legal system of Abū Jaʿfar [al-Ṭabarī],¹⁸ whose books he has memorized. He is so skilled in many sciences in which he is knowledgeable that he is often consulted about these. He is extremely intelligent, with a good memory and ability for rapid repartee. He was born during the year ———. His books about the law and other subjects up to the present time are those which I record as follows:¹⁹

The Preservation and Settlement, about the sources of the law;²⁰ Definitions and Conditions, about the sources of the law; Guidance, about the ¹⁷ Flügel suggests this form of the name, but it is uncertain, so that it is not included in the Biog. Index. The book title is only in the Tonk MS.

¹⁸ The Tonk MS has "He is the chief of his time and the unique person of his period for learning, the law, language, culture, and piety, following the legal system of Abū Jaʿfar, whose books he has memorized." A few other variations follow, but they do not change the meaning.

¹⁹ As al-Muʿāfā died A.D. 1000, the sixth chapter of Al-Fihrist was evidently written before that date.

²⁰ As the words in the manuscripts seem to differ from those in the Flügel version, but are not clearly given, the exact form of this title is not certain.

law; Explanation of the Book, "Guidance" [about the law]; Documents and Judicial Records; Explanation of the Book "Al-Khafif" (The Easy) by al-Ṭabarī; Healing, by Wiping the Feet; Answering the "Large Compilation" of Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan;²¹ Answering al-Muzanī about the Legal System of al-Ṭabarī; Conditions; Refutation of al-Karkhī, about questions; Refutation of Abū Yahyā al-Balkhī, about the loaning of female slaves; Refutation of Dā'ūd ibn 'Alī; his epistle to al-Anbārī²² the judge about the question of wills; his book about the interpretation of the Qur'ān; [Qur'ānic] Readings; Discussion, about Arabic; epistle about the wāw (u) of 'Amr;²³ Explanation of the Book of al-Ḥarmī; epistle, 'Umar.

It has been told me that he has written more than fifty epistles about the law, theology, grammar,²⁴ and other things. Among the best of his books, other than those already mentioned, is the book The Sitting Companion and the Pleasure Giver. In it he mentions many virtues, amusing anecdotes, and other agreeable things.²⁵

²¹ This was evidently al-Shaybānī. The Tonk MS adds, "the associate of Abū Ḥanīfah." Flügel omits the next title and has a sequence different from that of the manuscripts.

²² This may be al-Qāsim Abū Muḥammad ibn Muḥammad al-Anbārī or his son, Ibn al-Anbārī Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn al-Qāsim, or someone else called al-Anbārī.

²³ At the end of the name 'Amr there is a silent u. In the next title, the name is uncertain. Al-Ḥarmī is taken from MS 1934. Flügel has al-Ḥazmī and the Tonk MS has al-Jarmī.

²⁴ The Tonk MS adds "disputation."

²⁵ Flügel includes the last two sentences with the text, the Tonk MS omits them, and they are added on the margin of MS 1934, very likely by some scribe. "Sitting companion" must mean one with whom a person sits and converses.

With Allāh alone there is satisfaction

In the name of Allāh, the Merciful, the Compassionate

The Eighth Section of the Sixth Chapter

*of the book Al-Fihrist, with accounts of the scholars and the names of the books which they composed.*¹

Jurists of the Shurāt

The books of these people are hidden, few and rarely happened upon, for the world detests them, pursuing them with hatred. They do, however, have compilations and compositions about the law and theology.

This sect is known in many localities,² among which there are 'Umān, Sijistān, the regions of Ādharbayjān, the districts of al-Sinn and al-Bawāzīj, Karkh Juddān, Tall 'Ukbarā, Ḥazzah and Shahrazūr. Among their leading jurists³ there were:

Jubayr ibn Ghālib, nicknamed Abū Firās

He was a jurist, a poet, and an eloquent speaker. Among his books there were:

Ordinances and Judicial Decisions; Judicial Decisions of the Qur'ān; Abridgment of the Law; The Large Collection of the Law; epistle to Malik ibn Anas.

¹ In MS 1934 the words, "With Allāh alone there is satisfaction (prosperity)" are written on a separate page preceding the title.

² For the place names see Yāqūt, Geog., as follows—'Umān in Arabia: III, 717; Sijistān: III, 41; Ādharbayjān: I, 171; al-Sinn: III, 169; al-Bawāzīj: I, 750; Karkh Juddān in northern 'Irāq: IV, 255; Tall 'Ukbarā near Baghdād: I, 868; Ḥazzah, one of the two towns with that name in northern 'Irāq: II, 263; Shahrazūr in western Persia: III, 340.

³ The Tonk MS adds, "who were theologians."

Al-Qaṭalūsī

He was Abū al-Faḍl and he came from the region of Tall 'Ukbarā. He wrote many books, among which there were:

Large Compilation of the Law, which included numerous chapters like those in the books of the jurists; Small Compilation, on which his disciples rely; Shares of Inheritance; Refutation of Abū Ḥanīfah, about personal opinion; Refutation of al-Shāfi'ī, about analogy.

Among Them: Abū Bakr al-Bardha'ī

His name was Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allāh. When I saw him in the year three hundred and forty [A.D. 951/52] he was courteous to me, explaining the doctrine of the i'tizāl.⁴ He was a Khārijī, being one of their jurists. He told me that he had [written] a number of books about the law, mentioning some of them as follows:

Guidance in the Law; Refutation of Those Who Disagree about the Law; Mention of What Is Strange in the Law; Reflection for the Educated; Argument against Those Who Disagree; Compilation of the Sources of the Law; The Petition (Prayer, Al-Du'ā); The Abrogating and the Abrogated, in the Qur'ān; Al-Adhkār wa-al-Taḥkīm;⁵ The Ordinances and the Assembly; The Imamate; Refutation of the Book of Ibn al-Rāwandī about the Imamate; Prohibition of Intoxicating Liquor; Refutation of Whoever Upholds Temporary Marriage; Those Who Break Their Word; Oaths and Vows.

Abū al-Qāsim al-Ḥadithī

When I saw him he was ascetic, outwardly humble, not appearing to be a member of his sect. He was, however, one of the important men among the Shurāt, as well as among their jurists. From his books there were:

Compilation of the Law; The Judgments of Allāh, Exalted and Magnified; The Imamate; The Promise and the Threat; Prohibition and Making Lawful; Leaving Judgment to Allāh, Magnified Be His Name.

⁴ This was the doctrine of the Mu'tazilī theologians. See Chap. V of Al-Fihrist.

⁵ Al-adhkār means mentioning the name of God. It might be instead al-idhkār ("remembering"). Al-taḥkīm means restraining from wrongdoing, and also assigning judgment to Allāh.
